The same respect and protection shall be accorded to the historic monuments, museums, scientific, artistic, educational and cultural institutions in time of peace as well as in war.

ARTICLE II

The neutrality of, and protection and respect due to, the monuments and institutions mentioned in the preceding article, shall be recognized in the entire expanse of territories subject to the sovereignty of each of the signatory and acceding States, without any discrimination as to the State allegiance of said monuments and institutions. The respective Governments agree to adopt the measures of internal legislation necessary to insure said protection and respect.

ARTICLE III

In order to identify the monuments and institutions mentioned in article I, use may be made of a distinctive flag (red circle with a triple red sphere in the circle on a white background) in accordance with the model attached to this treaty.

ARTICLE IV

The signatory Governments and those which accede to this treaty shall send to the Pan American Union, at the time of signature or accession, or at any time thereafter, a list of the monuments and institutions for which they desire the protection agreed to in this treaty.

The Pan American Union, when notifying the Governments of signatures or accessions, shall also send the list of monuments and institutions mentioned in this article, and shall inform the other Governments of any changes in said list.

ARTICLE V

The monuments and institutions mentioned in article I shall cease to enjoy the privileges recognized in the present treaty in case they are made use of for military purposes.

ARTICLE VI

The states which do not sign the present treaty on the date it is opened for signature, may sign or adhere to it at any time.

ARTICLE VII

The instruments of accession, as well as those of ratification and denunciation of the present treaty, shall be deposited with the Pan American Union, which shall communicate notice of the act of deposit to the other signatory or acceding states.

ARTICLE VIII

The present treaty may be denounced at any time by any of the signatory or acceding states, and the denunciation shall go into effect 3 months after notice of it has been given to the other signatory or acceding states.

In witness whereof, the undersigned plenipotentiaries, after having deposited their full powers found to be in due and proper form, sign this treaty on behalf of their respective governments, and affix thereto their seals, on the dates appearing opposite their signatures.

For the Argentine Republic, April 15, 1935:
FELIPE A. ESPIL. [SEAL]
For Bolivia, April 15, 1935:
ENRIQUE FINOT. [SEAL]
For Brazil, April 15, 1935:
OSWALDO ARANHA. [SEAL]
For Chile, April 15, 1935:
M. TRUCCO. [SEAL]
For Colombia, April 15, 1935:
M. LOPEZ PUMAREJO. [SEAL]
For Costa Rica, April 15, 1935:
MAN. GONZALEZ Z. [SEAL]
For Cuba, April 15, 1935:
GUILLERMO PATTERSON. [SEAL]
For the Dominican Republic, April 15, 1935:
RAF. BRACHE. [SEAL]
For Ecuador, April 15, 1935:
C. E. ALFARO. [SEAL]
For El Salvador, April 15, 1935:
HECTOR DAVID CASTRO. [SEAL]
For Guatemala, April 15, 1935:
ADRIAN RECINOS. [SEAL]
For Haiti, April 15, 1935:
A. BLANCHET. [SEAL]
For Honduras, April 15, 1935:
M. PAZ BARAONA. [SEAL]
For Mexico, April 15, 1935:
F. CASTILLO NAJERA. [SEAL]
For Nicaragua, April 15, 1935:
HENRI DE BAYLE. [SEAL]
For Panama, April 15, 1935:
R. J. ALFARO. [SEAL]
For Paraguay, April 15, 1935:
ENRIQUE BORDENAVE. [SEAL]
For Peru, April 15, 1935:
M. DE FREYRE Y S. [SEAL]
For United States of America, April 15, 1935:
HENRY A. WALLACE. [SEAL]
For Uruguay, April 15, 1935:
J. RICHLING. [SEAL]
For Venezuela, April 15, 1935:
PEDRO M. ARCAYA. [SEAL]

I hereby certify that the foregoing document is a true and faithful copy of the original, with the signatures affixed thereto up to the present date, of the Treaty on the Protection of Artistic and Scientific Institutions and Historic Monuments (Roerich Pact) which is deposited in the Pan American Union and open to the signature or adherence of all States.

Washington, the 16th day of April 1935.

[SEAL] E. GIL-BORGES,
Secretary of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendments, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive N, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, a treaty on the protection of artistic and scientific institutions and historic monuments, which was signed at the White House in Washington on April 15, 1935.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, July 3, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 2 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

PROMOTIONS IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The following-named officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Department of Commerce to be—

Hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant in the Navy) by promotion from junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy)—

Carl Ingman Aslakson, of Minnesota, vice Carl A. Egner, promoted.

Junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy) by promotion from aide (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy)—

John Crawford Ellerbe, Jr., of South Carolina, vice Carl Ingman Aslakson, promoted.

Aide (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy) by promotion from deck officer—

Harold John Seaborg, of Indiana, vice John C. Ellerbe, Jr., promoted.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

MARINE CORPS

The following-named lieutenant colonels to be colonels in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1935:

Paul A. Capron	Edward A. Ostermann
John Potts	John Marston

Maj. David L. S. Brewster to be a lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of June 1935.

The following-named majors to be lieutenant colonels in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1935:

Harold S. Fassett	Thomas E. Bourke
James T. Moore	LeRoy P. Hunt

Capt. David R. Nimmer to be a major in the Marine Corps from the 29th day of May 1934.

The following-named captains to be majors in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1935:

Gus L. Gloeckner
Harold D. Shannon
Prentice S. Geer

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps from the 30th day of June 1935:

Reginald H. Ridgely, Jr.
Caleb T. Bailey.
John D. Muncie

First Lt. William E. Burke to be a captain in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of July 1935.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 1st day of July 1935:

Wilmer E. Barnes, a citizen of North Carolina.
George H. Brockway, a citizen of Wyoming.
Custis Burton, Jr., a citizen of Virginia.
Kenyth A. Damke, a citizen of Colorado.
Willard C. Fiske, a citizen of Arizona.
Dixon Goen, a citizen of California.
Frank P. Hager, Jr., a citizen of South Carolina.
Bruno A. Hochmuth, a citizen of Texas.
Joe C. McHaney, a citizen of Texas.
Hoyt McMillan, a citizen of South Carolina.
Albert F. Metze, a citizen of California.
Raymond L. Murray, a citizen of Texas.
Herman Nickerson, Jr., a citizen of Massachusetts.
John S. Oldfield, a citizen of Oklahoma.
Wesley M. Platt, a citizen of South Carolina.
William E. Profitt, Jr., a citizen of Minnesota.
Thomas F. Riley, a citizen of Virginia.
George A. Roll, a citizen of Pennsylvania.
Robert E. Stannah, a citizen of Pennsylvania.
Leo F. Sulkosky, a citizen of Washington.
Harold G. Walker, a citizen of West Virginia.
Julian F. Walters, a citizen of Maryland.
Chevey S. White, a citizen of Kansas.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 2 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

John J. Morris, Jr., to be United States attorney, district of Delaware.

APPOINTMENT BY TRANSFER IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Second Lt. Ralph Hemmings Davey, Jr., to Quartermaster Corps.

Second Lt. Avery John Cooper, Jr., to Coast Artillery Corps.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Arthur Eugene White to be captain, Medical Corps.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

AIR CORPS

To be second lieutenants

Ray Willard Clifton	Lester Stanford Harris
Randolph Lowry Wood	Eyvind Holtermann
Arnold Theodore Johnson	Donald Newman Wackwitz
John David Pitman	James Hume Crain Houston
Marvin Frederick Stalder	Charles Henry Leitner, Jr.
Noel Francis Parrish	Clair Lawrence Wood
Dolf Edward Muehleisen	Charles Bennett Harvin
Carl Swyter	George Henry Macintyre
Richard Cole Weller	Bob Arnold
Edward Morris Gavin	Burton Wilmot Armstrong, Jr.
Robert Edward Jarmon	Mell Manley Stephenson, Jr.
Harry Crutcher, Jr.	Harold Lee Neely
Jack Mason Malone	Erickson Snowden Nichols
Frank Neff Moyers	Jasper Newton Bell
Edward Schwartz Allee	Russell Lee Waldron
Harry Noon Renshaw	William Foster Day, Jr.
Joseph Bynum Stanley	Robert Strachan Fisher
Thomas Frederick Langben	Harry Coursey
Clarence Morice Sartain	Daniel Edwin Hooks
James Hughes Price	Raymond Patten Todd
Joseph Caruthers Moore
Lawrence Scott Fulwider

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

To be captains

William F. Amsden	Jonas H. Ingram
Harry A. McClure	Schuyler F. Heim
Cortlandt C. Baughman	Patrick N. L. Bellinger
Newton H. White, Jr.

To be commanders

William A. Teasley	Thomas C. Latimore
John B. W. Waller	Lloyd J. Wiltse
Charles F. Martin	Leon O. Alford
Benjamin S. Killmaster	William H. Porter, Jr.
Wilder DuP. Baker	Walter A. Hicks
Harold J. Nelson	Warner P. Portz
Ralph O. Davis	Benjamin F. Perry

To be lieutenant commanders

Augustus J. Wellings	John W. Higley
John P. Vetter	John F. Crowe, Jr.
John F. Gillon	Francis P. Old
Royal W. Abbott	William H. Wallace
Richard R. Hartung	Joseph U. Lademan, Jr.
Carleton C. Champion, Jr.	Hugh W. Turney
William H. Buracker

To be lieutenants

Cameron Briggs	John H. Griffin
William L. Messmer	Russell S. Smith
Frederick N. Kivette	Thomas H. Tonseth
Ira E. Hobbs	Joseph H. Wellings
Monroe Y. McGown, Jr.	Clyde F. Malone
Harold O. Larson	Adolph Hede
John O. Lambrecht

To be lieutenants (junior grade)

Samuel H. Porter	Charles F. Brindupke
Albert A. Wellings	John P. Roach
Thomas G. Warfield	William H. Raymond, Jr.

To be medical inspectors

Lyle J. Roberts	Bertram Groesbeck, Jr.
Morton D. Willcutts	Louis E. Mueller
John W. Vann	Carl A. Broaddus
Sterling S. Cook

To be pay inspectors

William V. Fox	Charles L. Austin

To be paymaster

Julius J. Miffitt

To be naval constructors

Armand M. Morgan	Edward V. Dockweiler
Robert S. Hatcher	Wendell E. Kraft
John J. Herlihy	John J. Scheibeler
Edward W. Clexton

THE MARINE CORPS

To be major general

Charles H. Lyman

To be captain

Arthur T. Mason

To be first lieutenants

Roger W. Beadle	James C. Bigler
Howard J. Turton	Hector de Zayas
Walter Asmuth, Jr.	Samuel D. Puller
George N. Carroll	Robert L. Denig, Jr.

To be second lieutenants

Earl A. Sneeringer	Dwight M. Cheever
Peter J. Negri	Richard H. Crockett
Alexander B. Swenceski	Marvin H. Floom
Leonard F. Chapman, Jr.	James G. Frazer
William T. Fairbourn	Gould P. Groves
Carey A. Randall	Donn C. Hart
Elmer C. Rowley	Ralph L. Houser
Harry A. Schmitz	Kenneth A. Jorgensen
John W. Stage	Mortimer A. Marks
Eugene F. Syms	William S. McCormick
Clayton O. Totman	Kenneth F. McLeod
Ronald B. Wilde	Floyd R. Moore
Herbert R. Amey, Jr.	Richard E. Thompson
Kenneth D. Bailey	Stanley W. Trachta
Elmer E. Brackett, Jr.	William J. Van Ryzin

POSTMASTERS

CALIFORNIA

Nolan W. Smith, Alturas.
Neil A. MacMillan, Eureka.

COLORADO

N. George Parsons, Central City.
Frank P. January, Cheyenne Wells.
Robert R. Lawson, Grover.
Derrett C. Smith, Kim.
Mary E. Dermody, Strasburg.
Leona E. Backus, Two Buttes.

ILLINOIS

Francis X. Hodapp, Bradley.
Singleton W. Ash, Canton.
Richard A. McAllister, Fairbury.
Wayne D. Herrick, Farmer City.
Thomas B. Raycraft, Normal.
John L. Anheuser, O'Fallon.
Charles F. Schmoeger, Peru.
James Shoaff, Shelbyville.

IOWA

John C. Wardlow, Montrose.
Walter W. White, Spirit Lake.

KANSAS

Louie Haller, Alma.
Archie D. Spillman, Buffalo.
Max Dolan, Clifton.
James Oscar Warren, Eskridge.
Clayton J. Connell, Fall River.
Henry W. Behrens, Lyndon.
Joseph S. Dooty, Melvern.
John L. Rogers, Quenemo.
Charles P. Gates, Wakefield.
Minnie J. Meidinger, Wathena.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Michael J. Carroll, Laconia.
Julia L. Mayo, Lyme.

NEW YORK

Joseph J. Wienand, Alden.
Guy C. Hazelton, Coeymans.
Arthur I. Ryan, Delmar.
James E. Robinson, Hermon.
Elwyn S. Sloughter, Ithaca.
Frank J. Ball, Lancaster.
Edgar Griffin, Palenville.
Clifford J. Fleckenstein, West Valley.

OHIO

Florence M. DeChant, Avon Lake.
John R. Gunning, Chillicothe.
Frank E. Noland, London.
William Alexander, Miamisburg.
Louis J. Eberle, Nelsonville.

OREGON

Isaac R. Howard, Junction City.
Maud W. Thomas, Malin.
Sidney B. Powers, Molalla.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bessie T. Cooper, Mayesville.
George H. Fogle, Ridgeville.
Olin J. Salley, Salley.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Warren S. Leeper, Blunt.
Amelia L. Rositch, Bowdle.
John H. Francis, Dupree.

VIRGINIA

Pitt M. Watts, Orange.
J. Frank Harper, Waynesboro.

WEST VIRGINIA

Samuel A. Cockayne, Glen Dale.
J. Bright Hern, Lewisburg.
Lewellen A. Douglas, Spencer.

WISCONSIN

Alfred J. Zorn, Elkhart Lake.
Raymond B. Hartzheim, Juneau.
Harry P. Bowen, Watertown.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JULY 2, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us; that Thy way may be known upon earth; Thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for Thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us and all the ends of the earth shall fear him. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 113]

Bankhead	Dempsey	Higgins, Conn.	Ryan
Brown, Mich.	DeRouen	Kenney	Shannon
Bulwinkle	Dies	Lesinski	Sumners, Tex.
Cannon, Wis.	Dirksen	McLeod	Taylor, S. C.
Carter	Gasque	Oliver	Underwood
Cochran	Haines	Owen
Cooley	Healey	Peyser

The SPEAKER. Four hundred and three Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 27. Concurrent resolution to print and bind the proceedings in Congress and in Statuary Hall upon the acceptance in the Capitol of the statue of Hannibal Hamlin, presented by the State of Maine.

HENRY GEORGE—SOUND ECONOMICS AND THE NEW DEAL

Mr. ECKERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ECKERT. Mr. Speaker, during the weeks and months that Congress has been in session much has been said on the floor of this House what was intended as a contribution to the cause of better government and greater economic security. The vexing problems now confronting the country have been ably and eloquently discussed from many angles. In the light of what has been said on these disturbing problems there comes a feeling of confusion and bewilderment.

Is the American Republic a failure?

Is our adventure in democracy doomed to defeat?

Have all the labors of the founders of this Nation been in vain?

Is the prophecy of Macaulay to be fulfilled? *

* In 1857 Lord Macaulay wrote a letter to H. S. Randall, biographer of Jefferson—a letter which President Garfield said startled him "like an alarm bell at night"—which reads in part as follows:

I have long been convinced that institutions purely democratic must sooner or later destroy liberty or civilization, or both. You may think that your country enjoys an exemption from these evils. I will frankly own to you that I am of a very different opinion. Your fate I believe to be settled, though it is deferred by a physical cause. As long as you have a boundless extent of fertile and unoccupied land your laboring population will be far more at ease than the laboring population of the Old World, and while that is the case the Jefferson politics may continue to exist without any fatal calamity. But the time will come * * * when wages will be as low and will fluctuate as much with you as with us. You will have your Manchesters and Birminghams, and in these Manchesters and Birminghams hundreds of thousands of artisans will assuredly sometime be out of work. Then your institutions will be brought to the test. * * *

I have seen England pass three or four times through such critical seasons as I have described; through such seasons the United States will have to pass in the course of the next century, if not of this. How will you pass through them? I heartily wish you a good deliverance. But my reason and my wishes are at war, and I cannot help foreboding the worst. * * *

I seriously apprehend that you will, in some such season of adversity as I have described, do things that will prevent prosperity from returning. There will be, I fear, spoliation. The spoliation will increase the distress. The distress will produce fresh spoliation. There is nothing to stop you. Your constitution is all sail and no anchor.

As I said before, when a society has entered on this downward progress, either civilization or liberty must perish. Either some Caesar or Napoleon will seize the reins of government with a strong hand, or your Republic will be as fearfully plundered and laid waste by the barbarians in the twentieth century as the Roman Empire was in the fifth, with the difference that the Huns and Vandals who ravaged the Roman Empire came from without, and that your Huns and Vandals will have been engendered within your own country by your own institutions.

These are some of the reactions that come to one as the result of some of the discussions that have engaged the attention of this House since January 3. And naturally the question mounts, "Is there no way out?"

Is there no guiding principle in the social theories of our time to point the way? We boast of ours as a scientific age. Of mathematics, chemistry, biology, and many other sciences we speak in terms of certainty and assurance. There our calculations and deductions are true and certain. Not so with the social sciences. To them in these moments of uncertainty and bewilderment we turn for light and guidance in vain. The science whose voice is the most important to civilized man in these moments of darkness and despair speaks in terms of doubt and confusion. She offers no guiding principle, no fixed standard of social behavior by which our policies and legislation can be checked and guaged. From the science that holds in its keeping the solution of the problems that in all civilized countries are crowding the horizon there comes no certain answer.

This House sometime ago had the privilege of listening to a very able, learned, and illuminating address directed to the historical development and the evolution of the social and economic progress of the new deal by the distinguished gentleman from New York, Dr. SIROVICH. We were reminded by our distinguished colleague that from the very dawn of civilization to the present day the many have always been exploited by the few; that methods have changed but that throughout the long, weary trek of man from ancient barbarism to modern civilization it is the same sad story of the few despoiling the many.

Our distinguished colleague called the roll of some of the pioneers in the great struggle of social justice. All honor to the brave souls who gave of heart and mind and body that others might live fuller, better, and nobler lives. It is to be noted, however, that among the honor roll of those who made contributions to the social thought of their time there does not appear the name of a single American. This roll is confined to Europe alone; and much credit is due the social thinkers of Europe for their contribution to the cause of social justice—especially the Manchester School of England and the physiocrats of France—whose work was largely responsible for the agitation both in America and in Europe that resulted in the independence of America and the abolition of royalty in France. From the teachings of Smith and the physiocrats the American revolutionists drew their strength and inspiration. Upon the principles underlying their philosophy the American Republic was founded; and, if she is to endure, our economic system must be developed in harmony with these two schools of thought.

There are those who say our modern economic system is so complex and so involved that the teachings of Smith and the physiocrats are outmoded; that the doctrine of laissez faire is obsolete; that the law of competition must not be allowed to function; that the natural laws of economics cannot be trusted. Happily there came upon the scene of economic discussion in 1879 a man who recast the scholastic political economy of his time and developed scientifically the teachings of Smith and the physiocrats. Some day this man will be accorded his rightful place in the niche of fame.

This man was born in 1839 within the shadow of Independence Hall in Philadelphia, and by the sheer force of his intellectual genius and love of truth, gave to the world in 1879 a treatise inquiring into the cause of industrial de-pressions and increase of want with increase of plenty that is recognized by thinkers and scholars the world over as one of the greatest achieved by the genius of man. It has been described by an eminent American as a book—

That rests upon a granite pedestal of truth, face up, open for the thinking world to scan—a book matchless in logic, beautiful in diction, perfect in illustration, unchallenged and unchallengeable, unanswered and unanswerable; an everlasting monument to the intellectual and moral integrity of the man who wrote it.

Upon the occasion of the author's funeral in New York in 1897, eulogies were delivered by distinguished representatives of various creeds and nationalities. A contemporary, witnessing the last rites, wrote:

Voices from Plymouth's Congregation Choir sang the solemn hymns; Dr. Heber Newton read from the beautiful ritual that as boys he and the dead man had listened to each Sunday in old St. Paul's in Philadelphia; Dr. Lyman Abbott recounted the peerless courage; Rabbi Gottheil the ancient wisdom, John S. Crosby the civic virtue, and Dr. McGlynn feelingly and impressively said:

"The chair of the President of the United States were all too small for such a man! He was not merely a philosopher and a sage; he was a seer, a forerunner, a prophet, a teacher sent from God. And we can say of him as the Scriptures say: 'There was a man sent of God whose name was John.' And I believe that I mock not those sacred Scriptures when I say: 'There was a man sent of God whose name was Henry George.'"

The thinking world is beginning to bear witness of Henry George's greatness and genius. Let me call a few present-day witnesses. Dr. John Dewey, one of the world's greatest educators and philosophers, in speaking of this man, said:

It would require less than the fingers of the two hands to enumerate those who, from Plato down, rank with Henry George among the world's social philosophers.

Tolstoi affirmed:

People do not argue with the teachings of Henry George; they simply do not know it. And it is impossible to do otherwise with his teaching, for he who becomes acquainted with it cannot but agree.

Louis D. Brandeis said:

I find it very difficult to disagree with the principles of Henry George.

William Lloyd Garrison, 2d:

Henry George was one of the great reformers of the world. His conscience was active, his sympathies broad, his purpose indomitable, his courage unfailing, his devotion to principle absolute.

Woodrow Wilson:

All the country needs is a new and sincere thought in politics, distinctly, coherently, and boldly uttered by men who are sure of their ground. The power of men like Henry George seems to me to mean that.

Dr. John Haynes Holmes:

My reading of Henry George's immortal masterpiece marked an epoch in my life. All my thought upon the social question and all my work for social reform began with the reading of this book.

George Bernard Shaw:

I went one night, quite casually, into a hall in London, and I heard a man deliver a speech which changed the whole current of my life. That man was an American, Henry George.

Oswald Garrison Villard:

Few men made more stirring and valuable contributions to the economic life of modern America than did Henry George.

John Erskine:

I would say that the tax theories of Henry George have always seemed to me unanswerable, and I believe that when we have tried other forms of taxation long enough to be convinced of their injustice we shall be ready for his simple and convincing ideas.

Kathleen Norris:

Anyone who really fears a revolution in America ought to reread Henry George's Progress and Poverty, one of the great social documents of all time.

Helen Keller:

I know I shall find in Henry George's philosophy a rare beauty and power of inspiration, and a splendid faith in the essential nobility of human nature.

Newton D. Baker:

I am inclined to believe that no writer of our times has had a more profound influence upon the thinking of the world than Henry George.

Albert Einstein:

Men like Henry George are rare, unfortunately. One cannot imagine a more beautiful combination of intellectual keenness, artistic form, and fervent love of justice. Every line is written as if for our generation.

This is an indication of the estimate of the thinking world as to Henry George's place among social philosophers. As the years roll by this appraisement will grow firmer and deeper, for Henry George, unlike many other social reformers and would-be statesmen, tested his proposals by the hard rules of logic and, like a true scientist, followed truth wherever it might lead. In his economic explorations he was like a man who built a house and digged deep and laid the foundation upon a rock.

Henry George recognized, as everyone does, that with steam and electricity and modern labor-saving machinery the effectiveness of labor has been increased enormously, and he thought, as everybody did, that with the modern methods of production the condition of the laborer would be lightened; that the enormous increase in the power of production would make real poverty a thing of the past. But the facts about him disproved the expectations. And so he set himself heroically to the task of discovering the reason why the laborer, who is the creator of all wealth, should, with the increase of his power to produce wealth, find it more difficult to make a living. This fact has puzzled and baffled the thinkers of the modern world. At the time Henry George investigated the problem Thomas H. Huxley, contemplating this fact, exclaimed in despair:

I do not hesitate to express the opinion that if there is no hope of a large improvement of the condition of the greater part of the human family with the advance of progress, I should hail the advent of some kindly comet which would sweep the whole affair away as a desirable consummation.

Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, in a recent commencement address, expressed his astonishment in these words:

Why is it that with all the progress which the world is making in so many directions—science, letters, fine arts, every form of industry, commerce, transportation—why is it that there still exists so much want, so much of all that, which for lack of a better name, may be summed up under the word "poverty."

Huxley, Butler, and others stand amazed and nonplussed in the face of this perplexing fact, while George, unperturbed and undismayed and with a faith beautiful and sublime in the rightness of things, makes a searching examination and, as a result, produces the one outstanding classic that has been written upon the subject of political economy. He did for social science what Copernicus did for astronomy, what Darwin did for biology.

The question, Why does the laborer not receive the full share of the wealth his labor produces? engaged Henry George in the preparation of his great book, Progress and Poverty. He recognized that a correct answer required correct and clear thinking and, as a true scientist, he proceeded first to define the elemental terms used in his reasoning. As the problem centered around wealth, he began by defining wealth as "natural products so secured, moved, combined, or altered by human labor as to fit them for human satisfaction", and discovered that in the production of wealth there are three factors, namely, land, labor, capital.

"Land" he defined as Mother Earth, the raw materials from which and out of which wealth is created by labor with the aid of capital, such as tools and machinery. The term "land" includes all natural opportunities or forces. It is the source of all wealth.

"Labor" he defined as human energy, exerted to satisfy human want, all human activity exerted in the production of wealth.

"Capital" he defined as wealth used for the production of more wealth, or wealth in course of exchange.

He made the observation that man comes into the world beset with physical needs; that he finds himself upon the surface of the earth on which and in which are found the elemental ingredients that sustain life; that man's primary need is food, clothing and shelter; that the earth is the storehouse from which his primary needs are obtained; that they must be extracted from the earth and that this requires human exertion or labor. So, in the examination of the problem of the production and distribution of wealth, George discovered the simple fact that all wealth is produced by labor and that all wealth is produced from the earth—the natural resources—and that natural justice decrees that labor should be the recipient of the wealth which it produces. Abraham Lincoln, in his day, recognized this elemental fact and elucidated the principle in this fashion:

> Inasmuch as most good things are produced by labor, it follows that all such things ought to belong to those whose labor has produced them. But it has happened in all ages of the world that some have labored, and others, without labor, have enjoyed a large proportion of the fruits. This is wrong and should not continue.

Dr. SIROVICH, in his address already referred to, historically portrayed the story of the battle between those who labor and those, who without labor, enjoy a large proportion of the fruits—between the exploited and the exploiter. Through the mutations of time methods have changed, but the end has always been the same. The few get a large proportion of the fruits of the labor of the many. In the early history of the race, brute force was the means employed. This method, by gradual changes, gave way to the more subtle and furtive plan of legislative exploitation.

Albert Jay Nock, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly of July 1934, speaking of the principle that man attempts always to satisfy his needs and desires with the least possible exertion, comments as follows:

> A candid examination will show, I think, that this law is also fundamental to any serious study of politics. So long as the state stands as an impersonal mechanism which can confer an economic advantage at the mere touch of a button, men will seek by all sorts of ways to get at the button, because law-made property is acquired with less exertion than labor-made property. It is easier to push the button and get some form of state-created monopoly like a land title, a tariff, concession, or franchise, and pocket the proceeds, than it is to accumulate the same amount by work.

Nock here calls our attention to the discovery of Henry George that there are two kinds of property, and that these two kinds of property are wholly different in nature and origin. One is the product of industry, the other is the product of law. The product of industry is private property. The product of law is public property. Private property must be held inviolate, while public property must be treated and administered as public property. Grants of power or privileges are held by the few in derogation of common right and hence the first duty of government is to control and administer those grants or privileges in such fashion that the interest of the people will be safeguarded and protected. In this the Government in the past has been guilty of indifference, neglect, and incompetence. The beneficiaries of privilege were not slow in availing themselves of this remissness on the part of the Government and appropriated the social values of privilege or law-created property to their own private use. It is this fact that has enabled them to build private fortunes and financial empires that have been the astonishment and amazement of the modern world. To this fact many of our social ills may be traced. The public-utility companies, such as control transportation, communication, electric power, gas, water, and so forth, issued billions of dollars worth of securities that represent nothing save the capitalized value of their franchises or rights-of-way. In the franchises or rights-of-way the public-utility companies have no proprietary rights. Franchises are delegations of sovereign power and in no sense are private property. And now, when the people are beginning to assert their rights attaching to these privileges or law-made property, the public-utility companies are facing serious trouble and are accusing the Government of undue and unjustified interference with their business. The slave master made the same complaint during the agitation of the slavery question. But obviously, if the slave master had never transgressed the natural rights of the slave, there would have been no slavery question.

Likewise, if the public-utility companies had observed the rights of the people in the grants and privileges which they received at the hands of the Government, instead of using them for private gain, there would be no trouble ahead for the utility companies now. But, being guilty of conversion of the people's property by appropriating it to their own use, the penalty must be paid. The wrong must be righted.

The public-utility field is a shining example of a sector of the present economic order that is reeking with special privilege—with law-made property. Every public-utility company—whether in the field of transportation, electrical power, communication, gas, water, or any other utility engaged in a public service enjoys a privilege that automatically absorbs social benefits. The social benefits that attach to franchises or rights-of-way are socially created and ought to accrue to all the people. Under our present benighted dispensation of public housekeeping we graciously permit the few to appropriate for private use practically all the benefits. It is estimated by trustworthy authority that these benefits amount to billions of dollars annually. These billions are a direct exaction from legitimate capital and labor, and in the every nature of things must unbalance the economic order.

President Roosevelt, in his annual message to Congress, recognized the inequalities existing in our economic order when he said:

> We find our population suffering from old inequalities, little changed by past sporadic remedies. In spite of our efforts and in spite of our talk, we have not weeded out the overprivileged and we have not effectively lifted up the underprivileged.

This is a Presidential challenge of the association of poverty with progress. It is the same challenge that confronted social thinkers and statesmen for the past hundred years. Henry George stated the challenge in these words:

> This association of poverty with progress is the great enigma of our times. It is the central fact from which springs industrial, social, and political difficulties that perplex the world and with which statesmen and philanthropists and educators grapple in vain. From it come the clouds that overhang the future of the most progressive and self-reliant nations. It is the riddle which the sphinx of fate puts to our civilization and which not to answer is to be destroyed.

For an answer to the riddle of the sphinx of fate, we must look to the natural laws of the distribution of wealth. George discovered the natural laws of distribution to be the law of rent, the law of wages, and the law of interest.

"Rent" he defined as meaning "the net profit of the use of land; that is, that portion of the products of labor and capital that must be yielded to the landowner for the permission to use his land."

"Wages" he defined as meaning "that part that is paid to the worker and constitutes the reward of human exertion."

"Interest" he defined as meaning "the part that is paid to the owner of capital and constitutes return for the use of capital."

In the operation of these laws he saw clearly what others are beginning to see dimly now. He saw that the values attaching to franchises are simply a manifestation of the law of rent and that wherever this law expresses itself there are to be found social benefits—benefits that rightfully belong to the people. He saw clearly what is beginning to dawn dimly upon the minds of many people now, that values attaching to land anywhere are social benefits that rightfully belong to the people.

To illustrate the operation of the laws of distribution, let us suppose a worker applies his labor to free land by gathering nuts or berries. The nuts or berries gathered would constitute his wages, and the economic equation would be: Wages equal wealth.

In time he used containers in which to put the nuts or berries. Then capital appeared and the equation became: Wages plus interest equal wealth.

Finally, as the community increased, the value of land became private property and immediately tribute was levied on the worker for the privilege of gathering nuts or berries. Then the equation became: Rent plus wages plus interest equal wealth.

And thus it stands today. All products of labor and capital are divided among the landowner as rent, the laborer as wages, and the capitalist as interest. Since all wealth is distributed as rent, wages, and interest, it is clear that whatever is meted out to any one factor leaves that much less to be divided between the other two, and the proportion on which the allocation is made affects the prosperity, progress, and stability of society. Furthermore, whether rent is paid to the privileged few who own the earth inside and out, or paid in whole or in part for the support of government, would make a vast difference to capital and labor, which in the latter case would receive easement from extortionate prices and relief from multitudinous taxes. But if rent is paid exclusively to privilege, it will tend to absorb the earnings of capital and labor, bringing about depressions, and economic disasters, followed by the decline of civilization, as proved by ruins on the highway of history.

In a speech delivered on the floor of this House on the 9th day of January 1935, Mr. EATON, our distinguished colleague from New Jersey, made the striking observation:

> The President of the United States says we have not "weeded out the overprivileged." This is a fateful statement for the Chief Executive of this Nation to make. Whom does he mean by the "overprivileged" and how does he propose to weed them out? Is he going to weed them out by confiscation of their property? Is he going to weed them out by taxing them on a different basis than other citizens?
>
> How is he going to weed them out, and who are the overprivileged? Let us ask a question or two. Supposing a gentleman is fortunate enough to have had intelligent ancestors who invested in real estate, we will say, for example, on Manhattan Island, and now, without having lifted a finger in productive toil or produced a dollar, he is able to enjoy the privilege of a million-dollar yacht, a city mansion, and a country estate. Does the President hold this gentleman to be overprivileged? I think, myself, he is. But how, by fair and constitutional methods, are you going to get rid of him?

I agree with our distinguished colleague from New Jersey. I think he is entirely correct. The gentleman in this case, who happened to select intelligent ancestors is one of the overprivileged. The privilege he enjoys enables him to ride the seven seas in a million-dollar yacht, live in a city mansion, enjoy a country estate, and all this without lifting a finger in productive toil. A million-dollar yacht, a city mansion, a country estate represent the fruits of thousands of toilers. The gentleman who selected intelligent parents is enjoying the fruits of other men's toil as surely and effectively as the slave owner enjoyed the fruits of the labor of his slaves. Yea, even more so, for the slave master was bound to maintain his slaves, while the gentleman who selected intelligent parents is free from that burden and trouble. Lincoln said:

> To enjoy the fruits of other's toil without labor is wrong.

We all know it is wrong. The institution of slavery became offensive to a large portion of the people of America, and, after a long, bitter, and devastating struggle, it was abolished. Today the method of getting the fruits of other's toil is subtle and furtive. Yet the results are the same. The producer is robbed of the products of his toil. There are indications that the modern method of the exploitation of the producer is becoming offensive to the people of America, the same as slavery. The fact that a person by the mere ownership of a privilege, such as a franchise, a title to a valuable land site, or other governmental concession, can, without lifting a finger in productive toil or adding a dollar to the national income, sport a million-dollar yacht, live in a city mansion, and enjoy a country estate is beginning to put the country on inquiry as to its ethical and economic soundness.

Our worthy colleague from New Jersey asks:

> Is he going to weed them out by the confiscation of their property? Is he going to weed them out on a different basis of taxation than other citizens?

I yield to no one in my respect for a genuine capitalistic system of production and for the institution of private property. I hold that they are sound and the institution of private property inviolate. I stand with Henry George in the statement—

> This and this alone I contend for—that he who makes should have; that he who saves should enjoy. I ask in behalf of the poor nothing whatever that rightfully belongs to the rich.

But, like George, I recognize that there are two kinds of property—private property and public property. Private property, let me repeat, is the product of industry. Public property is the product of law. The product of industry is the result of the application of labor and capital applied to the natural resources and is rightfully private property, for the natural basis of private property is production; while the products of law are legal privileges, such as rights-of-way, an estate in land, or other grant or power from the State. Such grants constitute public property.

It is the duty of government to protect the citizen in the full enjoyment of his rightful private property. It is the function of government to administer public property in the interest of all the people. In the execution and administration of these functions the Government has lamentably failed in the past. It has neither protected the citizen in the full enjoyment of his private property nor administered the public property in the interest of all the people. On the contrary, it has invaded the rights of the citizen in the use of private property by collecting for public revenue a large percentage of the products of his toil and permitted the profits of public property from which public revenue ought to be derived, to be appropriated by certain groups of citizens for their private use. For example, a franchise for the use of the streets of a city granted to a public-utility company has a great value—a value that inherently belongs to the people. Yet, under the custom that prevails, the social values attaching to public-utility franchises are capitalized and appropriated for private use. This is a wrong that cries to high Heaven and must be reformed. This iniquitous practice enables the possessors of public-utility franchises to acquire gigantic fortunes without lifting a finger or adding a penny to the national income. It is a gross and palpable remission on the part of the Government in the performance of its rightful and proper functions, and is one of the primary causes of the unjust distribution of wealth and the resultant unemployment and social unrest.

The American Republic was founded on the principles of freedom and equality. Thomas Jefferson set forth as a cardinal tenet of genuine democracy that "equal and exact justice must be done to all men." Abraham Lincoln envisioned the Republic as having been "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal"; and Woodrow Wilson declared that "America stands for a free field and no favors."

In order to meet the standards set up by these eminent Americans, as well as the founding fathers, involving as they do the problem of establishing justice, preserving the blessings of liberty, maintaining economic freedom for all, our social system must be developed in a way so that the social benefits attaching to land and rights-of-way due to organized government and progress will be diffused equally among all the people.

Henry George demonstrated beyond a doubt that the major social benefits due to government and progress are reflected in the value of land and rights-of-way. These benefits are an expression of the economic law of rent. Rent is the automatic reflector of social benefits as well as the absorber of social benefits. It is clear that if these benefits are left in private hands the few will get what ought to accrue to the many. Since they are common benefits, they must be diffused equally among all the people. Therefore, the simple and rational way to bring this about is to socialize the thing in which all modern methods of production are reflected; that is, the capitalized value of land and rights-of-way.

And so, as a remedy for the paradoxical problem of want and starvation in the midst of plenty, Henry George proposed the simple device of collecting for public use the economic rent of land and rights-of-way.

It might be well to remind ourselves that in all our efforts to build our economic order on the basis of social justice, the power of taxation can be used more effectively to achieve this end than any other power of government. In a celebrated case, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

> The power to tax is the one great power upon which the national fabric is based. It is not only the power to destroy, but also the power to keep alive.

This dictum of the Supreme Court contains a very important and vital truth that statesmen, if they want America to develop upon principles of freedom and equality, must learn to apply wisely and sanely. The incidence of taxation is a very vital factor in the upbuilding of human society. It may be used as the Supreme Court has said, to destroy, but it can also be used to keep alive. Wisdom would dictate that it be used in such fashion that the prosperity and happiness of the people will be promoted. Inasmuch as the social benefits of government and progress are absorbed in the value of land and franchises, would not reason and natural justice dictate that the social benefits be taxed for the use of all the people? The question, by what constitutional means are the overprivileged to be weeded out, is quite pertinent. The answer is found in the case of Providence Bank against Billings, in which Chief Justice Marshall said:

Land, for example, has in many, perhaps all, of the States, been granted by Government since the adoption of the Constitution. This grant is a contract, the object of which is that the profits issuing from it shall inure to the benefit of the grantee. Yet the power of taxation may be carried so far as to absorb these profits. Does this impair the obligation of contracts? The idea is rejected by all.

So it would seem that under existing law the Government has the power to take for public use all the benefits issuing from land and franchises. By taking for public use the social benefits that are absorbed by land, by franchises, and by other governmental concessions, the products of capital and labor would be distributed honestly and equitably, and with the products of labor distributed honestly among producers, the purchasing power of the people would be immeasurably increased and consumption limited only by the people's willingness to work and produce. Under this plan production and consumption would automatically balance and the problem of involuntary unemployment solved.

It is estimated by reliable authority that the exactions of privilege in normal times absorb one-third of the national income. In other words, if the national income per year is $60,000,000,000, the privileged interests—those who possess the power to appropriate the social benefits attaching to governmental concessions, receive, without lifting a finger in productive toil, $20,000,000,000 of the products of capital and labor. From this vast quantity of the products of capital and labor government ought to appropriate enough for all public purposes and then the business-wrecking and depression-breeding taxes now levied upon the products of capital and labor could be abolished.

The claim is not made that the collection of all public revenue from the social benefits attaching to legal privilege would solve all our economic ills. But it is claimed that we cannot get rid of our basic troubles without doing so. Henry George himself made the same claim and concession in these words:

I do not say that in the recognition of the equal and unalienable right of each human being to the natural elements from which life must be supported and wants satisfied, lies the solution of all social problems. I fully recognize that even after we do this, much will remain to do. But whatever else we do, as long as we fail to recognize the equal right to the elements of nature, nothing will avail to remedy that unnatural inequality in the distribution of wealth which is fraught with so much evil and danger. Reform as we may, until we make this fundamental reform our material progress can but tend to differentiate our people into the monstrously rich and the frightfully poor.

Manifestly our major economic ills center around the problem of the distribution of wealth. We have observed that all wealth is the creation of labor, and by every rule of logic, reason, and justice labor ought to be the recipient of its products. It has been noted, however, that a large portion of the products of labor are enjoyed by those who do not labor. The conscience of the Nation is awakening to this fact, and the cry is everywhere heard that the parasites—the drones, those who have and enjoy but do not labor nor create—must be removed from our economic order. The American people are determined to weed out the parasites, the overprivileged. This is a sign of promise for the future. But this task must be approached in a spirit of justice and fair dealing. The indiscriminate sharing of the wealth of the Nation, as proposed in ever so many ways, is an offense against the moral sanctions of mankind. The problem must be solved in the spirit of reason and natural justice, and therefore the distribution of the fruits of productive effort must have the sanction of good morals and sound economics. In order to escape the pitfalls that beset the indiscriminate distribution of wealth by such proposals as " soak the rich ", " share the wealth ", " revolving pension funds ", " limitation of income ", and the like, we can well afford to turn to the natural laws governing the distribution of wealth, for these laws, when allowed to function freely and normally, will neither favor nor harm the richest or the poorest.

The Roosevelt administration is making a sincere and earnest attempt to solve the problem of distributing the national income. This is the first time in all the years of our national existence that a Federal administration deliberately set itself the task of grappling seriously with this age-old problem. In the years gone by the Government at Washington was concerned little, if any, about the problem of social justice or the rights of the citizen to the bounty of nature. Given a great and wealthy domain, the Government at Washington, during all the years of our national life, was content to let its fabulous possessions to be ravaged by the adventurous and the strong. It was open season for the plunderers and the despoilers of our land. Timber, oil, coal, mineral, urban, agricultural, and grazing lands in all sections of the Nation, and rights-of-way over the city streets and country highways were seized and appropriated by private individuals and corporations. Opportunities that these natural resources for self-improvement and self-advancement offered are now available only on the payment of a handsome ransom. The resources of the Nation are now in the grip of a comparatively few, and these few have possession of the economic life of the people. Serious and intelligent consideration must be given the problem of not only asserting but restoring to the citizen his rights to the social benefits attaching to the bounty of nature, for this is the fundamental reform upon which the success of all other reforms depend.

The new deal, in its deeper meaning, is a long-range program. It is designed to serve a dual purpose: First, temporary recovery; and second, permanent social justice. Much has been done in the name of the new deal for temporary recovery. Some steps have been taken looking toward permanent social justice and others are in contemplation. That every measure proposed either for temporary relief or permanent recovery is sound is not to be expected. No one pretends that the new deal is perfect. Attempts will be made to achieve its purpose that will seem awkward, futile, and illogical. It no doubt contains features that are undemocratic. These, by trial and error, can be discovered and eliminated, and only those in harmony with sound economics and genuine democracy retained. This is the task ahead for the new deal.

In a letter to President Roosevelt upon the adjournment of the extraordinary session of the Seventy-third Congress, I said:

In your speech, The Philosophy of Government, delivered before the Commonwealth Club, San Francisco, September 23, 1932, you stated: " Government includes the art of formulating a policy and using the political technique to attain so much of that policy as will receive general support; persuading, leading, sacrificing, teaching always, because the greatest duty of a statesman is to educate."

But in teaching, persuading, leading, we must be sure of our ground. There is in social affairs a natural order, and it is the duty of the statesman to discover and follow it. Not to discern clearly and distinctly the natural order is fraught with danger. When the natural order is clearly perceived, the task of steering the ship of state is as sure and certain and definite as the control of an ocean greyhound under the guiding hand of a skilled and trained navigator.

The program set up by the administration in the present crisis may be likened to the work of a certain railroad company that recently erected a bridge across the Ohio River at Steubenville, Ohio. The new bridge was built on the foundations of the old, and during the entire period of the construction of the new bridge not a single train was delayed, nor traffic interrupted in any way. The old bridge and the new in the course of construction were so flanked with temporary trestles that both the old and the new structures lost their semblance as bridges. But after the temporary trestles and the old bridge were removed the structure was there in all its beauty, grandeur, and strength. And so let us hope that the work of the administration thus far is but a temporary device set up for use while the permanent structure of social justice is being fashioned and molded and constructed in harmony with the great order of things.

"For there is in human affairs one order which is the best. That order is not always the order which exists, but it is the order which should exist for the greatest good of humanity. God knows it and wills it; man's duty it is to discover it and establish it."

The new deal, in its deeper aspect, is designed to end the exploitation of the many by the few; to permanently weed out and eliminate the parasites and overprivileged; to forever silence the threnody of unrequited toil; to bring equal opportunity and economic freedom to all; and to make America in fact what it is in name, a land of "equal rights for all, special privileges for none."

To the task of developing, amplifying, and perfecting the new deal in its deeper meaning let us dedicate our political activities in the years ahead, and for light and leading and guidance we are privileged to drink deep at the fount of economic truth as revealed in the inspiring message of Henry George.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will withhold that request until after the disposition of the pending matter.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I withhold the request, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC UTILITY ACT OF 1935

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating or marketing securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2796, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the adoption of the committee amendment to the Senate bill.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I again ask unanimous consent to revert to page 229, for the purpose of offering an amendment. I have talked with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] about it and I think he agrees that what I am suggesting ought to be done.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER of Ohio: Page 229, line 11, after the word "person", insert a comma and the words "State, or municipality."

Line 13, strike out the words "of such person" and insert the word "thereof" in lieu thereof.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, this bill will go to conference and I shall object to going back.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his objection to let me explain the matter?

Mr. SNELL. I reserve it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Both the Senate and the House bills are identical on this matter and therefore it will be impossible to change the language in conference. This is the reason I am anxious to have the amendment adopted and I really think it is what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] and the folks on that side would like to do. This amendment requires municipal corporations to be supervised like all other corporations.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Then, Mr. Chairman, I submit another amendment and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER of Ohio: Page 229, lines 11 to 13, strike out subsection (5) and renumber the succeeding subsections accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to page 229 for the purpose of offering the amendment which has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio and Mr. WADSWORTH reserved the right to object.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman explain this amendment?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to do what the other amendment would have done more satisfactorily. Since we do not have municipal corporations included under the definition contained in the bill, this amendment proposes to strike out subsection (5) and in this way we will not discriminate against private corporations in favor of municipal corporations.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to say that the last amendment he offers will do the same thing that the amendment which was just objected to would do, but in a little better way?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. No; the language of the bill as it now stands specifically leaves out municipalities. If my other amendment had been adopted it would have included municipalities, so they would be supervised with regard to accounting, and so forth, just like private corporations. This will not be true as the bill now stands, and I really should think the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from New York would want this amendment more than myself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Ohio this question. Does his last amendment strike out the entire definition of licensee?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Yes; paragraph (5), which defines licensee, does not include municipal corporations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then if the last amendment offered by the gentleman is adopted, there will not be any definition of licensee in the bill?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then where do we get?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. We have corporations, persons, and so on.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The word "licensee" is used very often throughout this bill, and if you strike out the definition of "licensee" you will cast the bill in doubt.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if what the gentleman from New York has said is true, I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

The question now recurs on the adoption of the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, we are going to vote now on the motion to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. Those of us who are opposed to the House bill will vote "no." If we vote down this motion, then the vote recurs on the adoption of the Senate bill, and then our vote will be "aye." If that vote is carried, then the bill goes to the White House. It does not have to go to conference.

On the other hand, if you vote "aye" on this motion and it is carried, you are voting for the House bill, which is the very bill that the Power Trust wants as against the Senate bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Does the Senate bill have any control provision over the pipe lines?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman knows what the Senate provision does. Those of you who are with us know that it comes down to a vote for the people or the Power Trust. A vote for the Senate bill is a vote for the American people and against the Power Trust. [Applause.]

The first roll call will come on adopting the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill. That vote will show where every Member stands—whether he is with the administration or with the Power Trust.

Our vote will be "no." The Power Trust vote will be "aye."

If we win on that roll call and defeat the motion to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, then the next vote will be on the passage of the Senate bill.

On that proposition our vote will be "aye"; the Power Trust vote will be "no."

If we win on that vote, then the bill will go directly to the White House and become the law.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I owe it not only to myself, but I owe it to the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle who stood alongside me yesterday on the vote on section 11, to make this statement. I have stated in this debate that there were provisions in the Senate bill that I liked better than I did the provisions in the House bill. I gave evidence of that yesterday.

I also stated that I thought many provisions in the House bill have been better considered than those in the Senate bill, and therefore I stood for them.

Therefore, I cannot vote to substitute the entire Senate bill for the entire House bill. [Applause.]

Furthermore, when this roll is called you are going to further tie the hands of the House conferees. You are going to make it more impossible for the Senate committee to yield for the House committee measure and to get any sort of a bill. I feel, therefore, that I owe it to those who have known my position to make this statement. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The chairman of the committee in the Senate has announced publicly that the Senate will never yield. Why are we making it any harder to get a bill if we vote direct on the substitutions?

Mr. RAYBURN. Well, I think sometimes we talk off the record. [Laughter.]

Mr. McFARLANE rose.

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. I wish the gentleman would point out just what specific provision in the House bill is better than the specific provision in the Senate bill. I think that every amendment of the House bill to the Senate bill has greatly weakened it.

Mr. BLANTON. That can be left to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. There are thirty-odd sections in this bill, and the most remarkable thing that we have seen in this House occurred the other day when 10 vitally important sections of the bill were read in the House and but two small amendments were offered, and one of them, after consideration, withdrawn.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. We are very much interested in the control of natural-gas pipe lines, one of the biggest violators and the biggest obstacle in the way of some of the large cities getting natural gas. That title has been stricken from the House bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; it was stricken from the House bill in committee on a vote of 11 to 12.

Mr. DINGELL. Would the gentleman tell me whether that has any chance of reinstatement?

Mr. RAYBURN. It will not be in conference. There is no chance to consider it.

Mr. DINGELL. Has the committee anything in mind to bring that out at any future day?

Mr. RAYBURN. One of the reasons of those who opposed putting title III in the bill was that the Federal Trade Commission was making a thorough investigation of the subject, and their hope was to report on the matter next December or January. Under Dr. Splawn, however, the argument on the other side, which was made by me and the others, was that he had made a very thorough investigation of it, and we have enough facts, therefore, on which to put title III in, but we were not able to do it.

Mr. DINGELL. The Senate bill contains no such provision.

Mr. RAYBURN. It contains no title III.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. In order to understand a little more clearly the gentleman's position, as I understand it, the question we vote on now is whether or not we shall substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. I understand the gentleman's position to be that he will support the House bill as against the Senate bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. My position is this: I should like to see this bill in conference. I have pointed out a great many things in both bills. I think there are frailties in the House measure and also in the Senate measure, but I think we can do a better job in conference than we can here.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise only to say that after weeks and weeks of consideration of this measure in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the committee was never permitted to take a direct vote as to whether or not we were for the "death sentence." You could not have gotten the bill out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with the "death sentence" in it. It is not a question this morning of what the Senate has done. The question we have to consider is the work of the House committee after almost 5 months, working night and day on the bill. [Applause.] Then again, my good friend, the chairman of the committee, said it would be impossible to get the conferees of the House and the Senate together if we passed the House bill. I remind the House that the "death sentence" provision in the Senate bill was adopted by only 1 vote in the Senate, so the House and the Senate cannot be very far apart on this great question.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. That is all I have to say.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Before a vote is taken on this bill I think the Membership should know something in reference to the pressure which is directed against Members who appear to be in opposition to the President's plan. I received the following telegram this morning:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., July 2, 1935.

Hon. JOHN H. HOEPPEL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Please do not fail to vote for legislation against utility holding company. Democratic Party of California expects you to support the President's righteous stand on this issue. Failure to do so would be great disappointment to your constituency. Kind regards.

CULBERT L. OLSON,
Chairman Democratic State Central Committee.

I understand that another Representative from Los Angeles County, who, like myself, voted against the "death sentence" in this measure, received a similar telegram. I have the highest regard for Mr. Olson, the chairman of our Democratic State committee and hope that he may be our next Governor. I do not know whether he was inspired by the administration to send this telegram to me, but I do know that the administration did not give our party the proper support last year, and as a result we now have a Republican Governor in California.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. One more important point, my friend. From a source which I will not divulge, it was brought to my attention today that the relief funds for California may be more liberal in the event I support the President in his "righteous stand." I also received a telephone call from the head of a certain organization of California, apparently inspired by the administration, requesting that I support the President.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. For the information of the House, I wish to state that the dangling before my eyes of relief funds for our impoverished citizens will not impel me to desert or deviate from what I consider to be my duty as a Representative—that is, to vote without coercion and according to the dictates of my conscience and in what I consider to be the best interests of all the people. The mere fact that pressure of this sort is being directed toward Representatives who voted yesterday against the "death clause" is a danger signal to democracy, and, in my opinion, there is no longer any necessity for a Congress of the United States if we are to be controlled on legislation before us by pressure from administrative sources.

I am not in favor of destroying wealth, but I do believe in regulation. If we wish to be fair with the investors of America, I would suggest that all holding companies be incorporated under Federal laws and that regulation, through taxation and other methods, should be sufficient.

I wish to go on record as one Democrat from the State of California who will not sell his vote for a mess of pottage or patronage.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following preferential motion, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have made this motion in order to get the floor, so as to enable me to emphasize and make plain the position taken by our Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee [Mr. RAYBURN]. I am backing the chairman of our committee.

I am uncompromisingly against the holding companies controlling the utilities of this Nation. I am in favor of putting teeth into this bill. I am in favor of this Government properly regulating and controlling all utilities, and of abolishing and putting out of business all unnecessary and improper holding companies.

But the main question now before us is how is the best way to bring that about. In the teller vote yesterday, we were defeated by a decisive vote. We who insisted on putting teeth in this bill were outvoted. If we press our issue here again today, we are going to be outvoted again, under the present atmosphere and environment, and we will not accomplish what we desire.

Sometimes it is necessary for a good general to retreat temporarily. The chairman of our committee has made a good fight both in his committee and on this floor. He deems it best just now to make a strategical retreat. He thinks it is best to pass the House provisions and let the bill go to conference, as there are some sections of the House bill which are better than the Senate bill, and there are some sections of the Senate bill which are better than the House bill, and such action will put the provisions of both bills in conference, and there our committee chairman can make his fight for a proper bill to bring back to the House. Therefore, I am going to back our chairman, and vote with him to let the House bill pass.

Our chairman has given his time and attention assiduously to this bill. He knows exactly what he has in mind when he made the statement a moment ago. I think that those of us, including the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman has made a motion to strike out the enacting clause, and then he is speaking against his own motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have the right to use my own method of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. This bill is in such position that I think in case my motion should not prevail, and I know it will not, we should vote for the House bill, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] says he wants us to do. He is our leader in this matter. [Applause.] He is our Democratic leader respecting this legislation now before us. [Applause.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I am sorry. Mr. Chairman, I am going to follow our Democratic leader [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor and will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Surely, I have the floor, and I know how to proceed in order.

Mr. Chairman, in case my motion should not prevail, and I know it will not prevail, because I am going to vote against it myself, this is what will happen: If we vote for the House bill, then we surely will have the Republicans with us on that, and then all of the provisions of the Senate bill will go to conference, and when that bill comes out of conference I predict the gentleman from Texas, the great chairman of this committee [Mr. RAYBURN], and his other conferees will bring back to us a bill that the majority of the Members of this House will be satisfied with and can vote for, even my friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], with whom I voted in the teller vote yesterday and with whom I stand shoulder to shoulder in fighting Power Trusts. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; you do not. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I do. But I have got sense enough, Mr. Chairman, to use a little strategy [applause and laughter] in order to get proper legislation through this House.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to withdraw his motion.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I have the highest respect for my friend and colleague, the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. RAYBURN]. I regret that I cannot go along with him today. I think today we are facing one of the most important votes that we have faced, at least in my time in Congress in the last 13 years.

I do not suggest to any Member of this House how he should vote, or attempt to guide any Member of this House. Yesterday when I stood down in the Well of the house I explained afterward to my colleagues the reason why I mentioned the stand of the American Federation of Labor on this bill. [Applause and laughter.] That reason was that many Members had asked me not my position but the position of the American Federation of Labor, and for that purpose I expressed that position as it was made known to me.

Today it seems to me in this vote we are deciding for 125,000,000 people of the United States whether the power interests of the United States are going to continue to run this our country roughshod or whether the United States Government is going to run the country. [Applause.]

I repeat, I think it the most important vote we have been faced with in this House in many years. I hope the House will stand with President Roosevelt in his great fight against the Power Trust and vote down this motion when it is made, to substitute the House amendment for the Senate bill. I think this is a mighty battle between the United States Government and the Power Trust, and I hope, for the sake of the great masses of the people exploited and strangled by the Power Trust octopus of big business that the United States Government wins this all-important battle here and now. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO, Mr. O'MALLEY, and Mr. PATMAN) there were ayes 1 and noes 82.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi. All debate has expired.

The question now recurs to the adoption of the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. MARCANTONIO to act as tellers.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 246 and noes 133.

So the committee substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee rises under the rule.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 2796, the Public Utility Act of 1935, pursuant to House Resolution 276, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee substitute adopted in the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. If this motion is voted down, then the Senate bill will be before the House for passage. That is correct, is it not?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Then our vote is nay.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 258, nays 147, not voting 24, as follows:

[Roll No. 114]

YEAS—258

Adair	Carmichael	Duffey, Ohio	Greever
Allen	Carpenter	Duffy, N. Y.	Griswold
Andresen	Cary	Duncan	Guyer
Andrew, Mass.	Casey	Dunn, Miss.	Gwynne
Andrews, N Y.	Cavicchia	Eagle	Haines
Arends	Celler	Eaton	Halleck
Ashbrook	Chapman	Edmiston	Hancock, N. Y.
Bacharach	Christianson	Ekwall	Hancock, N. C.
Bacon	Church	Engel	Harlan
Barden	Claiborne	Englebright	Hart
Beam	Clark, Idaho	Evans	Harter
Bell	Clark, N. C.	Faddis	Hartley
Berlin	Coffee	Farley	Hennings
Blackney	Cole, Md.	Fenerty	Hess
Bland	Cole, N. Y.	Fernandez	Higgins, Mass.
Blanton	Collins	Fiesinger	Hobbs
Bloom	Cooper, Ohio	Fish	Hoeppel
Boehne	Corning	Fitzpatrick	Hoffman
Boland	Costello	Focht	Hollister
Bolton	Crawford	Frey	Holmes
Boylan	Crosby	Fuller	Hope
Brennan	Crowther	Fulmer	Houston
Brewster	Culkin	Gambrill	Huddleston
Brooks	Cullen	Gasque	Imhoff
Brown, Ga.	Darden	Gassaway	Jenckes, Ind.
Brunner	Darrow	Gavagan	Jenkins, Ohio
Buchanan	Delaney	Gifford	Johnson, Tex.
Buck	Dietrich	Gingery	Johnson, W. Va.
Buckbee	Ditter	Goodwin	Kahn
Burch	Dobbins	Granfield	Kee
Burnham	Dondero	Gray, Pa.	Kelly
Caldwell	Doutrich	Green	Kennedy, Md.
Carlson	Drewry	Greenway	Kerr
Kimball	Mason	Rayburn	Sutphin
Kinzer	May	Reece	Taber
Kleberg	Meeks	Reed, Ill.	Tarver
Kloeb	Merritt, Conn.	Reed, N. Y.	Taylor, Tenn.
Knutson	Merritt, N. Y.	Reilly	Thom
Kopplemann	Michener	Rich	Thomas
Lambeth	Millard	Richards	Thompson
Lamneck	Mitchell, Ill.	Richardson	Thurston
Lanham	Montague	Robertson	Tinkham
Lea, Calif.	Montet	Robinson, Utah	Tobey
Lehlbach	Mott	Robsion, Ky.	Tolan
Lewis, Colo.	Nichols	Rogers, Mass.	Treadway
Lloyd	Norton	Rogers, N. H.	Turpin
Lord	O'Brien	Rogers, Okla.	Umstead
Lucas	O'Connell	Rudd	Vinson, Ga.
Ludlow	O'Connor	Russell	Wadsworth
McAndrews	O'Leary	Sanders, Tex.	Walter
McCormack	O'Neal	Schaefer	Warren
McGehee	Palmisano	Schuetz	Weaver
McGroarty	Parsons	Sears	Whelchel
McKeough	Patton	Secrest	Whittington
McLaughlin	Perkins	Seger	Wigglesworth
McLean	Peterson, Fla.	Shanley	Wilcox
McMillan	Peterson, Ga.	Short	Wilson, La.
McReynolds	Pettengill	Smith, Conn.	Wilson, Pa.
McSwain	Pittenger	Smith, Va.	Wolcott
Maas	Plumley	Smith, W. Va.	Wolfenden
Maloney	Polk	Snell	Wolverton
Mansfield	Powers	Somers, N. Y.	Woodruff
Mapes	Ramspeck	Spence	Woodrum
Marshall	Randolph	Stefan
Martin, Mass.	Ransley	Stewart

NAYS—147

Amlie	Dunn, Pa.	Lemke	Sauthoff
Arnold	Eckert	Lewis, Md.	Schneider
Ayers	Eicher	Luckey	Schulte
Beiter	Ellenbogen	Lundeen	Scott
Biermann	Flannagan	McClellan	Scrugham
Binderup	Fletcher	McFarlane	Sirovich
Boileau	Ford, Calif.	McGrath	Sisson
Buckler, Minn.	Ford, Miss.	Mahon	Smith, Wash.
Buckley, N. Y.	Gearhart	Marcantonio	Snyder
Burdick	Gehrmann	Martin, Colo.	South
Cannon, Mo.	Gilchrist	Massingale	Stack
Cartwright	Gildea	Maverick	Starnes
Castellow	Gillette	Mead	Steagall
Chandler	Goldsborough	Miller	Stubbs
Citron	Gray, Ind.	Mitchell, Tenn.	Sullivan
Colden	Greenwood	Monaghan	Sweeney
Colmer	Gregory	Moran	Taylor, Colo.
Connery	Hamlin	Moritz	Terry
Cooper, Tenn.	Healey	Murdock	Thomason
Cox	Hildebrandt	Nelson	Tonry
Cravens	Hill, Ala.	O'Day	Truax
Cross, Tex.	Hill, Knute	O'Malley	Turner
Crosser, Ohio	Hill, Samuel B.	Parks	Utterback
Crowe	Hook	Patman	Vinson, Ky.
Cummings	Hull	Patterson	Wallgren
Daly	Jacobsen	Pearson	Wearin
Dear	Johnson, Okla.	Pfeifer	Welch
Deen	Jones	Pierce	Werner
Dickstein	Keller	Quinn	West
Dingell	Kennedy, N. Y.	Rabaut	White
Disney	Kniffin	Ramsay	Williams
Dockweiler	Kocialkowski	Rankin	Withrow
Dorsey	Kramer	Romjue	Wood
Doughton	Kvale	Sabath	Young
Doxey	Lambertson	Sadowski	Zimmerman
Driscoll	Larrabee	Sanders, La.	Zioncheck
Driver	Lee, Okla.	Sandlin

NOT VOTING—24

Bankhead	Cooley	Higgins, Conn.	Peyser
Brown, Mich.	Dempsey	Kenney	Ryan
Bulwinkle	DeRouen	Lesinksi	Shannon
Cannon, Wis.	Dies	McLeod	Sumners, Tex.
Carter	Dirksen	Oliver	Taylor, S. C.
Cochran	Ferguson	Owen	Underwood

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Cooley (for) with Mr. Brown of Michigan (against).
Mr. McLeod (for) with Mr. Cochran (against).
Mr. Dirksen (for) with Mr. Taylor of South Carolina (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Dies with Mr. Carter.
Mr. Sumners of Texas with Mr. Higgins of Connecticut.
Mr. Oliver with Mr. Ryan.
Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Lesinski.
Mr. Underwood with Mr. Dempsey.
Mr. Ferguson with Mr. DeRouen.
Mr. Peyser with Mr. Owen.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. KENNEY, is unavoidably delayed. He called me over the long-distance telephone and authorized me to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOLMES. I am.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER] is entitled to make this motion to recommit for the reason that under the rule the motion to recommit goes to the minority. When a bill is being considered in the House and the majority in charge of the bill is defeated on a major issue, control of the bill then passes to the other side. The control of this bill has passed to the other side of the House, or to the other side of this issue. I make the point of order, therefore, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER], a member of the committee representing the minority now, is entitled to be recognized to make the motion to recommit.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, it is so well known that the precedents are to the contrary of the position stated by the gentleman from Mississippi that it is not even necessary for me to argue it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it is a great relief to the House not to have to strain the ponderous intellect of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] on this point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The motion to recommit was first adopted in order to protect the minority, not necessarily the political minority, but the minority in the House. It has been the uniform practice without one single exception since this rule was first adopted that the political minority in the House shall be given the preference on motions to recommit, provided they qualify, recognition first being given to members of the committee which reported the bill.

On May 7, 1913, this express point was ruled upon by the late Speaker Champ Clark, and the Chair will quote briefly from what the Speaker said on that occasion in response to an inquiry from the Honorable Victor Murdock, at that time a Representative from Kansas. Speaker Clark said:

> The Chair laid down this rule, from which he never intends to depart unless overruled by the House, that on a motion to recommit he will give preference to the gentleman at the head of the minority list, provided he qualifies, and then go down the list of the minority of the committee until it is gotten through with. And then, if no one of them offer a motion to recommit, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to make it; but if he does not do so, will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] as the leader of the third party in the House. * * * Of course, he would have to qualify (63d Cong., 1st sess., RECORD, p. 1373).

As the Chair has stated, without one single exception this has been the ruling of all the Speakers who succeeded Speaker Clark.

The Chair feels that this rule having been adopted primarily to protect the minority, and in order to give the minority a right to express itself, that the previous rulings should be followed. The gentleman from Massachusetts, a minority member of the committee, has stated that he is opposed to the bill and is therefore in the same class as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. EICHER], a member of the majority on the committee; therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order and recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] to offer the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. HOLMES moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out all of section 11, beginning on page 196, line 14, and ending on page 200, line 3, both inclusive.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 295, noes 94.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. What would be the situation in the event the motion of my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts was agreed to striking out section 11? What would be the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. The bill, of course, would be without section 11.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. In reference to my parliamentary inquiry, what I am after is this: The adoption of the House bill as a substitute for the Senate bill did away completely with the Senate bill. There would be no possibility by the adoption of this amendment striking out section 11 to revert to a consideration of section 11 of the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on the motion to recommit I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. If we vote to strike out section 11 on this motion to recommit, then that section could not be considered in conference. In other words, we who favor the Senate bill should vote "no"?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to determine that for himself.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 93, nays 312, not voting 24, as follows:

[Roll No. 115]

YEAS—93

Allen	Dondero	Kennedy, N. Y.	Rich
Andresen	Doutrich	Kimball	Rogers, Mass.
Andrew, Mass.	Eagle	Kinzer	Seger
Andrews, N. Y.	Eaton	Knutson	Short
Arends	Ekwall	Lehlbach	Snell
Bacharach	Engel	Lord	Stewart
Bacon	Englebright	McLean	Sutphin
Blackney	Fenerty	Maas	Taber
Bolton	Fish	Mapes	Thomas
Buckbee	Focht	Marshall	Thurston
Burnham	Gifford	Martin, Mass.	Tinkham
Carlson	Goodwin	May	Tobey
Cavicchia	Guyer	Merritt, Conn.	Treadway
Christianson	Gwynne	Michener	Turpin
Church	Halleck	Millard	Wadsworth
Claiborne	Hancock, N. Y.	Mott	Wigglesworth
Cole, N. Y.	Hartley	Perkins	Wilson, Pa.
Collins	Hess	Pittenger	Wolcott
Cooper, Ohio	Hoffman	Plumley	Wolfenden
Crawford	Hollister	Powers	Wolverton
Crowther	Holmes	Ransley	Woodruff
Culkin	Hope	Reece
Darrow	Jenkins, Ohio	Reed, Ill.
Ditter	Kahn	Reed, N. Y.

NAYS—312

Adair	Buck	Corning	Driver
Amlie	Buckler, Minn.	Costello	Duffey, Ohio
Arnold	Buckley, N. Y.	Cravens	Duffy, N. Y.
Ashbrook	Burch	Crosby	Duncan
Ayers	Burdick	Cross, Tex.	Dunn, Miss.
Barden	Caldwell	Crosser, Ohio	Dunn, Pa.
Beam	Cannon, Mo.	Crowe	Eckert
Beiter	Carmichael	Cullen	Edmiston
Bell	Carpenter	Cummings	Eicher
Berlin	Cartwright	Daly	Ellenbogen
Biermann	Cary	Darden	Evans
Binderup	Casey	Dear	Faddis
Bland	Castellow	Deen	Farley
Blanton	Celler	Delaney	Ferguson
Bloom	Chandler	Dickstein	Fernandez
Boehne	Chapman	Dietrich	Fiesinger
Boileau	Citron	Dingell	Fitzpatrick
Boland	Clark, Idaho	Disney	Flannagan
Boylan	Clark, N. C.	Dobbins	Fletcher
Brennan	Coffee	Dockweiler	Ford, Calif.
Brewster	Colden	Dorsey	Ford, Miss.
Brooks	Cole, Md.	Doughton	Frey
Brown, Ga.	Colmer	Doxey	Fuller
Brunner	Connery	Drewry	Fulmer
Buchanan	Cooper, Tenn.	Driscoll	Gambrill

Gasque	Kocialkowski	Norton	Shanley
Gassaway	Kopplemann	O'Brien	Sirovich
Gavagan	Kramer	O'Connell	Sisson
Gearhart	Kvale	O'Connor	Smith, Conn.
Gehrmann	Lambertson	O'Day	Smith, Va.
Gilchrist	Lambeth	O'Leary	Smith, Wash.
Gildea	Lamneck	O'Malley	Smith, W. Va.
Gillette	Lanham	O'Neal	Snyder
Gingery	Larrabee	Palmisano	Somers, N. Y.
Goldsborough	Lea, Calif.	Parks	South
Granfield	Lee, Okla.	Parsons	Spence
Gray, Ind.	Lemke	Patman	Stack
Gray, Pa.	Lewis, Colo.	Patterson	Starnes
Green	Lewis, Md.	Patton	Steagall
Greenway	Lloyd	Pearson	Stefan
Greenwood	Lucas	Peterson, Fla.	Stubbs
Greever	Luckey	Peterson, Ga.	Sullivan
Gregory	Ludlow	Pettengill	Sweeney
Griswold	Lundeen	Pfeifer	Tarver
Haines	McAndrews	Pierce	Taylor, Colo.
Hamlin	McClellan	Polk	Taylor, Tenn.
Hancock, N. C.	McCormack	Quinn	Terry
Harlan	McFarlane	Rabaut	Thom
Hart	McGehee	Ramsay	Thomason
Harter	McGrath	Ramspeck	Thompson
Healey	McGroarty	Randolph	Tolan
Hennings	McKeough	Rankin	Tonry
Higgins, Mass.	McLaughlin	Rayburn	Truax
Hildebrandt	McMillan	Reilly	Turner
Hill, Ala.	McReynolds	Richards	Umstead
Hill, Knute	McSwain	Richardson	Utterback
Hill, Samuel B.	Mahon	Robertson	Vinson, Ga.
Hobbs	Maloney	Robinson, Utah	Vinson, Ky.
Hoeppel	Mansfield	Robsion, Ky.	Wallgren
Hook	Marcantonio	Rogers, N. H.	Walter
Houston	Martin, Colo.	Rogers, Okla.	Warren
Huddleston	Mason	Romjue	Wearin
Hull	Massingale	Rudd	Weaver
Imhoff	Maverick	Russell	Welch
Jacobsen	Mead	Sabath	Werner
Jenckes, Ind.	Meeks	Sadowski	West
Johnson, Okla.	Merritt, N. Y.	Sanders, La.	Whelchel
Johnson, Tex.	Miller	Sanders, Tex.	White
Johnson, W. Va.	Mitchell, Ill.	Sandlin	Whittington
Jones	Mitchell, Tenn.	Sauthoff	Wilcox
Kee	Monaghan	Schaefer	Williams
Keller	Montague	Schneider	Wilson, La.
Kelly	Montet	Schuetz	Withrow
Kennedy, Md.	Moran	Schulte	Wood
Kerr	Moritz	Scott	Woodrum
Kleberg	Murdock	Scrugham	Young
Kloeb	Nelson	Sears	Zimmerman
Kniffin	Nichols	Secrest	Zioncheck

NOT VOTING—24

Bankhead	Cooley	Higgins, Conn.	Peyser
Brown, Mich.	Cox	Kenney	Ryan
Bulwinkle	Dempsey	Lesinski	Shannon
Cannon, Wis.	DeRouen	McLeod	Sumners, Tex.
Carter	Dies	Oliver	Taylor, S. C.
Cochran	Dirksen	Owen	Underwood

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Dirksen (for) with Mr. Taylor of South Carolina (against).
Mr. Higgins of Connecticut (for) with Mr. Cooley (against).
Mr. McLeod (for) with Mr. Cochran (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Dies with Mr. Carter.
Mr. Oliver with Mr. Ryan.
Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Lesinski.
Mr. Underwood with Mr. Dempsey.
Mr. Peyser with Mr. Owen.
Mr. Cox with Mr. Brown of Michigan.
Mr. Sumners of Texas with Mr. DeRouen.

Mr. BELL changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES, is unavoidably absent. If he were here, I would vote "no" on the motion to recommit.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. SNELL demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this bill now worthy of the attention of Congress.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 323, nays 81, not voting 25, as follows:

[Roll No. 116]

YEAS—323

Adair	Ashbrook	Beam	Berlin
Amlie	Ayers	Beiter	Biermann
Arnold	Barden	Bell	Binderup
Bland	Farley	Lanham	Reilly
Blanton	Ferguson	Larrabee	Richards
Bloom	Fernandez	Lea, Calif.	Richardson
Boehne	Fiesinger	Lee, Okla.	Robertson
Boileau	Fish	Lemke	Robinson, Utah
Boland	Fitzpatrick	Lesinski	Robsion, Ky.
Boylan	Flannagan	Lewis, Colo.	Rogers, N. H.
Brennan	Fletcher	Lewis, Md.	Rogers, Okla.
Brewster	Ford, Calif.	Lloyd	Romjue
Brooks	Ford, Miss.	Lucas	Rudd
Brown, Ga.	Frey	Luckey	Russell
Brunner	Fuller	Ludlow	Sabath
Buchanan	Fulmer	Lundeen	Sadowski
Buckler, Minn.	Gambrill	McAndrews	Sanders, La.
Buckley, N. Y.	Gasque	McClellan	Sandlin
Burch	Gassaway	McCormack	Sauthoff
Burdick	Gavagan	McFarlane	Schaefer
Caldwell	Gearheart	McGehee	Schneider
Cannon, Mo.	Gehrmann	McGrath	Schuetz
Carlson	Gilchrist	McGroarty	Schulte
Carmichael	Gildea	McKeough	Scott
Carpenter	Gillette	McLaughlin	Sears
Cartwright	Gingery	McMillan	Secrest
Cary	Goldsborough	McReynolds	Shanley
Casey	Granfield	McSwain	Sirovich
Castellow	Gray, Ind.	Mahon	Sisson
Celler	Gray, Pa.	Maloney	Smith, Conn.
Chandler	Green	Mansfield	Smith, Va.
Chapman	Greenway	Mapes	Smith, Wash.
Christianson	Greenwood	Marcantonio	Snyder
Citron	Greever	Martin, Colo.	Somers, N. Y.
Clark, Idaho	Gregory	Mason	South
Clark, N. C.	Griswold	Massingale	Spence
Coffee	Guyer	Maverick	Stack
Colden	Gwynne	May	Starnes
Cole, Md.	Haines	Mead	Steagall
Colmer	Hamlin	Meeks	Stefan
Connery	Hancock, N. C.	Merritt, N. Y.	Stubbs
Cooper, Tenn.	Harlan	Miller	Sullivan
Corning	Hart	Mitchell, Ill.	Sweeney
Costello	Harter	Mitchell, Tenn.	Tarver
Cox	Healey	Monaghan	Taylor, Colo.
Cravens	Hennings	Montague	Taylor, Tenn.
Crosby	Higgins, Mass.	Montet	Terry
Cross, Tex.	Hildebrandt	Moran	Thom
Crosser, Ohio	Hill, Ala.	Moritz	Thomason
Crowe	Hill, Knute	Mott	Thompson
Culkin	Hill, Samuel B.	Murdock	Thurston
Cullen	Hobbs	Nelson	Tobey
Cummings	Hoeppel	Nichols	Tolan
Daly	Hook	Norton	Tonry
Darden	Hope	O'Brien	Truax
Dear	Houston	O'Connell	Turner
Deen	Huddleston	O'Connor	Umstead
Delaney	Hull	O'Leary	Utterback
Dickstein	Imhoff	O'Malley	Vinson, Ga.
Dietrich	Jacobsen	O'Neal	Vinson, Ky.
Dingell	Jenckes, Ind.	Owen	Wallgren
Disney	Johnson, Okla.	Palmisano	Walter
Dobbins	Johnson, Tex.	Parks	Warren
Dockweiler	Johnson, W. Va.	Parsons	Welch
Dorsey	Jones	Patman	Werner
Doughton	Kee	Patterson	West
Doxey	Keller	Patton	Whelchel
Drewry	Kelly	Pearson	White
Driscoll	Kennedy, Md.	Peterson, Fla.	Whittington
Driver	Kennedy, N. Y.	Peterson, Ga.	Wilcox
Duffey, Ohio	Kerr	Pettengill	Williams
Duffy, N. Y.	Kleberg	Pfeifer	Wilson, La.
Duncan	Kloeb	Pierce	Withrow
Dunn, Miss.	Kniffin	Polk	Wolverton
Dunn, Pa.	Kocialkowski	Quinn	Wood
Eckert	Kopplemann	Rabaut	Woodruff
Eicher	Kramer	Ramsay	Woodrum
Ellenbogen	Kvale	Ramspeck	Young
Engel	Lambertson	Randolph	Zimmerman
Evans	Lambeth	Rankin	Zioncheck
Faddis	Lamneck	Rayburn

NAYS—81

Allen	Dondero	Kinzer	Rogers, Mass.
Andresen	Doutrich	Knutson	Sanders, Tex.
Andrew, Mass.	Eagle	Lehlbach	Seger
Andrews, N. Y.	Eaton	Lord	Short
Arends	Edmiston	McLean	Smith, W. Va.
Bacharach	Ekwall	Maas	Snell
Bacon	Englebright	Marshall	Stewart
Blackney	Fenerty	Martin, Mass.	Sutphin
Bolton	Focht	Merritt, Conn.	Taber
Buckbee	Gifford	Michener	Thomas
Burnham	Goodwin	Millard	Tinkham
Cavicchia	Halleck	O'Day	Treadway
Church	Hancock, N. Y.	Perkins	Turpin
Claiborne	Hartley	Pittenger	Wadsworth
Cole, N. Y.	Hess	Plumley	Wigglesworth
Collins	Hoffman	Powers	Wilson, Pa.
Cooper, Ohio	Hollister	Ransley	Wolcott
Crawford	Holmes	Reece	Wolfenden
Crowther	Jenkins, Ohio	Reed, Ill.
Darrow	Kahn	Reed, N. Y.
Ditter	Kimball	Rich

NOT VOTING—25

Bankhead	Bulwinkle	Cochran	DeRouen
Brown, Mich.	Cannon, Wis.	Cooley	Dies
Buck	Carter	Dempsey	Dirksen

Higgins, Conn.	Peyser	Shannon	Underwood
Kenney	Ryan	Sumners, Tex.	Wearin
McLeod	Scrugham	Taylor, S. C.	Weaver
Oliver

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Taylor of South Carolina (for) with Mr. Dirksen (against).
Mr. Cooley (for) with Mr. Higgins of Connecticut (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Dies with Mr. Carter.
Mr. Cochran with Mr. McLeod.
Mr. Oliver with Mr. Ryan.
Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Buck.
Mr. Underwood with Mr. Dempsey.
Mr. Sumners of Texas with Mr. DeRouen.
Mr. Brown of Michigan with Mr. Wearin.
Mr. Scrugham with Mr. Weaver.

Mr. CROSS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. KENNEY, is unavoidably detained. If present he would vote "aye."

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. OWEN, is not recorded as having voted on any of the roll calls except the last. I desire to make the explanation that his absence from the House is due to illness. If he had been present, he would have voted against substituting the House amendment for the Senate bill. He was in favor of clause 11 of the Senate bill.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. RYAN, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—PUBLIC UTILITY ACT OF 1935

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, during the several months the bill now under consideration has been discussed by the public throughout the country I have received 1,618 wires and letters from my constituents giving expressions of their views and wishes. As an answer to each and all of them, as well as a statement to the House of the views I entertain and the position I am taking, I make the following statement:

First. The national Democratic platform promised legislation to regulate, and not to destroy, utilities' holding companies.

Second. Section 11 of the Senate bill would utterly destroy nearly all utilities' holding companies. I voted today to substitute the House bill merely to regulate and not utterly to destroy them.

Third. The holding-company structure was built up under State laws permitting such procedure, when no Federal law prohibited their formation and operation, and investors poured billions into such stocks under those conditions. I am not willing to wreck those investments by arbitrarily tearing down the holding companies' structure.

Fourth. I am not willing to ruin our oil pipe-line structure in Texas of holding-company ownership or management, nor the gas holding-company structure, nor the light and power holding-company structure, under which those utilities have been furnished most of the money for their construction and extensions and improvements. That destruction would throw oil and gas and light and power into utmost confusion, resulting in less efficiency and probably higher rates with myriads of managements.

Fifth. Besides, or primarily, section 11 of the Senate bill, and also section 11 of the House bill as substituted today for the Senate section, are unconstitutional. I am sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution. That is my plain, sworn, first duty. The Supreme Court decision in the N. R. A. case recently handed down clearly holds that the Congress has no power to delegate legislative discretionary authority to a board, even when created by act of Congress. Yet that is exactly what section 11 of both Senate bill and House bill does. It is not right for me to violate my oath of office. And it would be useless as well to enact something that the Supreme Court would kill as soon as it reaches that Court, while causing injury to all innocent stockholders and the public in the meantime.

Sixth. On final passage I shall vote against the bill itself, whether containing section 11 of the Senate bill or of the House bill. I deeply regret that I have no opportunity to vote for a bill properly to regulate the utilities' holding companies, as promised in the national platform of the Democratic Party, to which I owe and keep faith and allegiance.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I am for the House holding-company bill because it provides a solution for the holding-company problem that is sane, reasonable, and altogether in the public interest. It does not destroy any legitimate holding company and it does not permit any illegitimate one to live. It does not destroy the holdings of innocent investors, but it purges the entire holding-company structure of the evils that beset it.

The House bill brings every public-utility holding company in the United States to the bar of judgment, and that is where they should be brought. The judge is the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, appointed by President Roosevelt, who chose for its personnel competent men in whom the entire country has confidence. Before this judgment seat every public-utility holding company must reveal every detail of its operations, and if it cannot show its right to live it will be given a "death sentence." If it shows that it has a right to live; if it shows that it can function in the public interest, it will be permitted to live and to operate under rules that will make it a real servant of the people. That, in brief, is the essence of the House bill. What could be fairer, what could be more in harmony with the public welfare?

Lobbyists do not bother me. I guess they regard me as too tough and stubborn to fool with or maybe they compliment me by thinking that the gates of hell will not prevail against me when I make up my mind as to what is a just and right course of action.

I have been contacted by only one lobby in connection with this controverted holding-company bill and that is a lobby which I confess has a good deal of standing in my heart. It is an epistolary lobby which does its work at long range. It is composed of hundreds upon hundreds—I think I may even say thousands upon thousands—of persons residing in Indianapolis and Indiana, innocent investors in stock of holding companies who are figuratively trembling with fear that they will lose their investments if the "death sentence" is imposed on all holding companies. Many of them have no other sources of income and they are faced by an awful alternative—either we Members of Congress must modify the holding-company bill as it passed the Senate or it is the poorhouse for them. I am told that scattered throughout America there are 5,000,000 good, ordinary citizens who in perfect faith have put their earnings in stocks that will be rendered absolutely valueless unless the Senate bill is amended. Is it any wonder that they are worried and scared when they see themselves looking right into the doors of the poorhouse? The Twelfth Indiana District, which I have the honor to represent, evidently has its full share of these poor people who are shivering with fear lest their last financial props be knocked from under them, and when I cast my vote on this measure I shall have them in my mind's eye and I shall be thinking of them.

I will go as far as anybody in uprooting pernicious holding companies and in seeing to it that crooked financiers get long terms at hard labor and no favors in our most undesirable penitentiaries, but I cannot see any wisdom in wiping out all holding companies, the good as well as the bad, on account of the crookedness of the few, thus destroying the property of millions of innocent investors, including thousands in my own congressional district who have a right to look to me for protection. I would feel that I could not go home and look them in the face if I should yield supinely to the passage of an unjust measure that would rob them of the only means they have of keeping out of the poorhouse.

On general principles I am not much in favor of the destruction of property, whether tangible or intangible. While I am in harmony with the great humanitarian aims of the national administration and glory in many of its achievements, I never could agree that it was advisable to kill 5,000,000 pigs and convert them into soap grease instead of giving this meat to the hungry and I never could see anything but folly in plowing up every third row of cotton. I think the saner, more sensible plan is to produce all we can so that those who are hungry may be fed and those who are naked may be clothed and I am no more in favor of destroying stock certificates, honestly acquired and in the hands of innocent investors, than I am of destroying pigs and cotton or any other form of property.

The right, the just, the humane solution of this holding-company problem is not wholesale destruction but reasonable regulation—the destruction of those that should be destroyed and the regulation of the others so as to eliminate the evil practices and retain the good holding companies in order that they may provide employment and operate for the benefit of all. I am heartily for this plan which places holding companies under the jurisdiction of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, with full power to investigate and to find out what holding companies are against the public interest and to eliminate those, while seeing to it that all others function legitimately and in a way that redounds to the benefit of the people as a whole. Surely no fault can be found with this program. Surely it is a sound solution of the problem. The Securities and Exchange Commission is appointed by the President. Its duty is to visa the issuance of all stocks and securities so as to protect the buyer and to see that no one is fleeced. The President has appointed on that Commission men of the highest probity and standing who hold and who deserve the confidence of the country. Let us commit into their hands the task of straightening out the holding-company situation instead of rushing into a policy of wholesale destruction of property of millions of small investors—a policy which is all the more to be avoided because it will freeze the fear of honest business men who are already greatly disturbed over national trends.

It seems to me that this problem is really easy of solution. Let us not destroy holding companies that have not offended against the law, that perform a useful function and whose securities are held by millions of people of small means as their only support, but let us find the way to wipe every pernicious holding company out of existence and to send to the penitentiary every guilty crook who fleeces innocent investors. The best solution that is suggested is the one that is proposed in the House bill which leaves to the Securities Commission the execution of the details of this program. I believe it is the rational solution and I am for the House bill.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to me a medley of contradictions. There may be some here who can reconcile its inconsistencies. If so they are more adept at mental gymnastics than I.

Almost every member of the committee has either openly admitted a fear that the bill is unconstitutional or refused to pass on the question. The most favorable thing that can be said of this phase of the debate is that all speakers on the Democratic side "hope" that it will be constitutional. In the face of such faint faith on the part of those who have studied the bill for months, the average Member who was never permitted to read it until last Wednesday should be at least excused for looking upon it with suspicion.

One thing at least is certain and stands out as prominently as a sore thumb. The public has been led to believe that this bill will outlaw all holding companies. People have been convinced that after the passage of this bill the "death warrant" of all holding companies will be written. They fully expect to be present when the victim is killed. The investor has been led to believe that because of this "killing" the value of his investment will depreciate; that he will suffer a sure and certain loss. This is only a half truth. The real truth is that if he invested in certain holding companies, he will lose. If he was so unfortunate as to invest in the smaller companies, he will lose. If he invested in a company which is a part of a "geographically integrated system", he will not lose on his investment. In such a case the value of his investment will increase because competition of the smaller companies will be destroyed. Only the little fish will be caught in the meshes of this bill.

In my district I have two counties and two cities served by the American Gas & Electric Co. Ninety-five percent of all the letters and telegrams I received on this bill came from the city of Marion. They came from those who favored it and from those who were opposed.

The American Gas & Electric Co. is financed by the Electric Bond & Share Co. The American Gas & Electric, through its subsidiaries, does business in more than 20 States. It has an "integrated system" that extends from North Carolina through and across the State of Indiana and into the State of Michigan. It is controlled by one of the largest holding companies in the United States. Dr. Splawn, who was the chief investigator for the committee, testified in the hearings that it is "the perfect" utility system. That eminent authority testified that the American Gas & Electric with its subsidiary companies is an "integrated system." Under section 11 of both the House and Senate bills—even under the so-called "death clause" in the Senate bill—the American Gas & Electric would not die. The law would not kill it. True, many little utility companies with their holding companies would die, but not the giant American Gas & Electric. The most that could happen to it would be that it might be forced to dispose of its holdings in two places. Those two places are Scranton, Pa., and Atlantic City, N. J. Therefore, the investors in this stock will not be affected by this bill. The same may be said of Consolidated Gas & Electric. It too is an "integrated system" that cannot be dissolved or eliminated under the terms of section 11 of this bill. I am interested in this phase of it. I am interested because despite the fact that some in my district may hold that an innocent investor in utility stock has no rights and should be deprived of his holdings without trial, I cannot bring myself to such an opinion.

I believe that those people who placed their small month-by-month savings in something their banker told them was good and on which the State Security Commission placed its stamp of approval have a right to have that saving protected as well as the man or woman who labored to obtain a farm or home has a right to protection in that farm or home. I believe also that the men who manipulated these companies merely as propositions of financial chicanery—the men who as officers of utility companies gouged both the innocent investor and undefended consumer should be punished. Neither this bill nor the Senate bill attempts to punish those guilty of such crimes. That much for the side of those who object to the passage of this bill and the "death sentence" clause. It is the side of the investor. It is the facts of this bill stripped of its legal phraseology and reduced to the language a layman may understand.

Now let us look at it from the side of those who favor the "death sentence." They consist largely of the consumer class. They have been vitally affected through the pyramiding of stock and the creation of fictitious values on which rates are based. Will the "death sentence" in this bill help citizens of my district who have been so treated? It will not! Why? Because they are consumers of the American Gas & Electric, the company that both Dr. Splawn and members of the committee hold up to the House as the "perfect system."

I call their attention to the fact that insofar as the report of the committee is concerned, insofar as the Government is concerned, so far as the bright young lawyers who drew up the bill for the administration are concerned, they do not quarrel with the American Gas & Electric, but, instead, compliment it. So pleased are they with its operation that they specifically exempt it by inserting in section 11 of both the House and Senate bills that phrase, "an integrated system."

These consumers evidently had not been told of that part of section 11 dealing with "integrated systems." If they did, they would not request me to vote for the "death sentence" on the holding companies of other States while at the same time voting to let live the company that controls the utility which serves the very people who write me from my own district. Is this what the people of my district want? I do not think so. I think they have not been told the whole truth about the bill.

For 3 days I have listened attentively to the debate. I have listened to gentlemen present the side of the utilities and those gentlemen did not tell the whole truth. They told only part of it. They left some things unsaid. I listened carefully to the gentlemen who presented the argument of the administration in behalf of the "death sentence", and they also told only part of the truth. They, too, left much unsaid.

I have waited patiently to hear the one fact that was not told. That fact is that so far as my district is concerned, whether they be privately or municipally owned, the "death sentence" clause written into either the House or Senate bill will have no effect on the utility situation whatsoever, either from the standpoint of the consumer or the investor. The "death sentence" would make no change in the operation of the utilities in the Fifth District of Indiana. As it relates to my district all the talk about the "death sentence" is a tempest in a teapot. It is "much ado about nothing."

I shall vote for the House bill as it was reported by the committee, because it provides for regulation and control. Under it the power companies can be regulated and it makes no difference how large or how small they are. The regulation will apply to all alike. There will be no discrimination. There is need for regulation and control. It is needed to protect both the consumer and investor, and it is the duty of the Government to protect both. The citizen who has been fleeced of his savings and the consumer who has been gouged by exorbitant rates are both interested. A line should be drawn for these companies and they should be required to toe the mark. The law should say "these things you may do and these things you may not do", and that law should be enforced.

The House bill will set a standard and force compliance with it. The House bill will stop the evil. The Senate bill says, "We are going to inflict the 'death penalty' on the little company but we will let the big company live." The House bill says, "We will let you all live so long as you live right. If you go wrong, you act at your peril." The House bill has as its basis regulation, limitation, and control. I am of the opinion that this is the right way, the just way, and the proper way to handle a bad situation.

There is an instruction that it is customary to give to juries in criminal cases in Indiana. It has been held error for a court to refuse to give it when requested. I favor it as good law. It reads:

> It is better for 100 guilty persons to escape than for 1 innocent person to be punished.

It is applicable in the case of the People against The Utility Holding Companies.

FIGHT FOR FULL PAYMENT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be interesting to the veterans of this country to know, and especially those members of the American Legion who are not in possession of all the facts, just exactly what has occurred in the fight for full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates. The Legion publications will not carry my statements nor present my side of the issue, and I am seriously handicapped in getting the information to the members of that great organization, as I do not have and cannot obtain a list of the names of the posts throughout the country, or of members residing in different sections. Since I have been attacked by National Commander Frank N. Belgrano and Legislative Representative John Thomas Taylor, of the American Legion, I expect to fully and candidly present the true facts to the country which will disclose corroboration of charges of double-crossing, deceit, fraud, treachery, and disloyalty.

WHAT ST. LOUIS CONVENTION SHOULD DO

The St. Louis convention of the American Legion which will be held September 23 to 26, inclusive, 1935, should go on record favoring, first, full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates without interest charges after October 1, 1931, on previous loans and should ask that the payment be made in Government money backed 100 cents on the dollar in gold that the Government now has in its possession that may be used for that purpose. It should be understood that the method of payment is secondary, but the plan is presented in order to make it easy to sell the country on such payment which requires neither additional tax-exempt bonds nor new taxes to make the payment.

CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION

The convention should also go on record asking for a congressional investigation of Wall Street's connection with important, influential officeholders and legionnaires in the American Legion and former leaders of the American Legion, in view of sworn testimony which has heretofore been presented to a congressional committee that $74,000 in actual money was carried to the Chicago convention in the fall of 1933 and was used to buy the influence of certain leaders of the American Legion to get a so-called "anti-inflation resolution" through the Chicago convention, having for its purpose protection of Wall Street's and international bankers' interests. All of the American Legion leaders are not guilty. Only a few are guilty. Those who are not guilty will be exonerated by this investigation as they should be. If this testimony under oath is true, certain leaders of the American Legion have deliberately and willfully sold out to Wall Street interests and have become disloyal to the American Legion. This sworn testimony discloses that former commanders of the American Legion, including the present commander, Frank N. Belgrano, were members of a sound-money committee; that enormous and tremendous sums of money were used by this committee in connection with well-known "king makers" of the American Legion to further the interest of this special-privileged group.

One of the "king makers", it is alleged, received $100 a day—over $9,000 in all—for his work in connection with the committee. This sound-money committee was organized to do under-handed and under-cover work for big interests against the payment of the adjusted-service certificates. All true legionnaires should resent their leaders being used as hirelings and puppets for such a group for a consideration. This sworn testimony cannot be ignored.

Only a congressional committee can get at the facts, as the testimony must be obtained under oath, and it must be in a position to sit at different places in the United States and compel the attendance of witnesses from any section of this Nation and make satisfactory arrangements for testimony from witnesses abroad if necessary.

BELGRANO DODGED INVESTIGATION

March 5, 1935, when Mr. Belgrano was testifying before the Ways and Means Committee, he was asked by Mr. McCORMACK, of Massachusetts, the following question:

> Do you propose to investigate the matter on which this resolution was adopted? [Meaning, of course, the so-called "anti-inflation resolution" adopted at the Chicago convention in 1933, which it is charged was sponsored by the Wall Street crowd and which I have referred to herein.]
>
> Mr. BELGRANO. I propose to propose to have this matter put on the agenda of the executive committee meeting, which may be held in May at Indianapolis, and ask that a resolution be adopted at that committee meeting to appropriate enough funds to cause an investigation of the entire subject. Yes, sir.
>
> Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad to hear that (p. 120 of hearings).

Mr. Belgrano admitted in his testimony that many of those that were mentioned as members of this sound-dollar group were prominent members of the American Legion; others not.

The point is, Commander Belgrano promised to make an investigation of this matter through the American Legion and to furnish sufficient funds to cause the investigation of the entire subject. I am informed that he did put it on the agenda, as he promised to do. The presiding officer at the May meeting, when that point had been reached on the agenda, said: "I will now entertain a motion to investigate the sound-money scandal", or words to that effect.

There were assembled 56 executive committeemen from different departments. I am told that you could have heard a pin drop and that they remained just as silent as 56 monuments in a cemetery at midnight. No word was spoken and no motion was made, so that part of the agenda was behind them, and Mr. Belgrano failed to carry out his promise.

SUGGESTIONS TO LEGIONNAIRES

As an humble member of the American Legion and as one who believes in its principles and believes it is one of the greatest organizations in the world, I suggest that the local posts of the American Legion and State conventions should keep in mind the following facts:

First. That delegates should be sent to the national convention that will represent the wishes and views of the rank and file of the American Legion.

Second. That they should be instructed to vote against any "king maker" candidate for commander and should vote for the congressional investigation of the unfortunate scandal occurring at the Chicago convention, which smells to high heaven.

Third. That the next national commander should be pledged to clean up the national headquarters of the American Legion and to especially oust John Thomas Taylor, who has become harmful instead of helpful to the organization.

Fourth. That a large group of those who attend the convention will be there on the expense of the national organization and will feel obligated to support the national commander, since he is authorizing their expenses. Many of this group will make every effort to hamper and hinder rank-and-file representatives.

Fifth. It is a well-known fact that strong influences emanate from national headquarters down to State organizations through certain favors the national organization can extend and by holding out hope that these State officers will be taken care of in the future with national headquarters positions. Hope is held out to these State officials of political advancement in the American Legion and committee assignments that will permit them to receive their traveling and hotel expenses at national conventions. I urge that the rank and file of the American Legion and the posts throughout each State see that their group is properly represented in both State and national offices and assignments. The "king makers" would not last a minute were it not for their interlocking arrangements with many State officials of the Legion throughout the country.

Sixth. The Legion Monthly should be converted into an instructive and informative magazine in the interest of the veterans.

METHOD OF PAYMENT SECONDARY

In the beginning, I want to make it plain that my fight for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates commenced before the depression with one thought in mind—the payment of this just and honest debt. The method of payment with me has always been secondary, although we were forced to suggest a method of payment in order that we could convince the country that a debt that is not legally payable until 1945 should be paid now. In doing that, it was necessary for us to advocate a plan that would not increase the national debt and would not cause new tax-exempt bonds to be issued or new taxes to be raised. The plan of payment made the measure popular and brought to our support business men, farmers, wage earners, and many groups and classes throughout the Nation that would not have, under any circumstances, favored the payment by any plan that would have increased their taxes or increased the national debt. We recognized the fact that the veterans alone could not put this proposition over; that we had to have help from the people in general, and in order to do that, this method was used to popularize it. I have also been interested in a plan that would put actual money into the pockets of the veterans and not merely secure the enactment of another law that would give the veterans promises only, such as the Vinson-Belgrano bill, that merely authorized Congress to make an appropriation to pay this debt. That bill would have given the veterans another promise but no money.

MIAMI RESOLUTION

The Miami convention of the American Legion in October 1934 passed a resolution asking for the full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates. At the same convention what we know now to be a grievous and fatal mistake for the veterans was that Frank N. Belgrano, Jr., a Wall Street and international banker, foisted on the Legion by the "king makers", was selected as national commander to carry out that mandate. A coin was flipped by the "king makers." Belgrano won and the veterans have lost.

ANOTHER MISTAKE

Another great mistake was made when this national commander selected John Thomas Taylor legislative representative for the Legion, for the purpose of carrying out this mandate, as Taylor was representative of the Legion in 1924, when the present act, which was unfair in many ways and cheated the veterans out of 7 years' interest, was enacted into law. Taylor, sharing the views of his fellow Pennsylvanian, Andrew W. Mellon, opposed the cash payment in 1924, permitted many injustices to go into the act, and made the Members of Congress believe that the great American Legion was behind such an act, caused it to be enacted. Remember, Taylor was the man for the American Legion who put the stamp of approval upon the law that causes each veteran to receive an adjusted-service certificate due 27 years after his services were rendered. The act that permitted the banks to get the larger part of each certificate as interest on a few small loans. And he was the man who was being called upon by Commander Belgrano to go before the same Congress that had enacted the law in compliance with his wishes and get it revised to do the opposite of what he had advocated in 1924.

TAYLOR SAYS IGNORANCE OF VETERANS CAUSED AGITATION

As evidence of the fact that Taylor was not the man to lead this fight and should never have been considered for it a moment, he appeared before a Senate committee April 23, 1935, and let the committee members know that so far as he was concerned, the act of 1924 was all right and further gave them to understand that it was by reason of the ignorance of the veterans on the subject that caused so much agitation.

Taylor testified—page 93 of the hearings (Apr. 23, 1935):

> There was no necessity for any changes in that law until the depression came along.

This is contradictory to every argument we have ever made in favor of full payment, since the only thing we have to base our claim on is the justice of our claim, which is supported by the unanswerable arguments that the veterans were unlawfully defrauded out of 7 years' interest on what was confessed was due them. Taylor further gave the committee members to understand on the same page of the hearings that the veterans were ignorant, did not understand how the amount they were receiving was arrived at, and by reason of this ignorance, they had gained the impression that they were entitled to all of it now.

The truth is that the veterans of this country are better informed on the subject than John Thomas Taylor. They understand that Andrew W. Mellon caused them to be cheated out of 7 years' interest and that Mr. Taylor O. K.'d the wrong. They understand, too, that if they are given this $1 and $1.25 a day as of the time they rendered the services, with a reasonable rate of interest from that time, that they were entitled to an amount equal to the full face or maturity value of their certificates on October 1, 1931. If Andrew W. Mellon had hired a person to carry out his wishes and perpetrate wrongs on veterans in 1924, he could not have received better cooperation and more efficient service than John Thomas Taylor rendered.

I resent what Mr. Taylor said on page 94 of the hearings, in which he stated:

> But out in the country the millions of veterans in the remote sections of the country did not understand it.
>
> Things that are done here in Washington on veterans' legislation, by the time they are 200 miles from Washington, the veteran does not understand it.

In another part of his testimony, on page 94, Mr. Taylor, discussing the question of interest, said:

> There was no necessity for explaining that to them. • • •

Thereby leaving the impression that the veterans of this Nation are so ignorant that they cannot understand simple questions of computing interest from the time that the services were rendered instead of from 1925.

BELGRANO'S POSITION

Let me briefly discuss the national commander's position. In the fall of 1932 the American Legion convention at Portland, Oreg., passed a resolution providing for the full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates. After that time, the resolution was a continuing one. So after that time and until January 14, 1935, it was presumed that the American Legion was supporting my bill, which was receiving the support of the other veterans of the country. As the American Legion did not cause to be introduced another bill and being mandated to support the legislation, it was presumed to be supporting the bill before the country. However, Mr. Belgrano found himself in this position: If he supported the bill that the American Legion was presumed to have been supporting from the fall of 1932 and during the years of 1933 and 1934, it would cause the veterans to be paid in a way that the bankers would be denied their usual cut or rake-off on Government securities. This was contrary to what he calls an orthodox method of financing. Presuming he was acting in what he thought to be the interest of the American Legion in opposing such a bill, it was very convenient for him to advocate a bill that would give the bankers $2,000,000,000 in the form of a bonus in order to pay the veterans $2,000,000,000 on a debt. Like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky, on January 14, 1935, Commander Belgrano caused to be introduced in the House of Representatives, H. R. 3896, known as the "Vinson bill" or "Belgrano's bankers' bonus bill", providing for the payment of these certificates in what he called the orthodox method of financing.

EXCUSE FOR VINSON-BELGRANO BILL

The excuse for the introduction of the bill was that many bills providing for the payment in silver, by inflation, by levying taxes, and other methods were pending and it was necessary for him to cause to be introduced a bill that would carry out the Miami resolution and nothing more. The truth is at that time there was no bill pending in the House calling for the payment of these certificates in silver, by inflation, or by levying taxes. This statement was absolutely untrue and may be cited as an illustration of the type of propaganda that was used to excuse Belgrano for taking up the bankers' side.

NO MONEY FOR VETERANS IN BELGRANO BILL

Furthermore, the bill, if passed and enacted into law, would not permit the veterans to get a single penny; it merely authorized the payment to be made. However, when it is appropriated the bankers will have a cinch on their usual drag or no money for the veterans. I obtained from the Secretary of the Treasury an official ruling to the effect that if such a bill were to become a law another bill would then have to be introduced and the same hard fight conducted in order to get the veterans their money. Many years ago, in the early days of this campaign, I made the same mistake by introducing an authorization bill. It was soon discovered, corrected, and never made again. Belgrano refused to profit by my experience.

ANOTHER FAKE EXCUSE FOR BELGRANO-BANKERS' BONUS BILL

Another excuse was given for the introduction of this bill that a careful check-up had been made in the Senate and the Vinson-Belgrano bill could receive a two-thirds majority over a veto there. This statement was absolutely untrue, and I challenge now Commander Belgrano and Legislative Representative Taylor to name two-thirds of the Senators who would have voted for the Vinson bill over a Presidential veto, as claimed by them when the Vinson bill was introduced.

The truth is that our bill, H. R. 1, the Patman bill, had considerably more support in the Senate than any other bill. As positive and unmistakable evidence that the statement that two-thirds of the Senators would support the Vinson-Belgrano bill over a veto was absolutely untrue, Commander Belgrano did not even have the Belgrano bankers' bonus bill introduced in the Senate. He cannot make the veterans of this Nation believe that that bill was so strong in that body in the face of the fact that it never has until this good day been introduced in the Senate of the United States. If it were so strong, it would have been easy for the bill to have been introduced in the Senate instead of in the House on January 14, 1935, and passed in the Senate, and by that time our bill would have been passed in the House, and a conference committee would have been appointed from each House, differences would have been ironed out, a bill passed that would have received the maximum support in overriding the veto, and no differences would have come up between the veterans of this country. The fact that the bill was introduced in the House and not in the Senate was proof that both Taylor and Belgrano were more interested in defeating the proposal by causing a fight among veterans themselves than in receiving the payment of these adjusted-service certificates.

Both Taylor and Belgrano were drafted into the fight for this proposal. They were both against it, and have opposed it for 6 years. Certainly it was not very displeasing to them for it to be lost. I have had to fight not only the opposition of our opponents but these leaders of the American Legion, who were supposed to help me.

H. R. 1 SUPPORTED BY NONVETERANS

March 4 and 5, 1935, there was a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means on House bill no. 1, the Patman bill, and H. R. 3896, the Vinson-Belgrano bill. At this hearing I was the first witness and presented every argument that could be presented, based upon my 6 years' experience, that would justify this payment. I answered every question that could possibly arise that was considered unfavorable to our proposal. We had the side of right and justice, and logic and reason were used to support the arguments. Upon every occasion I said that my primary interest was full cash payment and was secondarily interested in the method that was used.

Many others, representing farmers, wage earners, and business men, testified before the committee in support of our bill. It was the only bill that had nonveterans' support. James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, presented a logical, convincing, and unanswerable argument in favor of the proposal and advised the committee that his organization, as well as a majority of the three or four million unorganized veterans, were 100 percent behind our bill.

Contrast this with the testimony of Taylor, Belgrano, and two other members of the official family of the American Legion, who presented not a single new argument in favor of the payment of these certificates, but spent almost their entire time denouncing me, my proposal, and disclosing a deliberate intention to divide the veterans, and the nonveterans as well, on this great question which would cause defeat. Taylor criticized me before the committee for having filed discharge petitions to force consideration of my bill in 1932, 1934, and 1935. He said that he was opposed to that method. The veterans of this country believe that I was working in their interest when I was doing everything that I possibly could do to get consideration of the bill that they were vitally interested in, yet Taylor in his testimony criticized me severely for being so active in their behalf.

BELGRANO VIOLATED INSTRUCTIONS BY OPPOSING ANY FULL-PAYMENT BILL

It is true that Belgrano did not have a mandate from the national convention to support my bill, although it was the only one that complied with the important parts of the resolution and the only one considered by Congress and the country for years. It is also true, however, that Belgrano was violating the resolution when he opposed my bill or any other bill that provided for full and immediate cash payment of these certificates, regardless of the method of payment proposed in the bill. He violated his instructions when he opposed any bill that carried out the Miami resolution.

HOUSE FAVORED PATMAN BILL

A majority of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, who favored any bill, favored my bill. Taylor and Belgrano, by getting a combination between the Republican bloc on the committee and the Democrats who opposed any bill, succeeded by a vote of 14 to 11 in getting the Vinson bill reported out favorably to the House. On the House floor, the Vinson bill never did, at any time, receive more 120 votes out of 435 of Members who favored paying the adjusted-service certificates in full according to any method whatsoever.

The bill's main support came from those who opposed any type of legislation on this subject. The House, after a fair hearing, voted 207 to 204 in favor of the Patman bill.

BELGRANO REFUSES HELP IN SENATE FIGHT

If, at that time, we had gone to the Senate with the help of the American Legion leaders, we would have doubtless obtained a two-thirds majority in the Senate, but Belgrano still refused to support the bill and continued his fight before the Senate Finance Committee in opposition to my bill. Taylor also appeared in opposition to my bill. It will disgust any member of the American Legion to read Taylor's and Belgrano's testimony before that committee. Taylor defended the 1924 act and, in effect, said if it were not for the ignorance of the veterans, they would not be asking for full payment; that only those within 100 or 200 miles of Washington had any information; and Belgrano did not intelligently present the subject. He disclosed gross ignorance of the entire subject matter and even said that if the veterans are given credit for the 7 years' interest, the full amount will not be due until October 1935. He hurt our cause instead of helping us. If he had in mind securing the enactment of a bill that would give the bankers their usual drag or no bill at all, he could not have done more effective work to that end.

Before that committee I very quickly and promptly said that I was primarily interested in full and immediate payment of these certificates and only secondarily interested in the method of payment, that if I could not get approval of any bill I would gladly support the Vinson-Belgrano bill. On the other hand, Mr. Belgrano, after much questioning, would not come out and say that he would like to see the veterans get their money according to the Patman plan if Congress would not adopt any other plan, thereby showing that he was for the bankers first and the veterans second. In answer to questions he said the Senators could vote any way they wanted to on the floor if the Vinson-Belgrano bill was defeated, and the vote was on the Patman bill or no bill (Senate hearings, p. 117, Apr. 23, 1935).

WHAT I HAVE DONE IN FIGHT

Since I as author of this legislation have been attacked by the elected leader of the American Legion, I feel it my duty to tell you something about the fight I have made, even though I may be accused of dealing in personal matters. You probably want to know something about the man that introduced the first bill in the House of Representatives providing for the full and immediate cash payment, which was on May 28, 1929, and who has consistently and persistently continued the fight until this good day.

First. I have visited every State in this Nation in behalf of this cause, have visited practically every principal city, and in many places engaged in joint debate on the platform and over the radio with those who were attacking the veterans and especially this proposal.

Second. Prepared at an enormous expense to myself and almost 2 years' time a table that discloses approximately the amount of money the veterans in each county in the United States will receive in the event a bill is passed providing for full payment, with no interest charge on loans after October 1, 1931. That table is just as new today as the day it was made, as the bill now pending will cause the payments as indicated in that table. Making this computation was a tremendous job and very expensive. Each county, 3,071 in all, represented a separate problem and many factors received consideration.

Third. Prepared and caused to be distributed a booklet for the sole and only purpose of selling this cause to the people. This booklet caused me a personal loss of more than $1,000. My loss would have been much greater had not the Veterans of Foreign Wars minimized it by purchasing several thousands of booklets. The national headquarters of the American Legion purchased 10 for $2.50 and used my information that I had spent years of time to compile at my expense without even giving me credit for it.

Fourth. The satisfaction of knowing that I have been working for a cause that will not only help the veterans, but all the people of the country as well, I have been amply and fully repaid for everything that I have done and my fight will continue. My successful efforts for the disabled and their families have many, many times repaid me for the sacrifices in time or money that I have made for the veterans' cause. The knowledge that just one veteran and his family received a substantial sum in 1931, which relieved distress in his family, doubly and amply repays me for any sacrifice made, and there were thousands of such cases.

No one will deny that I have traveled more miles, made more speeches, spent more hours of investigation and searching for valuable information that would help our cause, advanced more reasons why this debt should be paid, than any other person in America.

Probably many would be interested in knowing that I am not a rich man; I am a poor man; have always been poor and probably always will be, not looking for riches or personal private fortune, but hope as an insignificant Member of Congress and as an humble member of the American Legion to render the veterans and the country a constructive service. When I entered Congress I owed $5,000 which probably would have been repaid by this time had I not been compelled to spend large sums of money answering such attacks that have been made upon me by both Belgrano and Taylor, both inside and outside of the Legion and in selling this cause to the country and Congress. Instead of owing $5,000 today, I owe $10,000. I am not complaining about it in the least; I am happy over the fact that I have, in a small way at least, caused good, constructive thoughts to be disseminated throughout the rank and file of this country, which will not only help the veterans and their dependents but the entire Nation and all the people as well.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

Taylor and Belgrano, in order to try to arouse the members of the American Legion against me, tried to make the Vinson-Belgrano bill and the Patman bill an issue between the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, an excellent way to drive a wedge between the veterans. Many Legionnaires, doubtless, acting under their instructions, even went so far as to claim that I was sponsoring the Veterans of Foreign Wars, trying to hurt the Legion. It is absolutely untrue. It is true the Veterans of Foreign Wars have been with me in this fight. I express gratitude and appreciation for their help, not only for myself, but for all other veterans as well, including the rank and file of the American Legion, who are sponsoring our cause. My policy has always been and is now as a Member of Congress to work with, cooperate with, coordinate my efforts with every person and organization who is sincerely working in the same direction that I am working for a cause, but not to sponsor any of them. I have not been sponsoring any organization in this fight. If any organization benefits by reason of their cooperation with me, their leaders are entitled to credit for using good judgment and manifesting a spirit of cooperation in the direction that will likely get the best results.

MEMBER OF ALL THREE WORLD WAR VETERANS' ORGANIZATIONS

I have been an active member of the American Legion since 1920, helped to organize the first post in my home town, and was the post commander of it the first year; have been a delegate to State and National conventions ever since, and have at all times worked in what I believed to be in the interest of the American Legion. I am also a member of the Disabled American Veterans, having a service-connected disability, which prevented my going overseas during the war. I am also proud of my membership as an honorary member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It is a militant organization, whose leader, James E. Van Zandt, is one of the most effective crusaders for the veterans' cause in this Nation. George K. Brobeck, legislative representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, is also a militant and cooperative friend of the veterans and an effective campaigner for their cause. There is plenty of room in this country for these three great organizations. The spirit of noncooperation with other organizations and friends of the veterans' cause that has been manifested in the recent past by certain leaders of the American Legion should be discontinued and a spirit of cooperation should be invoked instead. Veterans are not helped by fighting among themselves. I have tried to keep down such fights, but received no cooperation from the present leadership of the American Legion.

MEETING OF STEERING COMMITTEE FOR H. R. 1

About 2 weeks ago the steering committee in the House of Representatives for the passage of H. R. 1 had a meeting which was attended by practically all of the 22 members. It was decided that we will continue to fight primarily for the full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates, and that we are only secondarily, as we have always been, interested in the method of payment; that we stand ready and are on the alert during this session of Congress to take advantage of any opportunity that will permit us to secure the passage of a law to pay these certificates. The members of that committee are as follows:

Wright Patman, chairman; Abe Murdock, secretary; Adolph J. Sabath, Illinois; James G. Scrugham, Nevada; Arthur H. Greenwood, Indiana; William M. Colmer, Mississippi; Jennings Randolph, West Virginia; Clarence Cannon, Missouri; Wm. P. Connery, Jr., Massachusetts; William M. Berlin, Pennsylvania; Frank Hancock, North Carolina; Jed Johnson, Oklahoma; James P. Richards, South Carolina; Gerald J. Boileau, Wisconsin; Andrew J. May, Kentucky; Fred H. Hildebrandt, South Dakota; Martin F. Smith, Washington; Martin Dies, Texas; John E. Miller, Arkansas; George A. Dondero, Michigan; Paul J. Kvale, Minnesota; Roy E. Ayers, Montana.

I am personally greatly indebted to the members of this steering committee for their very able, loyal, and effective support of this cause. The House victory was not my victory, it was our victory. Without this good steering committee, success would not have been possible.

There are many other Members of this House who are also entitled to receive the greatest recognition possible for their contribution to this successful battle.

SUCCESS AGAINST GREAT ODDS

Many people wonder how it was possible for our bill, H. R. 1, the Patman bill, to be successful in the House when it was opposed by the following groups:

First. Those who were opposed to any bill.

Second. Those who were in favor of any other proposal.

Third. Those who were in favor of the Vinson-Belgrano bankers' bonus bill.

Fourth. The Republican minority.

Fifth. A majority of the Ways and Means Committee.

Sixth. The House leadership.

Seventh. The administration forces.

Notwithstanding all of this opposition, out of 531 Members of the House and Senate we lacked only 9 votes of receiving a two-thirds majority in each House. Our bill received over 75 percent of the combined votes of the two Houses. This is the only bill that ever stood five tests in the House of Representatives in 2 days. The Vinson-Belgrano supporters were allowed two of these tests. We won because we had the right side, because we had a good organization to keep the Membership and the country informed, and because we had logic and reason to support every argument that was made. In fact, our arguments could not be answered.

H. R. 1

This bill is not dead. It is pending before the Ways and Means Committee at this time, and if the issue is not disposed of at this session of Congress, when Congress meets again, either in special session or on January 3, 1936, the passage of the bill will be insisted upon. It is unnecessary to file a new bill. H. R. 1 is very much alive and will remain alive until it is either enacted into law or until the end of the Seventy-fourth Congress, which will be January 3, 1937.

If we are not successful this session of Congress, those of us who are sponsoring this bill expect to make the same vigorous, determined, and persistent fight when Congress meets again that we have always made.

If the American Legion convention at St. Louis elects a commander who will work with us and will appoint representatives who will work with us, I can personally assure the veterans that they will get their money in a very short time when the next Congress meets if we are unable to secure full payment at this session.

BELGRANO AND TAYLOR EITHER WITHHOLDING MONEY FROM VETERANS OR DELIBERATELY TELLING FALSEHOODS

Commander Belgrano and Legislative Representative Taylor are either willfully preventing the veterans from receiving their money in full payment of their certificates or they have deliberately and willfully made false statements to the veterans. This statement is based upon the fact that they claim that the Vinson-Belgrano bill had pledged to its support two-thirds of the Members of the United States Senate. If that statement is true, there was no reason on earth why the bill was not introduced in the Senate the very day that the President's veto was sustained or the next day or any day after then, or even today, and the bill passed in the Senate, passed in the House, and if vetoed, it would have been overridden, if they are telling the truth. Therefore, if they have told the truth, it is within their power to immediately get a bill passed that will give the veterans their money. Have they deliberately told a falsehood or do they desire to withhold the money from the veterans? The truth is the Vinson-Belgrano bill has never had the support in the Senate that the Patman bill had. Belgrano and Taylor know this.

THE SENATE VOTE

If the Vinson-Belgrano bill had been placed on final passage in the Senate this year, it would not have received near as many votes as the Patman bill received, because many senators would not vote for the Vinson bill since it would require additional bonds and new taxes, but would gladly vote for the Patman bill, which would pay the debt to the veterans without creating a new debt. Therefore, the Patman bill received the maximum strength in the Senate. However, if the test should come again, every Senator who voted for the Patman bill will be under obligations to vote for any bill that provides for full and immediate cash payment. If he does not, he will be accused of favoring the issuance of new money first and the veterans second. I am sure they will not place themselves in that position.

Even with this added strength, evidently the supporters of the Vinson-Belgrano bill do not believe that they have a two-thirds vote in the Senate or they would have it introduced in the Senate immediately and passed. If it has a two-thirds vote and they know it, they are withholding the money from the veterans if they do not cause it to be introduced in the Senate at once and passed.

NO MONEY FOR VETERANS IN ORIGINAL VINSON-BELGRANO BILL

Section 5 of the Vinson-Belgrano bill stated—

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such amount that may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

That meant that if the bill should pass and become a law another hard fight would then have to be made to get the money. It was estimated that full and immediate cash payment with remission of interest as provided in the Patman bill at the most would cost the Government $2,263,545,684. The veterans would get about $2,000,000,000 of this. On May 3, 1935, when the bill was pending in the Senate, Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma offered the following amendment:

SEC. 6. There is hereby appropriated from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $2,263,545,684 to carry out the provisions of this act.

There was a roll-call vote on this question; 57 Senators voting for it and 23 against. Eighteen of these 23 voting against it also voted against the bill on final passage. The bill in its original form gave Congressmen a good storm cellar. They could vote for the bill and then fall out over the method of payment, which would result in the veterans getting a law passed but no money.

SENATE CHANGED BILL

After the adoption of this amendment the bill was no longer the original Vinson-Belgrano bill, but was amended over their protest to put the money into the bill, so that the veterans would get their money if the bill passed.

If the American Legion ever offers another bill asking for an appropriation of such a large sum of money, it should never under any circumstances offer a mere authorization bill, but should actually put the appropriation in the proposed bill.

NO ATTACK ON AMERICAN LEGION

Belgrano and Taylor continue to insist that I am attacking the American Legion and the American Legion officials. This is not true. I am a loyal legionnaire; have never attacked the American Legion, but have attacked certain elected and appointed leaders like Taylor and Belgrano, who have betrayed the rank and file. My efforts in this direction are constructive and will have a tendency to save the Legion instead of harming it.

It grieves me to take issue with any national commander of the American Legion. I respect the position that he holds. My belief, however, is that no really red-blooded American who has worn the uniform of this country will expect me to sit idly by and not defend myself from the wild propaganda and vicious attacks made upon me by the kingmaker selected national commander of the American Legion and his hired hand, John Thomas Taylor.

WHO STARTED FIGHT

I did not start the fight between myself and Belgrano and Taylor. It will probably be interesting to many to know how this fight started. On January 14, 1935, the Vinson-Belgrano bill was introduced. If that had been all that was done, I probably would not have said a word, but would have continued to fight for my own proposal and left the matter to the House without making any attack whatsoever on the elected leader of the American Legion who caused the bill to be introduced. However, Belgrano and Taylor did not stop with the introduction of the bill. They immediately got out a statement for the American Legion in which I was denounced in the most critical and caustic terms, and all of those supporting my proposal were called idiots and lunatics. Even then I hesitated to get up a fight with the American Legion leaders, so my steering committee was called together, and upon the motion of Congressman SCRUGHAM, which was unanimously adopted, we sought a conference with Commander Belgrano for the purpose of ironing out our differences, and reuniting our forces for the purpose of presenting a united shoulder-to-shoulder fight before Congress and the country for the one purpose of getting the adjusted-service certificates paid in full. Although Commander Belgrano was in Washington and accepted our invitation, he refused to attend the meeting after the appointment was made, and refused to confer with our committee. There was nothing left for us to do except to answer the unjustified attack made upon the supporters of our bill, and to disclose to the veterans the possible motives behind their actions.

SENATORS WHO OPPOSED ANY BILL SUPPORTED VINSON-BELGRANO BILL

In the Senate on May 7, 1935, on a direct vote to substitute the Vinson bill for the Patman bill the vote was 35 for to 52 against. Democratic leaders and the strongest administration supporters were about equally divided on the vote.

Forty-five of the 52 who voted against the Vinson bill and in favor of the Patman bill were Democrats. Thirty-two of these Democrats supported the bill on final passage and only 13 voted against it. This is a complete answer to the argument that the Patman bill was supported largely by those who were opposed to the legislation. Just the reverse is true.

Out of the 35 who voted to substitute the Vinson bill for the Patman bill 19 of them voted against the bill on final passage, and only 16 of the 35 voted for the bill on final passage, which goes to show that the Members of the Senate who were opposed to any bill were making an effort to substitute the Vinson bill, knowing it had no chance over a Presidential veto. The same tactics were used in the House. This information is contrary to reports put out by Belgrano and Taylor. The figures may be verified by consulting the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, pages 7066–7068.

Seven Republican Members voted against substituting the Vinson bill for the Patman bill and all of them voted for the bill on final passage. Contrast this with the 15 Republicans who voted to substitute the Vinson bill for the Patman bill. Only 5 of them voted for the bill on final passage, while 10 voted against it on final passage.

IN SENATE AMENDMENTS WERE IN ORDER TO PATMAN BILL AFTER VINSON BILL DEFEATED

Belgrano and Taylor falsely claim that after the enemies of any bill in the Senate succeeded in substituting the Patman bill, they then voted against the bill on final passage. The truth is the Patman bill passed the House and was referred to a Senate committee. The Senate committee reported it to the Senate with a recommendation that it be passed with an amendment, which was the Harrison bill. When the bill came before the Senate the first question was whether or not the Harrison bill would be substituted as an amendment for the Patman bill. The Vinson bill was substituted for the Harrison bill. Then the vote was on substituting the Vinson bill for the Patman bill. The Vinson bill lost. It was then in order for any Senator to move to amend the Patman bill by changing it in any way that he desired. He could have sent up an amendment to strike out the money feature and insert a provision that it be paid directly out of the Treasury if he had desired. The reason it was not done was because they did not have a majority of the votes and certainly did not have two-thirds as claimed. Any inference that the Vinson supporters were maneuvered into a parliamentary situation that caused them to lose, although having a majority, is absolutely unfounded for the reasons I have herein outlined.

AFTER BILL PASSED SENATE

After the bill passed the Senate by a tremendous vote, and for several days while it was pending before that body on a friendly motion to reconsider, which would enable us to have time to get all the friends of the measure together for the purpose of coordinating our efforts and making an appeal to the President not to veto the bill, or, in the event the bill was vetoed, to pass it over a Presidential veto, there were many conferences attended by the House steering committee for the passage of H. R. 1, and the Senate steering committee, which was composed of 10 or 12 Senators who were leading the fight in that body. At these meetings we made every effort to get Commander Belgrano or Legislative Representative Taylor to attend and work with us. This they absolutely refused to do. They made no effort, so far as I know, to get the bill passed in the Senate after the Vinson-Belgrano bill was defeated. Neither did they make any effort to get the veto overridden. The next day after the bill passed the Senate, Belgrano was on the firing line at Ogden, Utah. Neither Taylor nor Belgrano were seen on Capitol Hill after the bill passed the Senate, so far as I know, until the veto was sustained, except Taylor was seen one time near the Senate floor. They refused to aid us in any way, but, on the other hand, caused us to lose, we know, 4 votes on the vote to override the President's veto. If these leaders had really wanted this legislation passed, I believe the American Legion was worth the necessary 9 votes in the Senate, and this number could have been obtained if they had really tried to obtain them, but as it was the American Legion leaders did not help us to get one single vote but caused us to lose 4 votes.

AFTER VETO SUSTAINED ANOTHER ATTACK ON ME

After the veto was sustained, instead of making an effort to pass a bill that Taylor and Belgrano claimed had more than two-thirds pledged to its support in the Senate—and we all know any bill of this nature will receive more than two-thirds vote in the House—they caused to be issued in the June 1935 National Legionnaire another attack on me, in which they referred to me as follows:

An upstanding fellow and the bonus racket had served him as a most reliable vehicle. As a vote getter it can't be beat. JOHN RANKIN, of Mississippi, had a monopoly on it for a while, but when he became bigger of stature, so to speak, when his interests broadened to the point of having designs on the leadership, he turned the veterans' vehicle over to Wright.

It is not helpful to have the cause publicized as a racket, and, secondly, although Judge RANKIN has been an able supporter of this movement, he never did claim to have the leadership of it. I introduced the first bill in the House on the subject and have continued the fight ever since. The statement in another part also refers to the bill as an inflationary bill, which is absolutely untrue. It is not inflationary, and Belgrano and Taylor know that it is not inflationary. Dr. O. W. M. Sprague, Hon. Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Mr. Eccles, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and former Secretary of the Treasury Mr. McAdoo said it was not an inflationary bill. If Belgrano and Taylor continue to say it is, we must presume that they are deliberately attempting to mislead the veterans. In this same publication there were many other attacks upon me, and the article indicates that Taylor and Belgrano are very, very sore because I have persistently advocated this cause. They have always been against it, and it is evidently pleasing to them that the veto was not overridden. Remember, this is attack no. 2, after the veto was sustained, when I had not said or done anything, except to try to get this bill passed, that would justify this attack.

THE THIRD ATTACK ON ME

Attack no. 3 is in the American Legion Monthly for July 1935, by Banker Belgrano and Hired-Hand Taylor. I would like to answer this article and get it published in the American Legion Monthly, but I know that this publication will never carry a line favorable to me as long as king-maker commanders control it as they are doing now. This message will reach very few veterans and very few people compared to the publications put out by Belgrano and Taylor. However, with my limited means, and to the full extent of my ability, I expect to continue to defend the veterans' cause for the full payment of these certificates even though I have the opposition of those who claim to be friendly to the cause but who are betraying the veterans who elected them. Belgrano and Taylor in their fight against me have had the assistance of Wall Street and international banking groups that we know have spent enormous sums of money in opposition to the cause which I advocate. The $74,000 that was spent at Chicago was chicken feed compared to the total amount expended for the purpose of defeating this cause. A witness testified under oath that Belgrano and other high officials of the American Legion were members of the sound-dollar committee who represented the front for these big bankers in opposing this legislation.

THE FOURTH ATTACK ON ME

The National Legionnaire for July 1935 contains new and additional attacks on me by Belgrano and Taylor. In this publication they infer that everybody has given up in the fight except themselves. The truth is, they have never gotten in the fight, and no one who has been carrying on has given up. They also quote a few editorials from newspapers which say that the inflation issue beat the veterans. They failed to print the editorials from some of the greatest newspapers in this country favorable to my side of the question and showing my bill was not inflationary. They are just picking out unfavorable editorials and printing them, giving the veterans only one side, and refusing to give my side.

VETERANS PICTURED AS IGNORANT CLASS

Belgrano and Taylor evidently believe, as Taylor testified before the Senate committee, that the veterans are a very ignorant class, and very few of them who live more than 100 or 200 miles from Washington know what it is all about. With that assumption and with the means of communication within their grasp, which I do not possess, they probably expect to crush me and thereby destroy the cause that they have always opposed but have been pretending to defend.

BELGRANO'S BANKERS' BONUS BILL OR PATMAN BILL

If the Vinson-Belgrano bankers' bonus bill had passed, it would have increased the earnings of Commander Belgrano's banks in California; New York City; Rome, Italy; and London, England, from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 a year. It would have increased the earnings of his California banks alone more than three and a half million dollars a year, without being out a penny and without running any risk whatsoever, whereas under the Patman bill the Government would have used its own credit free and the commander's banks would have been denied this $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 annual bonus.

HOW OUR CAUSE WAS HARMED

Our cause for full payment of these certificates was not helped but was harmed when the American Legion officials published a statement to the effect that the average member of the American Legion has an income of twice that of the average general income. This was a falsehood and led the country to believe that all veterans were twice as well off as other people. These leaders also declared that 94 percent of the American Legionnaires carry insurance policies averaging over $12,000. I do not believe there is a word of truth to this. It looks like both of these statements were made for the purpose of hurting our cause by causing the people of the country to believe that the veterans are twice as well off as any other class.

Every veteran in this country who has all of the information on this subject knows that we are criticized by Belgrano and Taylor because we would not put our heads in the bankers' laps and permit them, if any bill were passed and enacted, to receive a bonus of $2,000,000,000 in order that we might pay the veterans a debt of $2,000,000,000. They know that Banker Belgrano and John Thomas Taylor are not displeased because the bill was defeated, and they also know that they did not make an honest, sincere effort to secure passage of the legislation.

HOUSE FORCES SHOULD NOT AGAIN BE DIVIDED

If the leaders of the American Legion are determined to sponsor another bill for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates, they should certainly not commence such a bill in the House where our forces are united. They should commence the bill in the Senate, the body that has always killed the legislation. Furthermore, no bill should be introduced that merely provides an authorization for an appropriation as the Vinson-Belgrano bill. It should actually carry the appropriation.

EXAMPLE OF MISLEADING

As an example of how Belgrano and Taylor have attempted to mislead the veterans, I refer you to the fact that the Vinson-Belgrano bill does not carry out the mandate of the Miami convention. I will call your attention to one specific instance—the Miami resolution says that the American Legion asked for a refund of all interest paid. The Vinson-Belgrano bill does not contain such a provision, yet Belgrano and Taylor continue to say that the bill complies exactly with the Miami resolution. Other instances can be cited. It is true that the Miami resolution was embodied in the bill in the preamble, but a preamble never becomes a law. It is thrown in the wastebasket because it is before the enacting clause of the bill and does not have the effect of law.

ANOTHER FALSE REPRESENTATION

Belgrano and Taylor have attempted to make the members of the American Legion believe that I claimed in my speech on January 30, 1935, in the House that the Miami convention of the American Legion endorsed my bill. I never did make such a claim and do not make such a claim now. In answer to a question propounded to me by Representative FISH, of New York, I stated positively that I did not claim that my bill was endorsed by this convention. I did say then, I do say now, that my bill was the only one that complied with that part of the resolution which says that the payment should be made in a way that no new or additional debt will be created. All other bills will create a new debt.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS KNOW WHO HAS CARRIED ON THIS FIGHT

Many veterans know me and know Belgrano and Taylor, and know our records. I am sure as to what their judgment will be. There are many thousands of legionnaires, however, who do not know any of us personally. I suggest that they write their Congressman regardless of the way he voted, whether for the Patman bill, the Belgrano bill, or against any bill, and I am convinced that you will need no other evidence to refute the wild propaganda that Belgrano, Taylor, and the American Legion national headquarters are using against me in an effort to justify the double-crossing they gave their members. Members of Congress are fair, and I am willing to abide by their judgment. They know I have done and am now doing everything within my power to get these certificates paid.

ADDITIONAL STRENGTH EACH SESSION

Our bill passed the House June 15, 1932, by a vote of 211 for to 176 against.

March 12, 1934, it passed the House by a vote of 295 for to 125 against.

On March 22, 1935, it passed the House by a vote of 318 for to 90 against.

It passed the Senate May 7, 1935, by a vote of 55 for to 33 against. An effort was made to substitute the Vinson bill, which lost by a vote of 35 for to 52 against. It is ridiculous to say that two-thirds of the Senators wanted a certain bill and could not get it.

On May 22, 1935, on the question of overriding the President's veto, 322 voted to override with 98 against in the House.

May 23, 1935, the Senate voted to override the President's veto as follows: Fifty-four yeas to 40 nays, lacking 9 votes of being two-thirds, a sufficient number to override in the Senate, although in the combined Membership of the two Houses, consisting of 531 Members, less than 25 percent voted against our proposal. In other words, more than 75 percent favored our bill.

HOW STRENGTH INCREASED FOR PATMAN BILL AT EACH ELECTION

In 1930, 77 new Members of the House of Representatives were elected, 54 of them were pledged for my bill to pay the adjusted-service certificates and 23 were against it. In 1932, there were 181 new Members of the House elected, 133 favoring my bill and only 48 against it. In 1934, there were 108 new Members elected to the House of Representatives, 91 for the bill to only 17 against it.

This indicates how the bill has grown in strength, and the only bill pending before the country during this time for the full and immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates that was being considered was the Patman bill to pay in new currency without creating a new debt.

RECENT TREASURY STATEMENT

According to the June 29, 1935, daily statement of the United States Treasury, the Government holds $9,115,380,809.40 in gold. The title to this gold is in the United States Government. The Government has outstanding today less than five and a half billion dollars in actual money, including paper money, silver, and other coins. Therefore, the Government can issue $2,000,000,000 in gold to pay the veterans or issue $2,000,000,000 in paper money secured by $2,000,000,000 in gold and still have more than $7,000,000,000 to retire the five and a half billion dollars in outstanding money.

PAY VETERANS IN NEW MONEY

We are asking in H. R. 1, the Patman bill, that sound money be issued to pay this debt. It will be issued in a way that no inflation will possibly result. It will distribute purchasing power to three and one-half million veterans who reside in every nook and corner of the Nation, but will not cause the issuance of more nontaxable bonds or an increase in taxes. It is not sound governmental policy to pay this debt with bonds that will cause the bankers to get a $2,000,000,000 bonus in order to pay the veterans a $2,000,000,000 debt when we have the idle gold in the Treasury to pay the debt with.

SALARIES AND EXPENSES, BELGRANO AND TAYLOR

The national commander of the American Legion receives $10,000 a year and expenses. Belgrano's expenses the first 2 months were $2,286.99, or over $1,100 a month and at this rate will be over $13,000 for the year. Taylor receives $6,000 a year and expenses. His department, the legislative, cost the American Legion $23,482.79 in 1934.

These charges would not be excessive if Taylor and Belgrano were working for the American Legion. The veterans would be much better off without the kind of assistance they have been rendering.

Wall Street interests should be compelled to pay their own lobbying expenses and not make the individual legionnaires over the Nation pay their bill. Neither should they be allowed to use leaders of the American Legion as a front to put over their propaganda.

LEGION SHOULD HAVE 2,000,000 MEMBERS

The American Legion should have at least 2,000,000 members. If there is the right kind of house cleaning, commencing at the top, I predict the membership will reach that figure in a very short time.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, the Wheeler-Rayburn bill for governmental control of public utility holding company practices is the most misrepresented and misunderstood legislation which has come before this session of Congress. The army of lobbyists, which has not only infested the corridors of the Capitol but has been active throughout the country by personal solicitation and by letter, has attempted to lead investors in all utility stocks and bonds, and even in other investments, to believe that all of their securities will be adversely affected by this proposed legislation.

As a matter of fact, opponents of this legislation admitted at the hearings before the Senate committee that only one-fifth of the investment in utilities is in the holding companies, four-fifths being in regular operating companies. Much of the holding-company investment is controlled by large banks and financial combinations. Instead of adversely affecting securities of operating companies this bill is aimed to take the financial leeches off these companies and their stockholders and enable them to give good service at reasonable rates to consumers, with a fair return to investors, relieving them of the obligation to carry the old man of the sea, who has fastened himself on their backs in the form of holding-company organizations.

The bill as passed by the Senate calls only for elimination of unnecessary holding companies over a period of years, with a reasonable time given for an orderly liquidation. Holding companies which control properties located close to each other, where the operating units could obtain some advantage by cooperative action, are deemed desirable and are allowed to continue under the bill.

This bill is aimed at abuses such as those illustrated when an official of one of the large holding companies located in New York appeared recently before a Senate committee. He was asked about an operating company on the Pacific coast and indicated he knew nothing about the company. He was then asked if he was not the president of the company named and did not draw a salary of $7,500 a year from the company, holding such position by virtue of the control over the operating company by his holding-company organization. After a whispered consultation with his attorney he confirmed the fact that he was an officer and drew the salary, although later testimony showed he had never even visited the company offices while on a trip to the Pacific coast.

During the Senate debate on this measure charts were submitted showing a spider's web of holding-company affiliations in which as many as 12 holding companies were pyramided on top of a lone operating company, which is expected to provide sustenance for the bloodsuckers which feed upon its activities to the detriment of the consumers of electricity and the investors in utility stocks.

We are here attempting to remedy these injustices under which the holding companies hold the voting stock in the operating companies while investors who furnish most of the capital in the operating companies hold the bag. Through this control, although actually owning only a small proportion of the capital invested, the holding companies dictate the business policies of the operating companies. They tell them from whom they are to buy materials, at what prices, and from whom they shall hire engineering and legal services, frequently furnishing both supplies and services at exorbitant rates. In one case it was shown that a holding company charged $2,000,000 for legal services which had actually cost $1,000,000.

Section 13 of this bill, which would control the practices cited above, has unfortunately been emasculated and hamstrung by action of the House committee, and should be restored as approved by the Senate, so that legal racketeering of the type described above can be effectively stopped.

Section 11 of the bill has also been emasculated, those responsible for wrecking this section arguing that it is not necessary to arrange for dissolution of the holding companies whose activities extend beyond all economic borders and result in control in New York, Chicago, and other financial centers of properties located thousands of miles away and having no economic connection with the financial bosses controlling them.

This bill is merely an attempt to cut down these gigantic octopuses to a size where they can reasonably be controlled by the States, so far as possible. Regulation of their activities is impossible under the present organizations, as is shown by the statements on the floor of this Congress by two former Governors of sovereign States who made an honest effort while serving as chief executives of their Commonwealths to control holding-company practices.

Senator BROWN, of New Hampshire, who, following his term as Governor of his State, served for 7 years on the public-utilities commission, stated on the floor of the Senate:

> New Hampshire is not a large State. It has an area of something less than 10,000 square miles. Nor is it densely populated, having a population of 465,000. The utility problem in that State ought not to be extremely complicated, yet our commission could never even be certain as to the number of holding companies doing business in the State, because it is impossible for a State commission to discover the truth. I have seen them juggle their books, juggle their cash where they were both buyer and seller, juggle their taxes, juggle their lawyers, their accountants, and their engineers.
>
> In my opinion, under the present set-up nobody can effectively regulate such an organization. It is too big, too powerful, its officials are too fast, and its lawyers are too smart.

Our colleague here in the House, former Governor PIERCE, of Oregon, told us of similar experiences he has had in the State of Oregon.

Holding companies are here making a fight for these emasculating amendments, saying, "We are willing to submit to reasonable regulation, and we will be good." The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission shows, however, that every holding company from Insull up or down has been guilty of unfair practices. Those who operate this financial octopus know regulation cannot be made effective. That is why they are advocating it here today. These same interests have lobbyists at legislative sessions of every State fighting to the last ditch to prevent any strengthening of the laws regulating their evil practices. They attempt to control and, if necessary, corrupt public officials from the lowest town or city officer to the highest legislative body, the United States Congress.

The average citizen need but refresh his recollection of activities of public-utility officials in his community and he will not doubt the charges made about the practices of holding companies and their attempts to control the Government for private interests.

Mr. Speaker, many years ago the late Senator La Follette, with far-reaching vision, secured passage of an antimerger law in the District of Columbia making it unlawful for a holding company to own more than 10 percent of the capital stock of any District utility corporation. Despite this effort to regulate, People's Counsel Roberts, of the District, whose experience in attempting to regulate these practices prompted him to make a radio address a few nights ago in support of this legislation, pointed out that all of the District utility corporations are now controlled by holding companies.

The argument is being advanced that these financial pirates, like Insull, should be allowed to continue their operations because any action by Congress might decrease the value of investments in holding companies. Legislation which has been enacted, and which is being proposed here to protect the innocent victims of lying propaganda, is said to be responsible for the shrinkage in the value of utility securities. The facts are, however, that between 1929 and 1933, during the era of unrestricted individualism, the market value of securities of 25 leading holding companies decreased from $19,245,157,757 to $2,879,000,000. A loss in securities' values which brought a decrease from 19 to 2 plus certainly demonstrates that something more effective than the benevolent management of Insull and his kind is needed to protect the American investor.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we should reject the House committee amendments, sponsored by the Power Trust in an effort to make this bill ineffective. We should then move promptly to pass the bill. The workers and farmers are in need of this protection against centralized industrial control. They pay the higher rates which the present system foists upon them, and groan under the exploitation.

The investors, who are being used by the power trust as a smoke screen, need the protection of this bill, which is aimed to preserve the rights and property of those who have invested in securities representing honest value.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt delivered his special message to the Congress of the United States on March 12, 1935. In that message he said, among other things:

> We do not seek to prevent the legitimate diversification of investment in operating utility companies by legitimate investment companies. But the holding company in the past has confused the function of control and management with that of investment and in consequence has more frequently than not failed in both functions.

And again—

> But where the utility holding company does not perform a demonstrably useful and necessary function in the operating industry and is used simply as a means of financial control, it is idle to talk of the continuation of holding companies on the assumption that regulation can protect the public against them.

And again—

> And it offers too-well-demonstrated temptation to and facility for abuse to be tolerated as a recognized business institution. * * * It is a corporate invention which can give a few corporate insiders unwarranted and intolerable powers over other people's money. * * * it has built up in the public-utility field what has justly been called a system of private socialism which is inimical to the welfare of a free people.

President Roosevelt's views on this subject were founded largely on the report of the National Power Policy Committee. This committee in its report gives us some startling information which may well cause the average citizen to pause and consider whither we are drifting. I take the liberty here of quoting from the committee's report:

> In 1925 holding companies controlled about 65 percent of the operating electric-utility industry. By 1932, 13 large holding groups controlled three-fourths of the entire privately owned electric-utility industry, and more than 40 percent was concentrated in the hands of the three largest groups—United Corporation, Electric Bond & Share Co., and Insull. Even these three systems are not totally independent. United Corporation has a stock interest in Electric Bond & Share Co. In the latter system have been brought certain Insull properties since the collapse of the Insull empire. In 1929 and 1930, 20 large holding company systems controlled 98.5 percent of the transmission of electric energy across State lines.
>
> The rise to power of the large holding company in the gas-utility industry has been no less startling than in the field of electricity. In 1932, 11 holding company systems controlled 80.29 percent of the total mileage of natural-gas trunk pipe lines, upon which the gas fields are almost completely dependent for the marketing of their product.

I quote again:

> For all this concentration so dangerous to his democracy, the American consumer pays the bill. With a large and often unsound capitalization to support, many holding companies have not been able to be satisfied with reasonable dividends on the securities of their operating companies. They have compelled the consumer to bear the burden of various fees, commissions, and other charges which they levy against their subsidiaries. They take fees, usually a percentage of the gross revenues of the subsidiary, under contracts for the performance of management, engineering, accounting, publicity, legal, tax, and other general and special services. They make profits on the sale of materials to their subsidiaries. They make profits from construction contracts which they negotiate and perform for their subsidiaries; they often control one or more construction companies to which is awarded most of the building work for the entire system. They take fees for handling the issue, sale, and exchange of securities for their subsidiaries.

And again—

The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission shows, for instance, that in 1929 Associated Gas & Electric Co. acquired 94,005 shares of Barstow Securities Corporation, a utility-holding company which controlled General Gas & Electric Corporation which controlled a chain of operating companies. The price paid was $531.04 a share. According to the accountants of the Federal Trade Commission, the stock had a book value of $2.97 per share and had earned $4.16 per share in the preceding year. The acquisition was a victory for Associated Gas over the United Gas Improvement Co. (a member of United Corporation group) which had bid against Associated Gas for the property. To finance its purchase of these Barstow securities, with annual earnings of about $391,000, Associated Gas incurred obligations whose annual interest charges were $2,800,000. The example is an extreme one, but acquisitions of properties were common at two, three, or more times their book value, an entry not likely to be understated in an industry where returns are regulated in relation to property value.

And again—

The public-utility holding companies have become Nation-wide institutions. Their subsidiary operating companies are located in every State. Electric Bond & Share Co. has operating companies in 36 States and 8 other systems have units in 11 to 29 States. Many holding companies have affiliations, sometimes amounting to control, with banking interest, construction companies, coal mines, newspapers, and other interests.

The committee report also points out that there is no Government regulation of these huge holding-company structures because holding companies are very careful to incorporate in a State which is outside of the limits of a State or States in which the operating companies are located. This places them beyond the reach of the public service commission of any State, and makes it impossible to exercise any governmental control over their operations. Needless to say, legislation is necessary to take care of these huge corporate empires that are now outside the limits of Government control. This is the objective set forth in the President's message.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY

Early English law was extremely rigid. Forms and technicalities were strictly observed. The court of common law gave no remedy, unless a writ fitted exactly to the case could be found. The interests of cestui que use were not protected by the common-law courts, because no writ existed to fit the case. Therefore, for many years uses and trusts existed in honorary obligations, but had no legal standing. If money was delivered to A, to be paid to B, the common-law action of account lay. If a chattel were delivered to another for the use of a third, detinue could be brought by the beneficiary.

But the development of the court of chancery wrought a change. Gradually a practice of petitioning the king arose for relief where the law courts gave no remedy. These petitions were referred to the chancellor. As a result the chancellor became the custodian of the king's conscience, and his court the court of conscience. Equity and fairness were supposed to govern, instead of technicality.

It was natural that cestui que trust who had been injured, due to a failure of their trustees to hold their property for their use, should apply to the chancellor for relief. The chancellors of those days were churchmen, and their consciences were naturally shocked by the unfairness of allowing a trustee to make away with his beneficiary's property. The process by which the chancellor acted was known as a subpena. It commanded the defendant to do or refrain from doing a certain act. (Bogart, Trust and Trustees, vol. 1, sec. 3.)

The common-law trusts were employed for the voluntary association of individuals pursuing a common cause. The trust received no corporate franchise, its members complied with no general corporation law. They derived whatever power for authority they had from the voluntary action of the individuals forming the trust. Naturally, the individuals forming such a common-law trust were greatly concerned as to their personal liability.

In order to secure exemption from personal liability for the shareholders the trust had to be one in which the shareholders reserved no powers of control over the business of the trust. Of course, no modern Napoleon of industry would ever consent to surrender control, and yet at the same time he would not want to inflict upon himself any personal liability. The answer was, the holding company, a corporation which could hold the stock of another corporation. This has solved the problem of the promoter, the investment banker, and the stock manipulator who has used other people's money to buy a business for himself. But you say, "How could this possibly be done?" Let me give you a very simple illustration:

Let us say that the Madison Operating Co. furnishes gas and electricity to the public in a very rich territory. It is an excellent company with splendid modern equipment, with an able and efficient manager, and enjoys the best of patronage and earns large dividends. The capital structure of this company consists of $150,000,000 divided into three equal groups—$50,000,000 of 6-percent bonds, $50,000,000 of 6½-percent preferred stock which has no voting power, and $50,000,000 of common stock which has voting power and thereby controls the company.

Let us say that three men—Smith, Jones, and Brown—conceive the idea of getting control of this splendid operating company. In order to get control all they need is 50 percent of the common stock of the company, because that is the stock that has voting rights. Smith and Jones are bankers and Brown is a broker of considerable prestige. They very quietly buy up $25,000,000 worth of common stock of this company wherever they can get it at a reasonable price.

When once they have secured this $25,000,000 worth of common stock in the Madison Operating Co., the rest is very simple. They now form the Dane Holding Co., the capital structure of which is $25,000,000, being the $25,000,000 with which they bought 50 percent of the operating company's common stock. The Dane Holding Co. is divided into $12,500,000 of common stock, $6,000,000 of preferred stock and $6,500,000 worth of bonds, which reduces the investment of Smith, Jones, and Brown by one-half. But the end is not yet. Thereupon these gentlemen incorporate the Columbia Holding Co. with a capital structure of $12,500,000 divided into $6,250,000 of common stock, $3,000,000 of preferred stock and $3,250,000 of bonds.

Times being good and the business showing a nice profit, they now incorporate the Dodge Holding Co., with a capital structure of $6,250,000, consisting of $3,125,000 of common stock, $1,500,000 of preferred stock, and $1,625,000 worth of bonds. Next they incorporate the Jefferson Holding Co., later on the Waukesha Holding Co., and finally the Wisconsin Holding Co.; in each case reducing their investment by one-half, until finally by owning one-half of the common stock of the Wisconsin Holding Co., or with an investment of $195,312.50, they completely control the Madison Operating Co., a $150,000,000 enterprise.

The Madison Operating Co. ($150,000,000):
Bonds	$50,000,000
Preferred stock	50,000,000
Common stock	50,000,000
The Dane Holding Co. ($25,000,000):
Bonds	6,500,000
Preferred stock	6,000,000
Common stock	12,500,000
The Columbia Holding Co. ($12,500,000):
Bonds	3,250,000
Preferred stock	3,000,000
Common stock	6,250,000
The Dodge Holding Co. ($6,250,000):
Bonds	1,625,000
Preferred stock	1,500,000
Common stock	3,125,000
The Jefferson Holding Co. ($3,125,000):
Bonds	1,000,000
Preferred stock	562,500
Common stock	1,562,500
The Waukesha Holding Co. ($1,562,500):
Bonds	500,000
Preferred stock	281,250
Common stock	781,250
The Wisconsin Holding Co. ($781,250):
Bonds	200,000
Preferred stock	190,625
Common stock	390,000

You must also realize that the Madison Operating Co.'s profits must pay the interest on the bonds and preferred stock of all these holding companies, and that the profits of the Madison Operating Co. can come from only one source, namely, the users of gas and electricity in the territory served by that company. Of course, the investor, being a bondholder of the Wisconsin or the Waukesha Holding Co., thinks he has a first lien on some valuable property, but when you stop to analyze it you can readily see, by examining the chart, that the first lien against the Madison Operating Co.'s property is the $50,000,000 of bonds which form the senior security; the second lien, or junior security, is the $50,000,000 of preferred stock. Therefore, the holders of bonds of the Dane Holding Co. have only a third mortgage, and so on down the line until you come to the bondholders of the Wisconsin Holding Co., which are so far out on the limb that they do not have any secure footing.

However, you must note this fact about these different corporations. The first corporation is naturally a Wisconsin corporation with its principal office in Madison where the operating company is located. The next corporation, the Dane Holding Co., and all the succeeding holding companies, namely, the Columbia, the Dodge, the Jefferson, and the Waukesha, are incorporated in another State in order that the Wisconsin Public Service Commission will have no jurisdiction over them, cannot examine their books, records, documents, and so forth, and can issue no orders in regard to them whatsoever. The last-named holding company, the Wisconsin, incorporated in New York State, where Smith and Jones are bankers, buys all the equipment for the Madison Operating Co. It gives the contract for all equipment to the Waukesha Holding Co. and charges a fee for that service. The Waukesha Holding Co. furnishes the equipment to the Madison Operating Co. but charges more than the market price and keeps the difference as its profit.

The Wisconsin Holding Co. also hires the Jefferson Holding Co. as the accountants of the Madison Operating Co., and pays a stiff fee to that company for keeping the books, making out corporation reports, pay rolls, preparing income-tax reports, making yearly audits, rendering any and all service in connection with this part of the Madison Co.'s business. The Jefferson Co. charges a pretty stiff fee for this service and retains the money as a profit.

The Wisconsin Holding Co. also gives a contract to the Dodge Holding Co. for all lumber and hardware used by the Madison Operating Co., and the Dodge Co. charges in excess of the market price for these commodities. That profit goes to the Dodge Holding Co. The Wisconsin Co. also gives a contract to the Columbia Holding Co. for all advertising, legal service, education and promotional campaigning, which, in plain language, means lobbying. For this service the Columbia Co. charges a good stiff fee and pockets the profits. Next, the Wisconsin Co. gives a contract to the Dane Holding Co. for all construction work with the express proviso that materials must be purchased from the Dodge Holding Co. The Dane Holding Co. charges more than the market value for these services and pockets the profit.

Now, we ask, "Where does the Madison Operating Co. get the money to pay off all these excessive charges?" And the answer is, "From its customers who use gas and electricity." In these arrangements which I have mentioned there is not one single solitary thing that the manager of the Madison Operating Co. could not hire at a much cheaper price than he has to pay to these holding companies. This is the unjust and unfair burden that the consumer is called upon to bear. Of course, he would be much better off, and so would the Madison Operating Co., if it did not have all these holding companies piled upon its back. Perhaps some of you feel that I exaggerate in mentioning these things, but every one of them can be verified by actual experience. In his address to the Senate on March 27, 1935, Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, furnished the following example:

In 1923 Cities Service undertook, through Lakeside Construction Co., to construct a plant at Valmont, Colo., for one of Cities Service subsidiaries, the Public Service Co. of Colorado, operating in Denver. The cost of construction, as computed in the books of the Lakeside Construction Co., was slightly less than four and one-half million dollars. That figure included the salaries of Cities Service experts on the job and special contractors' and engineering fees paid by Cities Service Co. For this job Public Service Co. of Colorado, the operating company, paid Lakeside Construction Co., the dummy construction company, over $10,000,000 par value in securities of Public Service Co. Furthermore, that $10,000,000 in securities was paid in advance of construction, and during the period of construction the subsidiary paid that dummy construction company dividends and interest on those securities amounting to almost three-quarters of a million dollars. The operating subsidiary, therefore, paid almost $11,000,000 for the construction of a plant, the cost of which was less than four and one-half million dollars as the holding company computed its own records. The securities which the operating subsidiary gave the dummy construction company were transferred immediately, without even notation upon the books of the construction company, to the Cities Service Co., the top holding company. When the Cities Service Co. received these securities, it kept out of them for purposes of control the common stock of two and one-half million dollars par value, and then sold the bonds and debentures to the public for almost six and three-fourths million dollars cash. The actual construction, you will remember, had cost, according to the Cities Service books, less than four and one-half millions. So that at the end of the transaction the Cities Service Co. had a cash profit of over $2,000,000 in addition to the two and one-half million dollars par value of common stock of the operating subsidiary which it retained, and in addition to its contractors' and other fees.

Another illustration of exhorbitant fees paid to holding companies for service which they (the operating company) did not need is the case of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., and also the Cities Service Co., which collected as taxes from their subsidiary company approximately $3,000,000, respectively, which neither Associated Gas nor Cities Service had to pay to the Government. The way it was done was this: The holding companies kept the books for the subsidiaries. At the end of the year they would compute the income tax for the subsidiary company and get its check for the amount of the tax. If your system had 200 subsidiary companies in it these sums would amount to a very substantial sum of money. Under the law the corporations which were part of a holding company group were permitted to file one return for all the companies lumped together. This was a very convenient method of computation because the loss of one company could offset the profit of another in the same group. By pursuing this method of computation the holding company was able to reduce the tax against its subsidiaries by millions of dollars, but it did not return to any of the subsidiaries any of this tax money, but kept it for itself. One could hardly call this rendering a valuable service.

The reports of the Federal Trade Commission contain many other abuses of a similar character, all pointing out overcharges by the controlling holding company against the operating subsidiaries. It was a very common practice not to have any competitive bidding in making purchases of supplies, equipment, or material of any kind. By not having competitive bidding it was possible to charge the operating company an excessive price and pocket the difference. The user of gas and electricity paid the bill, and he is still paying it because we have not yet ended these abuses.

One of the outstanding figures in the utility world is Samuel Ferguson, president of the Hartford Electric Light Co., of Hartford, Conn. Mr. Ferguson, in commenting upon these abuses of the holding companies, among other things, wrote as follows:

The results of such abuses as have been perpetrated by certain speculative holding companies have been and will continue to be far worse for the investing public than for the consuming public, since the latter is protected from abuses by the regulatory control of the States over the operating companies, which control is exercised by public-utility commissions.

For years I have anticipated the results of the past few years, namely, that the public would visit the sins of the speculative holding company upon the head of the operating utility. But it is very heartening to see clear evidence on all sides that the public is now beginning to differentiate intelligently, and to lay blame where it properly belongs, instead of indiscriminately, though it is very sad that the knowledge had to be acquired at so great expense and sorrow to a great multitude of investors. (Electric World, Jan. 21, 1933.)

Let us see what the holding companies did with the investors' money. The United Corporation is a super holding company operated by the Morgan syndicate. The corporation gave perpetual option warrants to the organizers of the company to subscribe at any time to the holding company stock. The organizers paid $1 each for these options. J. P. Morgan & Co. held a large block of these options and realized a profit of $68,000,000 on an investment of $1,750,000. There is no excuse on earth for any corporation issuing these options. They do not serve any useful purpose whatever to the corporation or to the public which invests in the corporation's securities. It is merely a high-class method of robbing and cheating the investing public by lawful means.

The Federal Trade Commission made a report in which it set forth that "91 operating companies in holding company control, having combined capital assets of nearly $3,307,000,000, revealed write-ups and other improperly capitalized items amounting to not less than $842,995,000. This meant an increase of purely fictitious values which exceeded 34.2 percent. In other words, they merely opened a new set of books in which they raised the valuation of the fixed assets and the other assets over one-third of their original value.

The New York Times on March 15 contained an amazing story. Promoters had sold to the public $100,000,000 worth of holding company securities in 1 year out of which they took a profit of $34,000,000. The testimony disclosed that not one dollar of this money was put back into purchasing generating plants, dynamos, transmission lines, poles, or anything else, but was used solely in stock-market manipulations and purchasing of stocks of holding companies.

The Electric Bond & Share Co. on November 1, 1930, wrote up the capital accounts of the Tennessee Public Service Co., one of its properties, $4,388,157, or over 33⅓ percent. When we remember that the depression was already under way, how can anyone justify writing up a company's assets by over one-third? The Florida Power & Light Co., a member of the Electric Bond & Share system, wrote up its book value 126 percent. Its book value was $28,213,209.01. They wrote it up to the amazing sum of over $64,000,000 and, of course, sold the investing public stocks and bonds without voting rights.

Mr. RAYBURN, Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the House, spoke on this matter on Thursday, June 27, and referred to 17 abuses of which the holding companies were guilty in their transactions and manipulations. Mr. RAYBURN gave many examples to bear out his contention relative to these abuses. I cannot repeat all of them here, but I wish to point out several of them which must be of interest to everyone. Among other things, Mr. RAYBURN said:

> It may surprise you, but about 50 holding companies completely control these 2,000 operating companies. One holding company, Electric Bond & Share, controls so many operating companies that the grand total value of the properties of all of the companies in that system amounts to $3,000,000,000. That is, just one holding company dominates one-seventh of all the property operated by electric-light companies.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> And then the banking houses control the holding companies which control the operating companies. One big banking house, through a company called United Corporation, has an arrangement by which 8 or 10 of these big holding companies are tied together, so that more than one-fourth of the electric-light companies in the entire United States are subject to that banking influence.

This startling statement would seem to indicate that if these stock manipulations and combinations continue unchecked it will not be long before every consumer in the United States of gas and electricity will be paying tribute to an unknown and unseen overlord more powerful than the President of the United States.

I quote again from Mr. RAYBURN's able address:

> In 1929, 25 holding companies had securities outstanding in the hands of the public with nominal market value of $19,245,157,757. This enormous volume of securities had been issued by these 25 holding companies alone, although the total claimed fixed capital of the entire electric light and power industry was at that time less than $12,000,000,000.
>
> Now, remember these stocks had a nominal market value in 1929 of more than $19,000,000,000. By the end of February 1933, just before the present administration came into office, these securities had declined to a market value of $2,879,000,000.

For the past 6 months every Member of Congress has been receiving letters, telegrams, telephone calls, and in some instances personal visits protesting against "destruction of all utilities." Newspaper articles have appeared daily referring to the so-called "death sentence." One would think from this mass of propaganda that the Congress was engaged in absolutely destroying and wiping out all public utilities. The intelligence of the average American citizen should tell him how foolish such a contention is, because every Member of Congress is conscientiously striving to help the people of his district, not to injure them. It is the President's contention that the control of the holding company evil and the compulsory reduction of vast holding company empires to more simple forms where everything is plain and aboveboard will mean more security to the investing public and a square deal to the consumer of gas and electricity. To me it seems amazing that the people who have invested their money in utility securities—87 percent of which was lost before this session of Congress ever met—should now place their faith and trust in the very people who robbed them. How much better it would be to trust somebody else, somebody raised in your own community, somebody who is accountable to you for his actions, somebody whose home is where yours is, whose wife and whose children live in your midst, somebody whom you see daily, than an unknown holding company in New York City.

Senator BROWN, of New Hampshire, a very able man who served for 7 years as a member of the New Hampshire Public Service Commission, made a speech on this question in the United States Senate June 5, 1935. I am sorry that I cannot quote at length from Senator BROWN's very able and interesting address. However, let me give you only a few excerpts:

> Between the destruction of the holding company and the destruction of our democracy, the choice for me is not difficult, because I know that the choice is inevitable. I have seen these giant holding companies come into our State, where the utility problem should be a very simple one, and bring to the people, not the benefits of operating economies or of improved services, but all the corrupting and corroding influences of irresponsible absentee management and misused economic power.
>
> I have seen them juggle their books, juggle their cash, juggle foreclosure sales where they were both buyer and seller, juggle their taxes, juggle their lawyers, their accountants, and their engineers.
>
> When we attempted to investigate the operations of these holding companies we were overwhelmed with wave after wave of lawyers, accountants, engineers—a new crowd of shock troops every week—gathered from different sections of the country.
>
> More than once have I seen the person in charge of an operating company claim and insist that he did not know where the company was located which was over him; did not know the name of his boss; and did not know where he lived.

Senator BROWN further pointed out that holding companies furnish managerial, purchasing, construction, engineering, financial, accounting, advertising, and legal services. In relation to these he said, enumerating them:

> First. A management contract where the holding company is paid by the operating company 2½ percent per annum of gross earnings of the operating company, payable monthly, plus certain expenses.
>
> Second. A construction contract giving to the holding company or affiliate a fee of 7½ percent of the gross amount charged or chargeable to the plant or property accounts of the operating company, payable monthly, and certain expenses.
>
> Third. A purchasing contract where the holding company or affiliate receives 1½ percent of the amount paid for purchases by the operating utility.
>
> Fourth. A plan as to appliances where the holding company or affiliate gets a margin of 30 percent profit on the sales by the operating utility.
>
> Fifth. An advertising arrangement in which a fee is charged.
>
> The New Hampshire commission was never able to get any information with respect to the amount of profit accruing to the holding company or affiliate on any of these contracts. I have always maintained, and still do, that where companies are commonly owned or have a common interest no profit should be allowed in their dealings one with the other.

Senator BROWN also points out in the same able address that the consumer of gas and electricity has a larger investment than that of the utility but that his investment is never referred to. Senator BROWN showed that in 1933 the utilities had an investment of $12,900,000,000 in capital equipment. At the same time the consumers of gas and electricity had an investment of $13,200,000,000, one-half of which was in household appliances. The housewife who buys a washing machine, an electric refrigerator, a toaster, a mixing machine, or an electric iron also is an investor, and she is the main investor, because she uses the current daily and replaces the appliance when it is worn out. Therefore her interest is fully as important as that of the investor in stocks and bonds. Senator BROWN also denies that Government regulation would injure the investing public:

How does it hurt the investor to be given a security in a sound business for one that has been unsound and always will be unsound? I recall one of the days of the financial crash in 1929. Going into a building, I saw people standing around a woman who had fainted. It developed that she has saved up a couple of thousand dollars scrubbing floors over a long period of time. Someone had persuaded her to put her entire savings into Cities Service securities, and she was still buying more on the installment plan.

The following from the proceedings of House of Representatives of July 1, 1935:

Mr. Chairman, I am offering an amendment, which I am sending to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: On page 183, after line 20, add a new subsection, as follows:

"'(d) Every registered holding company and every subsidiary company thereof, on or before January 1, 1936, shall take such steps as may be necessary to give to the holders of each class of preferred stock, common stock, or any other stock of such company voting rights equal, dollar for dollar, to the voting rights had by the holders of that class of stock of such company which has the greatest voting rights. Every registered holding company, and every subsidiary company thereof, on or before January 1, 1936, shall take such steps as may be necessary to give to the holder of each bond or debenture of such company contingent voting rights equal, dollar for dollar, to the voting rights had by the holders of that class of stock of such company which has the greatest voting rights; such voting rights shall be contingent and exercisable upon any default in the payment of interest or principal upon such bond or debenture and shall be effective during the continuance of any such default.'"

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, on January 27 the minority leader of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] made the statement that this bill would destroy all holding companies. To this statement I take exception. The bill does nothing of the kind. What does this bill do? It exempts from its provision—and I wish you would note these four classes—first, all operating companies. What does this mean? It means that for every dollar invested in holding company utilities there are $4 of the public's money invested in operating utilities—$4 to $1. This is the ratio, and all the $4 are exempt, and, therefore, four-fifths of the public's money invested in utilities is entirely exempt from the provisions of this act.

The second class is composed of all operating companies engaged in purely intrastate commerce.

The third class consists of all operating and holding company systems which are engaged predominantly in the operation of the generation and transmission of gas and electric power, which systems are in contiguous States, even though engaged in interstate commerce; and last, but not least, all holding and operating systems which are geographically and economically integrated, even though engaged in interstate commerce. Those are the four classes that are exempt, constituting 91 percent of the investments that are in holding and operating companies. The only thing this bill touches is the 9 percent of the money that is invested in holding and operating systems; and what does it do as to the 9 percent?

Does it destroy them? No; absolutely not. What does it provide about that? It simply provides that they can continue as they are, saying to them that they do not have to change their corporate existence, or to make one single solitary operation as to their by-laws or organization, but that they must surrender control, and that is the one thing on earth that they do not want to do.

What does my amendment provide? My amendment merely provides that those who put their money, the vast investing public, into this business shall have the right to vote as to what is to be done with their money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Is the gentleman speaking of the House bill or the Senate bill?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I am speaking of the Senate bill.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. That is what I thought.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. And the House bill tries to evade what is in the Senate bill. To get back to my point, all my amendment does is to give to the public that is investing its money in public utilities a right to vote, and I say now that the public bought and paid for every utility in the United States, and why should it not have the right to vote as to what is to be done with its money? They paid for them; it is their money. Why should they be shut out from a voice in what is to be done with their money? All this amendment asks is for you to give the holders of preferred stock a right to vote.

One more provision in my amendment is, that in case there is a default in payment either of interest or principal on the bonds held in the holding company, that the holder of the bonds shall have the right to vote. What is wrong about that? It is his money. The President recently said that this bill inflicted no death sentence. That is a specious phrase used to frighten children. It cannot frighten anyone who analyzes the bill, because it is not true. The President said it does not destroy, it does not pass the death sentence. He made the statement that this bill is an emancipation proclamation for the investor in utility securities. I go a step further than that. There is an earlier American doctrine on which our very existence has been founded, and that is the doctrine enunciated by the immortal Virginian, Patrick Henry, when he said that taxation without representation is tyranny. The public has been taxed in buying the preferred stock and in buying bonds in the entire utility structure. We have been taxed, but we have not been allowed to be represented, and all I ask in this amendment is that those who are taxed be allowed to have representation in the control of these companies.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I agree with the gentleman absolutely in the statement that the vast majority of the money that is in the utilities of this country has been put in by the people, including the employees of the company. What does the gentleman think of the provision of the House bill that where 10 percent of the stock in any operating company is owned by a holding company it comes within the domination of the bill?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I am in favor of it, if thereby the holding company has control.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who is apprehensive as to the rights of the investor or as to the security of his investment can vote this provision into the bill and feel that he has given the investor every opportunity to protect himself by having a voice in the proceedings and having the majority of the voting rights at all the meetings.

Some question has been raised as to the constitutionality of this measure and that point is urged with considerable vigor by those who are opposed to the Senate bill. My answer to their objection is this: If the Senate bill is unconstitutional, then how much more is the House bill unconstitutional which delegates all the powers to the Securities Exchange Commission, a delegation of powers which might well be questioned in view of the decision of our Supreme Court in the Schechter case. In that case delegation of great powers was held unconstitutional. How can you justify it in this case in view of the decision in that case? However, I do not feel that the Senate bill is unconstitutional. The only theory upon which the Federal Government can exercise its jurisdiction in the utilities field is through the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. In People v. Katz (249 N. Y. S. 719), the Court said among other things:

"Commerce" embraces transportation of persons or property by land, water, or by air travel, and extends to all instrumentalities so employed.

Let us examine the authorities to see what particular matters have been held to constitute interstate commerce. The following cases will be of interest:

The term "interstate commerce" includes instrumentalities and agencies by which it is conducted and the power of Congress extends to the regulation of such instrumentalities, including the right to legislate for the welfare of persons operating them (Loyd v. N. C. Ry. Co. (162 N. C. 485)).

"Interstate commerce" as used in the Constitution and the Anti-trust Act, comprehends every contract, trade, and dealing between citizens of one State and those of another, which contemplates the transportation of goods, persons, or information from one State into another, and every initiatory, negotiating, and intervening act of the parties to that trade or deal, from the time the intercourse relating to it commences until the transportation and delivery have been completed (United Leather Workers International Union v. Herbert & Meisel Trunk Co. (284 F. 446)).

Electricity transported from one State to another is interstate commerce, even though an independent or municipal purchases the current from an operating company and then sells it to the consumer (Pub. Ut. Com. v. Attleboro Steam Elec. Co. (273 U. S. 83)).

Gas and oil are likewise proper subjects of interstate commerce and this is true even when such gas and oil is stored, inspected, and held, the destination being undetermined at the time, if subsequently it is transported into another State even though some of this gas and oil is commingled with other gas and oil in the same pipe lines used for local consumption (Eureka Pipe Line Co. v. Hallanan (257 U. S. 265)).

Telephoning and telegraphing from one State into another is interstate commerce (C. B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Reed (217 Pac. 322)).

Transmission of a telegram between two points in the same State over the ordinary route passing out of the State is interstate business (Shannon v. W. U. T. Co. (152 Ark. 358)).

Cleaning, repair, and adjustment of large stationary gas engines constituting part of a compressor plant of a company producing, transporting, and selling natural gas, both within and without this State, used in the collection of such gas, from the wells and drawing and forcing it through pipe lines from the wells to places of sale and consumption by means of pumps and other instrumentalities, are parts of its interstate business (Smith v. Fuel Co. (91 W. Va. 52)).

Every negotiation, contract, trade, and dealing between citizens of different States, which contemplates and causes such importation, whether it be of goods, persons, or information, is a transaction of interstate commerce (Little v. Smith (124 Kans. 237)).

Courts well realize that interpretations of the law must grow with the expansion of the activities of the citizens of the State. Law is not a dead instrument that was established thousands of years ago and has made no progress, nor can it be interpreted in the light of ancient history. Law must grow with the times; it must expand to fit industrial, economic, and social conditions. We cannot possibly apply the rules of the Dark Ages to the conduct of our citizens of today. We must, therefore, apply our rules and our interpretations thereof to conditions as they exist now. The evidence of the various agencies of the state have disclosed that holding companies, through absentee ownership and through interstate commerce, control the destinies of millions of our citizens. To effect their purpose they employ all the instruments of interstate commerce. The steam railway, the airplane, the automobile, the radio, the telephone, and the telegraph, all of these are used daily in interstate commerce to effecuate their purposes—namely, to furnish managerial skill, to furnish construction contracts, to furnish purchasing contracts, to furnish advertising arrangements, to furnish accounting and legal skill, to furnish electric appliances, and in short to do everything necessary to completely dominate the business of their subsidiary companies. Cut off their interstate commerce and they would be rendered helpless and impotent.

In 1890 the New York court ordered the Sugar Trust to dissolve, and in 1892 the Ohio court ordered the Standard Oil Co. to dissolve. These decisions were based upon the fact that these huge combinations were in restraint of trade, constituted a monopoly, and were contrary to the public interests. Those decisions were held and the trusts were dismantled, yet no investor lost a dollar in the transaction because they had invested in something of value. In the case of the utility companies, however, the investor has been cheated and defrauded. He has been sold write-ups and inflations, and too often nothing of value. What we are seeking to do is to put an end to this legalized form of financial piracy. If we, who are responsible for the laws of our Nation, recognize these evils and stand quietly by, we ratify them by our silence and become a party to them. For my part I do not care to be identified with such practices. I want to be recorded as condemning them, lock, stock, and barrel, and I want to do all in my power not to make it possible for these companies to continue defrauding the investing public.

It is sound public policy to limit and circumscribe human greed and cupidity, even though it may be temporarily held in abeyance. Limited as my experience has been, yet it is my observation that dividends have no ideals and that there are no heart throbs in profits. We are building a Frankenstein that with iron heel and clanking tread tramples underfoot the rights and privileges of our people. It is our duty to end it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I voted against the "death sentence" clause in the utilities bill, and I voted for the bill on its final passage for the reason I have always favored the principles of this legislation, and furthermore I voted against the motion to recommit the bill striking out the controversial section 11 of the House bill, which would have taken the holding companies out from under any regulation whatsoever by the Federal Government, which motion to recommit, if adopted, would practically have nullified the bill.

As it is generally understood I am not a friend of the holding companies. They should never have been born in the first instance, but we cannot kill them outright without injuring many innocent stock holders and security holders. Moreover this is a representative form of government. I am the representative of the people of my district, and regardless of what my personal views may be I must recognize the fact that many people of my district believe and have so stated to me that if the Senate "death penalty" clause is adopted it will wipe out their life's savings.

It was brought out in the hearings and in the argument that there were many companies that were solvent and paying dividends to their stockholders regularly. To have wiped them out would, I believe, not only be a great hardship upon these investors but any such action on the part of this Government would have been held unconstitutional by our courts.

There is very little difference between section 11 of the Senate and House bills in regard to dissolving the large holding companies. The only practical difference as I see it is, under the House bill these companies have their day in court, and if they do not meet the regulations and specifications of the law then they are to be dissolved, while under the Senate bill they had no day in court, and under our Constitution and form of government legal action cannot be taken until the parties involved have had a day in court. To proceed otherwise in this country would, in my opinion, lead to the most despotic and dictatorial form of Government that could be imagined and would be destructive to the rights and liberties of our citizenship.

In addition thereto there was what appears to me to be a joker written in section 11 of the Senate bill that would have been to the advantage of the very large holding companies as against the small holding companies operating in only two States, which reads as follows:

Provided, however, That the Commission, upon such terms and conditions as it may find necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, shall permit a registered holding company to continue to be a holding company in the first degree if such company has obtained from the Federal Power Commission a certificate that the continuance of the holding-company relation is necessary, under the applicable State or foreign law, for the operations of a geographically and economically integrated public-utility system serving an economic region in a single State or extending into two or more contiguous States or into a continguous foreign country.

The joker, in my judgment, is the word "two." I think "two" should have been changed to "one." For, under this provision as it is written, a holding company could continue in operation, starting out in one State and going from thence into every State in the Union, so that there would be no gap between States, where the little company serving in a single State and in one additional contiguous State would be required to be dissolved, and the large company under the above provision of the law could continue to exist.

In addition thereto such action on the part of Congress, in adopting as a part of this bill an absolute "death sentence" for all companies, might have been an out for the dishonest and crooked companies, their officials and salesmen could have told the investors that the reason why their stocks were valueless was that Congress had made them so. I believe if there is any salvage that it should be saved for the little investor, and that stringent regulations and the prevention of future holding companies under the terms of the House bill are in keeping with the platform of the Democratic Party of 1932, which all parties now agree was one of the greatest party platforms ever written.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to regulation of public-utility holding companies; in fact I believe that their financial practices should be under the closest control.

I am not even an advocate of holding companies whether they be in the public-utility field or any other line. I believe that many holding companies are created for the sole purpose of obtaining control with a small amount of capital of vast operating properties with enormous public investments involved.

But the Wheeler-Rayburn bill does not accomplish the purpose of correcting these abuses. Its ultimate purpose is not an orderly regulation of the public-utility industry. It was conceived and born in the sole desire of accomplishing eventual Federal ownership of the public utilities. Should this objective be accomplished it is but the first step in a program, the conclusion of which would be the Federal ownership of all industry and all commerce; in fact, a complete socialization of all business in the country.

This bill drafted secretly by the so-called "brain trust" had its conception in communism, not Americanism. If the bill were genuine in its announced purpose—to eliminate unnecessary holding companies—this would not be confined to the utility field but would be aimed at all such holding companies. Why was this particular field of public utilities singled out for this legislation? The answer is that the first step in a socialization program is to bring the natural resources under the direct ownership of the Federal Government where it can become the absolute tool of the politician who seeks dictatorship rather than the advancement of democratic government.

The Federal Securities Commission and the Federal Trade Commission have adequate authority to regulate both the financial practices of utility holding companies and the unfair practices that have been going on in the past.

The real proponents of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill are not interested in correcting the abuses in the public-utility holding-company field, but only with the ultimate program of federalization of the whole utility field. This bill is only an entering wedge and the first step in that program. Certainly, the regulation of operating utility concerns is within the province of individual States. If we do not check now this constant tendency of turning over to the Federal Government the prerogatives and obligations of the individual States, we will soon be no longer a Union of sovereign Commonwealths, but will be a great Federal State, with more artificial subdivisions administered by bureaucrats in the manner of absence landlordism.

Public officials who most intimately deal with the affairs of our daily life will no longer be amenable to local public opinion. The so-called "death sentence" of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill was pure camouflage, though the amendment was rightly named. It was a death sentence, but it was a death sentence for American industry, American initiative, American individual responsibility. It was a death sentence to the whole American philosophy of government and economics. It was a death sentence for democracy. It was intended to become the doorstep for communism.

I yield to no man in my liberalism; but genuine progressivism and liberalism mean taking the government as far as possible out of the direction of the affairs of the individual citizen. The constant drive to have the Federal Government usurp all of the functions of local self-government is not liberality; it is retracting our steps to the dictatorship of a monarchy.

I hope that no one will be misled by so-called "progressive" legislation which has as its object returning the people of this country to the ruthless control of a dictatorship. It was against such ruthless domination that the American people revolted and set up a democracy. Let us recapture the democracy and not be led back to the horrors of dictatorial rulers.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I hold no brief for the utility holding companies. There are, in my judgment, a very few good holding companies. As a general proposition, holding companies should never have been permitted to organize or function, because they serve, except in rare instances, no good purpose, and were organized largely for the purpose of plundering stockholders and the general public.

In legislating on holding companies Congress is confronted with a condition and not a theory. Holding companies have come into existence as a result of charters granted by the various States, and as a result of the employing of high legal talent they have ramified and expanded so that the ordinary mind cannot comprehend just where the utility world is at today from the standpoint of pyramided holding companies. Of the $12,000,000,000 that our citizens have invested in utility companies today, three billion is said to be invested in the stock of holding companies. It should be the aim of Congress in legislating on public utilities and holding companies to protect the investments of the stockholders in these institutions and not to jeopardize such interests. Legislation designed to punish holding companies by a "death sentence" or otherwise for their wrongdoings will punish the stockholders and not the offending corporations.

Two methods are proposed for handling the utility holding-company problem—one as proposed by the bill now before the House and the other contained in the bill recently passed by the Senate. The House bill proposes to regulate holding companies—that is, put them under the strictest kind of regulation—while the Senate bill proposes to leave to a commission the question of whether or not certain holding companies shall be obliged to liquidate and go out of business within 5 or 7 years.

The public-utility holding companies, or some of them at least, have done and are doing two things which fair-minded people condemn: First, these companies have issued hundreds of millions of dollars of worthless stock, which has been sold to the investing public; second, these same public-utility holding companies, or many of them at least, are milking, so to speak, the local operating companies by excessive charges for services rendered in order to provide funds to pay the operating expenses of the holding companies and dividends on their stocks.

The indictment of selling worthless stock to the investing American public is a thing of the past, or, rather, is water over the dam. No such stocks are being sold today, nor can be sold, as a result of the passage of the Federal Securities Act. The second indictment, of being leeches on the operating companies of the different holding-company units, is taken care of in the pending House bill, which gives to the Power Commission and the Securities Commission the right to pass on the fairness of all contracts entered into by holding companies with their operating units, thereby preventing holding companies from exacting unfair and unjust tributes from the operating companies.

Both the House bill and the Senate bill are designed to accomplish the same results—that is, the elimination or winding up of useless holding companies—one by the method of regulation and the other by the direct decree of Congress that said holding companies, within a time limit, must liquidate. Under the House bill each holding company will have its day in court, where it can make a showing justifying its right to continued existence, while the Senate bill does not seek to control, but rather to destroy.

I do not claim to be a constitutional lawyer, but I do believe that Congress has no power to decree the death of any business lawfully operating under a charter granted by a State. I am not yet ready to subscribe to the doctrine that Congress has the power, under the Constitution, or should have the power, to declare the death of any legitimate business functioning under the laws of a State.

If the Senate amendment should become a law, the whole utility field, representing $12,000,000,000 of invested capital of our citizens, would be in a chaotic condition. Investors, whether in local utilities or holding companies, would be up in the air as to their investments. If section 11 of the Senate bill, called the "death clause", should become a law, a cloud would be placed on all investments in holding companies; and, according to the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, also on the stock of all utility operating companies, which might result in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to utility stockholders who have already suffered too great a loss.

In casting my vote in favor of the House bill, to regulate holding companies, I am voting in accord with the national platform of my party, which declares for the regulation of holding companies and not for their death.

I have given this bill and the Senate bill very serious consideration. I am in sympathy with the efforts to curb, control, and eliminate useless holding companies, not only in the public-utility field but in all fields, and I believe the pending House bill presents the best way to accomplish that purpose. Believing such, I must vote my convictions.

Neither the pending bill nor the Senate bill is what can be called, by any stretch of the imagination, the "recovery legislation." The pending legislation is long-distance reform legislation. Neither the Senate nor the House bill will put a single man to work, and it is altogether probable that if the Senate bill were passed many now employed would lose their jobs, and many others who otherwise might get work would remain unemployed, because holding companies are not going to spend any money in enlarging plants or improving the same because of the uncertainty that would exist as to whether or not such companies will be able to operate after the period of limitation provided in the Senate bill.

It appears that the President favors section 11 of the Senate bill. I have supported the President's recovery program 100 percent. I think he launched a great emergency relief program and that he saved the country from an economic and financial collapse, the likes of which the world has never known before, but, as stated above, the pending bill is in no way an emergency relief measure. The President has a right to his opinion as to the best way for solving the holding-company problem. He probably knows more about the subject than I do, or the Members of the House. He may be right, but I cannot see the problem as he does.

The threat has been made during this debate that those who vote against incorporating in the House bill the "death sentence" contained in section 11 of the Senate bill will be held accountable on the next election day and very likely be retired to private life. Mr. Chairman, I have had this same charge hurled at me before, when I have seen fit to vote my honest judgment. I cannot properly serve my district as a Representative in this House if I have to keep my eyes on the ballot box. I have to live with myself and be on speaking terms with myself, and I can only do so by voting my honest convictions as a Member of the House, without regard to the effect of said votes on my political future. I have followed this course thus far during my 9 years of service in this body, and I intend to follow the same line of action as long as my constituents are kind enough to continue my membership in this body.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, more falsehoods, deliberate misrepresentations, and malicious propaganda have been spread about the utility holding-company bill now pending than about any other bill.

EVERYBODY IS INTERESTED IN THIS BILL

Every person is directly and vitally interested in the utility holding-company bill. He is interested either as a consumer who buys gas or electricity or he is interested as a stockholder who has invested in an operating utility company or in a utility holding company. In determining my vote on this bill I considered all these interests.

MY VOTE PROTECTED THE CONSUMER AND THE INVESTOR

I considered the interests of the consumer and the interests of the investor. In casting my vote for the so-called "death sentence", which is in reality no "death sentence" at all, I voted for the greater welfare of the people as a whole, and not for a specially favored few. I voted to protect the consumer against extraordinary rates for gas and electricity. I voted to protect the investor in stocks or bonds of a utility operating company.

I voted to protect those who invested in bonds of underlying utility subholding companies. I voted to protect every man, woman, and child who may hereafter make investments in utility holding or operating companies. I voted to protect a Democratic form of government against the rulers of giant monopolies who were extending their hands to throttle the Government of the people and to subject it to their will. In voting for the so-called "death sentence" I voted to abolish dishonesty and unfair monopolistic trade practices, and last but not least, I voted with the administration and with our beloved President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I hope that before long the people will know the true facts concerning this legislation. I hope that out of the maze of vicious and false propaganda, the truth will stand out like a beacon so that it may be seen far and wide. I know that then everyone will applaud the purposes and the aim of this bill in the form in which it was presented by the administration.

THE PASSAGE OF THIS BILL WILL NOT DEPRECIATE SECURITIES

Where utility securities have any value, that value will be preserved and protected. The passage of the utility holding company bill will not result in the loss of a single penny to any investor. In fact, it will result in further protection and increasing the value of their securities and at the same time reducing exorbitant utility rates.

WITH COMPARATIVELY SMALL INVESTMENT THE HUGE HOLDING COMPANIES DOMINATE THE UTILITY FIELD

The assets of the entire operating electric utility industry is estimated to have cost about $12,000,000,000. The holding companies own only about three billions of the securities of these operating companies. Yet, in spite of the fact that the holding companies have one-fourth of the utility assets they virtually control and dominate the entire utility industry. Three large holding companies control 40 percent of the operating electric utility industry of the entire United States. These giant supercompanies have grown so large—so powerful and so arrogant—with economic and political influence that it was impossible to regulate them. They sought to dominate the Government itself. They became too big to be governed, too powerful to be regulated.

THE "DEATH SENTENCE" IS A MYTH

Let me make this clear: The so-called "death sentence" is a clever name invented by utility propagandists. There is no such thing as a "death sentence" in the pending bill.

The bill does not affect operating companies but only holding companies. It gives holding companies until 1940—5 years—and with the consent of the Commission until 1942—7 years—to rearrange their affairs. But even after 7 years a utility holding company need not dissolve itself. It must only divest itself from unfair and inequitable management and service contracts which it has forced upon subsidiary operating companies. Even under the clause containing the so-called "death sentence," a utility holding company could continue to exist without divesting itself of a single share or any part of its investments by simply continuing hereafter as an investment trust.

Even the so-called "death sentence" clause permits holding companies where their operating companies are located within a contiguous geographical area, so that the holding company may legitimately be said to render service to the operating company. Holding companies which manage geographically integrated utility systems are permitted even by the so-called "death sentence" clause.

In 1929 the bankers and corporate insiders sold utility holding-company securities to the public, having a market value of $19,000,000,000, while their actual investment in plant equipment and capital assets represented only $3,000,000,000. By this oversale of holding-company securities the people lost $16,000,000,000. This was no accident. This was a deliberate and willful robbery of the public. Sixteen billions; not millions, but billions taken from the public. Remember this figure. Bear this in mind when you hear someone defend the utility holding companies. These giant companies cannot justify their existence. They are a danger to the investors. They exploit the consumers. They are of no value to operating companies.

GIANT HOLDING COMPANIES HAVE DEPRIVED INVESTORS OF THEIR SAVINGS AND KEPT THE RATES TO THE CONSUMERS HIGH

If you wonder why the investors lost money, why the stockholders of the local companies received no dividends, why the rates of gas and electric are so high, and why the abolition of a few holding companies was necessary, here is the reason, here is the picture in all its ugliness; here is the truth.

Here are a few examples that will interest you.

THE PHILADELPHIA COMPANY EXPLOITS THE PITTSBURGH FIELD

Here in Pittsburgh we can appreciate the need for the abolition of utility holding companies. The high rates for gas, electric, street cars, and busses are traceable to the fact that the entire utility industry of Pittsburgh is held in the clutches of the Byllesby companies, its sub holding companies, bank affiliates, and subsidiaries. The Philadelphia company, which exploits the Pittsburgh utility field, controls and dominates the Equitable Gas Co., the Duquesne Light Co., the Pittsburgh Railways Co., the Pittsburgh Motor Coach Co., and others.

If you have wondered why street-car rates are so high in the Pittsburgh district, you will find the answer in the manner in which the Pittsburgh Railways Co. has been supermanaged and supermilked by the holding and management companies.

While the modern trend is for the substitution of busses in the transportation field, the Philadelphia company refused to install busses. Why? Perhaps because the Duquesne Light Co. holds a 50-year contract to supply energy to the Pittsburgh Railways Co. Imagine an agreement for service and supply of power over a period of 50 years. No sane business man would enter into an agreement of this kind. That was just one way that the holding companies have milked the Pittsburgh Railways Co.; have prevented fare reductions and have prevented improved service.

In order to avoid payment of toll charges on city and county bridges and to refuse payment of its share of street improvements, the Pittsburgh Railways Co.'s business has been so manipulated that a continual and consistent deficit is always shown. These deficits are shown not by reason of poor business or lack of patronage but solely by the form of accounting used and the financial superstructure involved.

Busses do not use electric energy like street railways do. Is not that the reason why the Philadelphia company refuses to extend bus service to replace or supplement inadequate street-car service? The Philadelphia company controls the Duquesne Light Co. that sells the power and the Pittsburgh Railways Co. that buys the power, and as long as that holding company dominates the utility field in Pittsburgh the people of Pittsburgh will continue to pay high rates for gas and electricity, for street-car service, and be denied the use of modern busses.

A $500 INVESTMENT WRITTEN UP TO FIVE AND ONE-HALF MILLION DOLLARS

Byllesby & Co., a large utility holding company—the same holding company that controls the utility field in the Pittsburgh district—purchased the common stock of the United Railways Investment Holding Co. for $500 and then transferred it to a subsidiary company for $5,500,000. Imagine selling the public a $500 block of stock for five and one-half million!

HOLDING COMPANIES WHICH COLLECTED AND KEPT INCOME TAXES FROM THEIR SUBSIDIARIES

Here is how holding companies cheated operating companies by the device of making consolidated income-tax returns:

For 3 years the Associated Gas & Electric Co. collected $2,900,000 from subsidiaries for income taxes but did not pay the Government a single cent. From 1922 to 1930 the Cities Service Co. collected $11,600,000 in income taxes from subsidiaries, paid out $1,700,000 and pocketed a profit of $9,800,000 on money collected from its own subsidiaries to pay to the Government as taxes. The stockholders of the operating companies were thus robbed of dividends and profits to that amount, and the rates to consumers were increased by that sum.

THE PEOPLE LOST $16,000,000,000 IN WORTHLESS INVESTMENTS

Here is how the people lost $16,000,000,000 in holding-company securities: Holding companies pyramided company upon company, selling the holdings of one to another newly created one, and skyrocketing the price and writing up the value on each operation.

WRITE-UPS

When the Electric Bond & Share Co. purchased certain Texas utility property they paid $2,400,000. Several months later they conveyed the same property to a subsidiary for $10,500,000, or a write-up of 400 percent. The Appalachian Electric Power Co. bought properties for seventy-two million and transferred them to a subsidiary for one hundred and thirty-nine million. When the Cities Service Power & Light Co. took over the Cities Service Co. the assets on the books were written up from forty million to one hundred and six million, or a write-up of 165 percent. The United Gas & Improvement Co. system showed write-ups of $10,000,000 on operating companies and fourteen million on subholding companies.

Write-ups of operating companies of the Cities Service System were more than $134,000,000. The write-ups of 18 holding companies exceeded $2,000,000,000. The purpose of these write-ups is, of course, for the holding company to get out all of its investment, make a large profit, and still retain ownership, control, and domination of the properties.

EXORBITANT MANAGEMENT FEES

In order to support their over-capitalization and inflated values, the holding companies have resorted to every known device to extort money from the operating companies, from the consumers and the investing public. These holding-company supermanagers charge large fees for managing companies in which they own very little stock. The Electric Bond & Share Co. received in 1927 management fees of $9,000,000 for supplying service which actually cost only $4,000,000, netting them a profit of over $5,000,000 for managing their own company.

THE HOLDING COMPANY EXCLUDES INDEPENDENT BUSINESS

One of the most glaring abuses of the utility holding companies lies in the manner in which they compel subsidiary and operating companies to buy engineering, construction, and other services, and energy at exorbitant rates from the holding companies without permitting the operating company to obtain these services at the lowest possible prices from free and independent commercial sources. In that manner utility holding companies have syphoned billions of dollars from operating companies into their own coffers, and have increased to the same extent the rates that must be paid by consumers for gas and electricity.

Some utility holding companies have as many as a hundred subsidiaries. Every utility holding company monopolizes the furnishing of all services to all underlying and operating companies.

A utility holding company monopolizes the construction of buildings for the operating company. It monopolizes the furnishing of managerial and engineering services. It monopolizes the furnishing of every single item for which it is able to create a subsidiary company. Thus the utility holding company excludes the contractor from bidding on and building for subsidiary utility companies. It excludes the carpenter, the bricklayer, and other building trades from independently working for these operating companies. It excludes the independent engineering firm from furnishing managers to an operating company. The utility holding company excludes every independent business man, large or small, from doing business with its subsidiary holding and operating companies. It is a supertrust, which monopolizes all the business within the sphere of its web of subsidiary companies.

DO YOU WANT PROTECTION TO THE INVESTOR AND CONSUMER OR TO THE SUPERUTILITY HOLDING COMPANY?

The so-called "death sentence" is no "death sentence" at all, as I have said before, but life to the utility holding companies means death to the independent merchant, the independent business and professional man.

Death to the holding companies means life to the operating company and life to the independent merchant and professional man.

Death to the holding company means life to the investor, it means safety to the investor in utility stocks, it means protection to everyone who buys securities in utility companies.

Death to the utility holding companies means cheaper rates, better service, and a free economic system.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On June 27, 1935:

H. R. 1703. An act for the relief of Cletus F. Hoban;

H. R. 7205. An act to amend the Ship Mortgage Act, 1920, otherwise known as "section 30" of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, approved June 5, 1920, to allow the benefits of said act to be enjoyed by owners of certain vessels of the United States of less than 200 gross tons; and

H. R. 7652. An act to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes.

On June 28, 1935:

H. R. 4505. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Maine and the Dominion of Canada to maintain a bridge already constructed across the St. John River between Madawaska, Maine, and Edmundston, New Brunswick, Canada;

H. R. 6630. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.;

H. R. 6717. An act to amend section 1 of the act of July 8, 1932;

H. R. 6988. An act authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45;

H. R. 7044. An act authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6, in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21, in Sabine County, Tex.;

H. R. 7083. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind.;

H. R. 7374. An act to amend section 98 of the Judicial Code to provide for the inclusion of Durham County, N. C., in the middle district of North Carolina, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7526. An act to amend the act approved February 20, 1931 (Public, No. 703, 71st Cong.), entitled "An act to provide for special assessments for the paving of roadways and the laying of curbs and gutters";

H. R. 7765. An act to amend (1) an act entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia"; (2) an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia"; to regulate the giving of official bonds by officers and employees of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 324. Joint resolution to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

On June 29, 1935:

H. R. 1315. An act for the relief of Thomas J. Gould;

H. R. 2708. An act for the relief of James M. Pace;

H. R. 3180. An act for the relief of Ruth Nolan and Anna Panozza;

H. R. 3574. An act for the relief of Nellie T. Francis;

H. R. 4105. An act for the relief of Julian C. Dorr;

H. R. 4817. An act for the relief of Matthew E. Hanna;

H. R. 6504. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the grading and classification of clerks in the Foreign Service of the United States of America, and providing compensation therefor";

H. R. 7160. An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges; and

H. R. 7254. An act for the relief of Lily M. Miller.

On July 1, 1935:

H. R. 805. An act for the relief of Luther M. Turpin and Amanda Turpin;

H. R. 5774. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Rogue River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon with a view to the control of its floods;

H. R. 5775. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Siuslaw River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon with a view to the control of its floods;

H. R. 5776. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Yaquina River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon with a view to the control of its floods;

H. R. 5777. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Siletz River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon with a view to the control of its floods;

H. R. 7313. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of Gafford Creek, Ark.;

H. R. 7314. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of Point Remove Creek, Ark., a tributary of the Arkansas River;

H. R. 7600. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of the Tanana River and Chena Slough, Alaska; and

H. R. 7870. An act to provide a preliminary examination of the Purgatoire (Picketwire) and Apishapa Rivers, in the State of Colorado, with a view to the control of their floods and the conservation of their waters.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1½ minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I failed to hear my name on the motion to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Had I had the opportunity to vote, I would have voted against substituting the Senate bill for the House bill.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear my name called a moment ago upon the roll call on the passage of this bill. Had I had the opportunity to vote, I would have voted "aye."

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Friday next; and that when the House adjourns on Friday next it shall adjourn to meet the following Monday.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope it will not be necessary next week to eliminate Calendar Wednesday. My committee has about 25 bills on the calendar and there are only two committees ahead of us and I understand each committee has only a few bills. I realize this has been necessary in the past on account of important business, but I hope it will not be necessary to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business in the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—PUERTO RICO

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes", I transmit herewith certified copies of laws and resolutions enacted by the Thirteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico during its third regular session, February 11 to April 14, 1935.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 2, 1935.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the bill which we have just completed I was approached in the lobbies of this Capitol in a manner which seems to me incompatible with a proper consideration of the high responsibilities of our office, and I desire to speak briefly to that point in order that there may be no misapprehension as to the considerations that have entered into this case.

I come here, surely, as one entitled to recognition as not amenable to the influence of the so-called "Power Trust." Throughout the period of my public life for 17 years it has been almost one continuous contest—resulting three times in my defeat in no small measure by these very interests about whom we have heard so much.

Into my State, while I was Governor, came Mr. Samuel Insull, of Chicago. In the height of his power, he not only dominated two-thirds of our utilities, but 5 of our newspapers through interests closely allied with him, 40 of our banking units—38 of which were subsequently closed—and many of the major industries of our State. I say this in order that there may be no misapprehension as to where my sympathies have lain in the tremendous issues with which this country is now faced.

Meanwhile it is important to keep our own deliberations clear of improper influence of any kind. During the consideration of the "death sentence" clause in the holding-company bill, Thomas G. Corcoran, Esq., coauthor with Benjamin V. Cohen, Esq., of the bill, came to me in the lobby of this Capitol and stated to me, with what he himself termed "brutal frankness", that if I should vote against the "death sentence" for public utility holding companies he would find it necessary to stop construction on the Passamaquoddy Dam in my district.

Such a suggestion from such a source is repugnant to every instinct of decency in legislation [applause] and to a proper regard for our constitutional oath of office.

During the past 2 months Mr. Corcoran has been the personal representative of the President in clearing up the details incident to starting construction at the Passamaquoddy, and only this last week construction really commenced with the arrival at Eastport of Maj. Philip B. Fleming, who is to have charge of the project:

I do not know what other Members may have faced suggestions of this kind. I do not believe the President would countenance any such course if he were fully informed. [Applause.] This statement on the floor of the House seems the only way to protect this project, which means so much to the people of my State of Maine.

I share with the President his concern at the concentration of economic power. It seems necessary, however, that the Membership of this House, without regard to party, shall also keep the country alert to the dangers implicit in the concentration of political power. [Applause.]

It is our task to assist the President in every way within our power to keep the work-relief fund clear of political abuse in accordance with the President's earnest and repeatedly expressed desire. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. I challenge that statement.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know where this request was made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi to address the House for 5 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have heard a good deal about lobbyists who have attempted to use undue influence on Members of the House. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no first-hand information as to their activities. They must have thought I was not worth wasting time on.

I know nothing whatsoever of the charge made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], but if any such proposition was made, I take the responsibility for saying it was not made with the knowledge or consent of the President of the United States.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Not until I get through with my statement.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman think the President should disavow it?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Maine evidently has not called it to the President's attention. I am surprised to see him take this course without first calling it to the attention of the administration. It looks very much like a political movement to me.

The last time I talked with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] he was with the administration on this bill.

This has been a fight between the American people and the Power Trust. The Power Trust won, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] helped them do it.

I know the President is earnestly interested in the Passamaquoddy project, and I think that after what he has done for the people of Maine toward that great development, to make such a charge publicly without first calling it to his attention is a poor reciprocation, to say the least of it.

For a long time I was the only man on the floor of the House who advocated the development of the Passamaquoddy project, until my distinguished friend [Mr. MORAN] came to the House a few years ago. Mr. MORAN has worked faithfully on it, and his efforts are now bearing fruit.

It is a national proposition. It is the President's desire to bring to all the American people the benefits of electric energy, the greatest material gift God has bestowed on humanity outside of the soil from which we live.

The President would spurn any suggestion of using undue influence of any kind in order to unduly affect or influence Members of Congress. [Applause.]

The people of Maine have no coal, gas, or oil for fuel. Their hope is the development of their hydroelectrical power, and I am sorry to see the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] line up with the very forces that would destroy the Quoddy project.

I regret that the gentleman from Maine decided to go against us on this proposition, because I believe that when he voted against substituting the Senate bill for the House measure he cast a vote that is detrimental to the welfare of the people of his State, regardless of the reasons he may assign for his vote. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I shall object to any more remarks on that.

Mr. MAVERICK. We did not object when the gentleman spoke.

Mr. SNELL. We have had one on each side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MAVERICK. I did not object when the Republicans talked. I suppose I cannot say anything. I have been present in conversation with Mr. Corcoran and Mr. BREWSTER, and know something about it. I do not believe a word of it, and I want to say something about it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MAVERICK. All right, but I want to make it plain I did not object to Mr. SNELL or any Republican talking. I refrained from objecting to a Republican talking on a subject in which I am concerned and then they object to me talking. It is not fair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 8021, Rept. No. 1416) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, for present consideration, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the conferees be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

LOUIS LUDLOW,
J. BUELL SNYDER,
M. A. ZIONCHECK,
JOHN F. DOCKWEILER,
EDWARD C. MORAN, JR.,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
D. LANE POWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
CARL HAYDEN,
FREDERICK HALE,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, JR.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 3 to 10, inclusive, and 12 to 32, inclusive, to the bill (H. R. 8021) "making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes" submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The amendments in question all relate to additional personnel or changes in compensation of personnel under the Senate. They are reported to the House in disagreement in accordance with the rules of the House, being legislative in character. The managers on the part of the House propose to recommend to the House that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

LOUIS LUDLOW,
J. BUELL SNYDER,
M. A. ZIONCHECK,
JOHN F. DOCKWEILER,
EDWARD C. MORAN, JR.,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
D. LANE POWERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments 3 to 8, inclusive, Senate amendment no. 10, and Senate amendments nos. 12 to 32, inclusive, and concur in the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUDLOW moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 3 to 8, including no. 10, and nos. 12 to 32, inclusive, and concur in the same as follows:

Senate amendment no. 3, page 2, line 21, strike out "minute and Journal clerk" and insert "Parliamentarian and Journal clerk."

Senate amendment no. 4, page 3, line 9, strike out "three" and insert "four."

Senate amendment no. 5, page 3, lines 10 and 11, strike out "messenger in library, $1,380;".

Senate amendment no. 6, page 3, lines 11 and 12, strike out "assistant in library, $1,740" and insert "two assistants in the library at $1,740 each."

Senate amendment no. 7, page 3, line 13, strike out "$120,120" and insert "$123,360."

Senate amendment no. 8, page 4, line 13, strike out "assistant clerk, $2,220" and insert "two assistant clerks, at $2,220 each."

Senate amendment no. 10, page 6, line 12, strike out "three" and insert "four."

Senate amendment no. 12: Page 7, lines 3 and 4, strike out "assistant clerk, $2,220" and insert "two assistant clerks, at $2,220 each."

Senate amendment no. 13: Page 7, line 5, strike out "$493,200" and insert "$503,460."

Senate amendment no. 14: Page 7, line 23, after "$2,640", insert "one, $2,100."

Senate amendment no. 15: Page 7, line 23, strike out "four" and insert "three."

Senate amendment no. 16: Page 7, line 23, after "each", insert ", one, to the secretary for the majority, $1,800."

Senate amendment no. 17: Page 7, line 23, after "messengers—", insert "one, $2,640,".

Senate amendment no. 18: Page 7, line 24, strike out "three" and insert "four."

Senate amendment no. 19: Page 7, line 25, strike out "30" and insert "29."

Senate amendment no. 20: Page 8, line 2, after "$2,400" insert "and $240 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

Senate amendment no. 21: Page 8, line 11, strike out "11" and insert "13."

Senate amendment no. 22: Page 8, line 15, strike out "one, $1,440" and insert "three at $1,440 each."

Senate amendment no. 23: Page 8, line 16, strike out "25" and insert "29."

Senate amendment no. 24: Page 8, line 16, after "each", insert ", three, at $480 each."

Senate amendment no. 25: Page 8, line 16, strike out "six" and insert "seven."

Senate amendment no. 26: Page 8, line 19, strike out "$235,748" and insert "$254,868."

Senate amendment no. 27: Page 8, line 21, after "Arms:", insert "Lieutenant, $1,740;".

Senate amendment no. 28: Page 8, line 21, strike out "Special" and insert "special."

Senate amendment no. 29: Page 8, line 22, strike out "$51,960" and insert "$53,700."

Senate amendment no. 30: Page 8, line 24, strike out "$3,060" and insert "$3,600."

Senate amendment no. 31: Page 8, line 25, strike out "20" and insert "26."

Senate amendment no. 32: Page 8, line 26, strike out "$42,840" and insert "$53,100."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me a moment or two?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to yield to the gentleman from New York after I have made an explanation of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments relate exclusively to increases in salaries and to personnel of the Senate employees. All other items in disagreement have been ironed out. The House Subcommittee on Appropriations, of which I am chairman, at the beginning of the present Congress very properly took the position that legislation of that character on appropriation bills is out of order and should not be tolerated as a matter of good practice. The function of the Committee on Appropriations is not to legislate but to make appropriations to conform with existent legislation. Numerous employees of the House of Representatives came to the Subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of the legislative bill early this year and presented to us claims for increase in salaries. Some of these were not such that we could countenance on merit, but some were undoubtedly meritorious, but we laid down the general policy that increases of salaries on appropriation bills, being legislation, should not be countenanced and that all legislation of that character ought to come in regular order through legislative committees. We therefore presented the legislative appropriation bill to the House and put it through the House of Representatives clean of all increases and clean of all new positions.

Now let me digress to review briefly the history of this bill. In accordance with an understanding in the last session, I consulted the chairman of the Senate subcommittee in charge of the legislative bill and in a conference that was held before we framed our bill I had what I thought was a very complete understanding with him that they would pursue a similar course over there. I am not in any way impugning his integrity or his good faith, but as a matter of fact, the other body paid no attention whatever to our understanding and they piled up the bill in the Senate with 26 new positions totaling an expense of $46,000 a year, and 5 increases in salary totaling an increase of $2,340.

The members of our House subcommittee, Democrats and Republicans, took the same attitude on this proposition. We did not for a moment condone the action of the Senate. We do not condone it now. Nevertheless the time has come when something must be done in regard to the final enactment of this legislation. The appropriations for the House and the Senate, the Government Printing Office, the Library of Congress, and other establishments on Capitol Hill have expired because of limitation of law, the fiscal year having closed on June 30, and we are now operating without funds. The Senate absolutely refuses to back down. It asserts the contention that it is none of the business of the House what the Senate does in regard to increases of salary or increases of personnel in its own force, and contends that it is a better judge than we are of what is needed over there. I may say in all fairness to them that they accord to the House of Representatives the same privilege which they claim for themselves. Some of the changes they have made in the bill are horrifying to our sense of economy. In one office, the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, which has seemingly been functioning without any great disability or inconvenience, they have put 15 additional employees. We do not like it, but at the same time we have reached an impasse and something has to be done. In the final meeting of the conference committee, the two sides being deadlocked, an agreement was worked out, however, as to the future. The Senate conferees agreed with the House conferees that never again, so far as they are able to control it, will there be any legislation of this character tacked onto appropriation bills, and that in both Chambers whenever propositions are brought forward to increase salaries or to add new positions to the personnel, it must be done in the regular way through legislation, thus preserving to the Committee on Appropriations its traditional and proper function, the function of appropriating money to carry out authorizations made by legislation, and with that understanding, and based on that understanding only, have the House conferees agreed that through force of circumstances we will allow this limited number of Senate increases and new personnel to go through.

Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read to the House and to be made a part of my remarks on this occasion a copy of an agreement which has been entered into by the conferees of the House and the Senate, and which simultaneously is to be read by Senator TYDINGS as chairman of the Senate subcommittee, in the Senate, to be made a part of the RECORD in that body. I ask for the reading of the statement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of both Houses at the conference on the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1936, in considering certain amendments pertaining to the creation of new positions and the increase in compensation of certain existing positions under the Senate unanimously agreed that it should be within the province of each House to determine without interference from the other the number and compensation of its own employees and that in the future they will, so far as within their power, insist that all new positions and changes in compensation for either body shall be authorized by separate legislative enactment or by simple resolution of either House before any such new position or change in compensation is incorporated in the annual appropriation bill. It was further agreed that there should be joint action of the two Houses by a legislative measure other than the regular appropriation bill to effect a survey of all positions and the compensation thereof under the Senate and House of Representatives for the purpose of establishing so far as may be practicable uniformity in the number of positions and in the compensation for similar positions under each House.

Mr. LUDLOW. The House conferees believe that this agreement will effectually remove a bone of contention that has existed through many Congresses between the House and the Senate, and at the same time it will wipe out what has grown to be a very pernicious custom of legislating on appropriation bills. We believe it is a very wholesome agreement, and in consideration of the fact that we have secured this agreement we ask the House of Representatives to recede and concur in the few Senate amendments.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] 5 minutes.

Mr. TABER. First, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. TABER. If I recall correctly, it was only a few months ago that another increase in the number of employees for the Senate was made just about similar to this in amount?

Mr. LUDLOW. Does the gentleman mean since the last fiscal year? They provided themselves since that time with a session clerk, as I understand. It was done not by legislation on an appropriation bill, but by a Senate resolution.

Mr. TABER. We had a long disagreement with the Senate within just a very few months over an attempt on the part of the Senate to increase this force very largely.

Mr. LUDLOW. Not this session.

Mr. TABER. No; not at this session; but at the last session.

Mr. LUDLOW. The same question arose on this bill in the last fiscal year. As I say, it has been a continuing quarrel, if we can call it such, for years and years. This seeks to establish a new policy which will respect proper traditions and customs. In other words, we hope it will reform this situation so that we may go ahead in the future without these continual bickerings between the two branches of Congress.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am not unmindful of the fact that the Senate and House each has claimed the right to name whatever legislative or other assistants they may want in their own bodies. Also, I am not unmindful of the fact that there is a responsibility resting upon us for the appropriations of the Government. Last year the Senate came in with a great big increase, substantially about what is before us now, as I remember it. Now they are here again with an increase of $50,000 in the expense of running the Senate, providing them with additional clerical help. It seems to me that having operated the Senate with just as much business as they have now over a long period of years, there is absolutely no excuse for these increases.

I think the Senate should have more sense of responsibility in voting out the people's money. I do not believe it is becoming in any part of the Government today to go out and recklessly and irresponsibly increase the expenses of operating the Government. I, for one, cannot vote for these Senate amendments. I cannot do it, because I believe if this House calls it more forcibly to the attention of the Senate, the Senate will recede.

I hope the motion will not be agreed to.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New York [Mr. TABER] well knows my position upon amendments of this kind to appropriation bills. There is no difference between his ideas and mine upon that subject. He and I have both been upon the Appropriations Committee for a sufficient length of time to know that there is continual contention every session of Congress over increased salaries placed upon appropriation bills in the Senate. The gentleman knows that the rules of the House prevent any employee of the House from getting an increase in salary or of there being a new position created on an appropriation bill. Therefore the Senate has an advantage over us. They can increase and do increase their salaries and the number of employees whenever they please on this bill, and the House cannot increase a single one of its salaries or create a new position.

Gentlemen, this is an ancient contest. I ran back the parliamentary precedents for many years, and it has been almost an annual contest between the House and Senate, this question of the right of each House to determine the number of its employees and the compensation paid to them, as a matter of comity between the two Houses. I am not prepared to say that that is not correct, because each of us has a responsibility to our constituents and ought to be held responsible by our constituents; but I deplore this continual wrangling every year and the continual mounting of the Senate pay roll for its employees every year. This session they placed these amendments on this bill, detailed to you by my colleague, Mr. LUDLOW, amounting to a little over $486,000. The question was as to how to stop it in the future. Many of the places which they created over there are held by them to be essential by reason of increased business and increased duties. There is no doubt about that. The problem is to adopt a procedure to govern us in the future, so this issue will not forever and forever recur to plague us.

Now, this is the legislative appropriation bill. There has not yet been a cent appropriated for the fiscal year starting July 1 to pay the salary of any Member of the Senate or the House. Not a cent has been appropriated to pay the salary of any employee of House or of the Senate. The old fiscal year has expired and the new one begun, so that we must either yield or not have any money with which to meet these expenses.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understood the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senate has agreed to not make any further increases hereafter?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. KNUTSON. But how can this Senate bind future Senates, and of what value is such an agreement?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will come to that in a moment. Therefore we had an understanding with this subcommittee of the Senate that so far as they were concerned, and so far as is within their power, they would not allow any more amendments of this character to be placed on appropriation bills in the Senate.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] asked how they could bind future Congresses. They can effectively enforce the rule if those gentlemen will make points of order on the floor of the Senate when such amendments are offered, and refuse to bring them back in their committee reports so long as they are Members of the Senate and members of the subcommittee.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman think we can hold out in the House as long as they can in the Senate, that we can do without pay as long as they can?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, yes; we can bow our necks and stop the payment of all salaries; we can be stubborn and not give to the measure that proper consideration and moderation that Members of Congress should give to legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. For over a hundred years they have exercised this privilege of determining the salaries of their own employees. They have increased the number of their employees, and now we want to change the procedure and have made a step in the right direction.

The gentleman from Minnesota asks if we can do it. We cannot bind a future Senate, no; but this will be a precedent. It will be put upon the record and be brought to the attention of the country at large, and it will be observed.

Now I shall tell you what ought to be done, I shall tell you how this thing has been working before the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is chairman. Members of the House on behalf of employees of the House, and employees of the House themselves, come before the subcommittee and ask for salary increases based on the belief that employees of the Senate performing similar duties are receiving more pay. The same thing happens in the case of employees of the Senate; they want salary increases because employees of the House performing similar duties are receiving more pay than they—just see-sawing; and instead of saying we will reduce these higher salaries to the lower level we increase the lower salaries to the higher level. As a result, the expenses of this Congress are mounting; and if it keeps on the time will come when a real investigation will be made.

I ask you gentlemen to agree to this report. Allow them this concession, and we will do our best to stop it in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman inform the House the relative number of employees of the Senate and the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The House is so much larger than the Senate, of course, that we have the greater number of employees.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman give us the number?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not the number in my mind now.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. There is no justification for the increase that is demanded by the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; there is some justification; they need more employees in their post office. There is no question about that.

Mr. THURSTON. About what proportion of the increase is justified?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not recall; perhaps half of it, or more.

Mr. THURSTON. We gave them $40,000, when they are really entitled to $20,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But remember this: They are never going to yield. They have claimed this privilege for a century, and they are not going to concede it. The agreement that was reached marks a definite step in the right direction.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman undoubtedly recalls the instance some years ago when the reportorial staff of the House of Representatives was in danger of being broken up because the salaries were on such a low scale compared with those of the reportorial staff of the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 3 to 8, inclusive, no. 10, and nos. 12 to 32, inclusive.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 and concur therein with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUDLOW moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the word "law" insert the word "assistant."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 29

To authorize and direct the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of H. R. 8021, the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1936, to add an additional section making the appropriations therein effective as of July 1, 1935.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to change the numbering of section 4 thereof to section 5 and to insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. The appropriations and authority with respect to appropriations contained herein shall be available from and including July 1, 1935, for the purposes respectively provided in such appropriations and authority. All obligations incurred during the period between June 30, 1935, and the date of the enactment of this act in anticipation of such appropriations and authority are hereby ratified and confirmed if in accordance with the terms thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, I think, is self-explanatory.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DIRIGIBLES

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, my former colleague, the Honorable Francis B. Condon, now a justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, introduced bill H. R. 2744 in the present Congress on January 3, authorizing a Government loan for the construction of commercial airships and to establish a regular trans-Atlantic airship service from the Atlantic coast of the United States to England.

The fact that Justice Condon introduced and supported this bill is accepted by his numerous friends in Congress as evidence the bill has outstanding merit and that the airships of American design, proposed to be constructed, would be a great improvement over the German type which we had previously constructed for our Navy Department.

I consider the bill, H. R. 2744, one of the really important measures that have been submitted to this Congress. The construction of large airships that will be strong, safe, economical to construct and to operate may create immediate work for 5,000 unemployed, may increase the sale of our products in foreign markets and provide a valuable secondary defense for our country, and should not be delayed.

I want to go on record as favoring the bill H. R. 2744 and I desire Members of Congress, the press, and the public to know about this opportunity for our Nation to establish a new, safe, and dependable major form of transportation, which may give reliable and fast service to all parts of the world. For this purpose I requested the inventor of the new suspension-bridge frame airship to submit a brief which I request shall be extended, with my present statement, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The bill H. R. 2744, "authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make a loan for the construction and operation of airships in overseas trade, and for other purposes", is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of fostering the American airship industry and to promote American overseas trade with use of commercial airships, to be available in time of war, to encourage American design, construction, and operation of airships, to demonstrate the value and profit of overseas airship service, thus to promote its extension with private capital, and to provide immediate employment in airship construction, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed to lend the sum of $12,000,000 to the Respess Aeronautical Engineering Corporation for the purpose of constructing an airship plant, an Atlantic operating terminal, two airships employing the new suspension-bridge type structure, and each having not less than 7,000,000 cubic feet gas capacity, and for operating these airships in commercial service from the United States to England or a European country. Such loan shall carry interest charges at the rate of 3½ percent per annum, which shall cumulate during the period of constructing and testing such airships, and shall remain a lien on the patents and patent rights and all present and subsequently acquired assets of the corporation until paid. Such loan, plus accumulated interest, shall be paid in 10 annual payments, the first payment to be made 3 years after the date of the enactment of this act."

In the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2744) for American construction of lighter-than-air craft, we should recognize that our present valuation of airships is based entirely upon their construction with the German Zeppelin frame.

The Zeppelin frame is an indeterminate structure and may not be calculated upon normal engineering formulas. The stress analysis of such airships has been estimated upon what is known as an "empirical" formula that is based upon a compilation of facts gained from experience with previous airships. The Zeppelin frame is also unavoidably subject to reversal of stress, causing fatigue and crystallization of the duralumin metal. Thus, with uncertainty of calculation and the surety of reduction in the strength of the structure with fatigue, it cannot be a safe and dependable frame.

We offer an improved frame of the steel-suspension-bridge cable type, that is the strongest and most dependable structure in proportion to its weight, and this frame can be calculated as definitely and as accurately as we now calculate the strength of our suspension bridges, and in this structure the stress cannot reverse.

We can positively avoid structure failure in airships through the use of this frame, and we may also provide other improvements which establish a sound basis for a new evaluation of the airship.

To make it clear just what a change from the Zeppelin-frame airship to one employing the suspension-bridge frame means, one could build a duplicate of the Graf Zeppelin or of the U. S. S. Macon, using the suspension-bridge frame in place of the Zeppelin frame, and this airship would fly and maneuver in the same manner as the Graf Zeppelin or the U. S. S. Macon performed. Whatever may be said of the performance of the Zeppelin airship will apply equally to the Respess airship, but the Respess airship would have in addition the following advantages:

1. Greater strength and safety.
2. Decreased maintenance costs.
3. Reduction in time of construction.
4. Reduction in cost of construction.
5. More efficient use of material.
6. Greater inherent strength.
7. Ease of construction.
8. Increased length of life.
9. Simplicity, accuracy, and definiteness of calculation.
10. The stresses in this airship never reverse, thereby removing all fear of failure in the hull through fatigue and crystallization.
11. The net pay load will be unusually high, facilitating economical commercial operation.

These advantages were enumerated in an analysis and report by Messrs. Robinson & Steinman, consulting engineers, 117 Liberty Street, New York City, upon their examination of the plans for a Respess airship, 147 feet in diameter by 785 feet long, designed in accordance with specifications prepared by the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department for the construction of the Akron and Macon. Messrs. Robinson & Steinman are internationally recognized as authority on tension structures, and the accuracy of their analysis has been subsequently endorsed by many of the world's leading structural and aerodynamic engineers.

The size of an airship and the volume of lifting gas it may have determines its total buoyancy or lift in pounds. Its frame structure, cover, gas bags, permanent equipment, and interior structure required for operations constitutes a permanent weight which, when deducted from the total buoyancy, establishes what is termed the "useful load" of the airship.

The useful load of the airship may be divided, (1) in the weight of power equipment, which will determine the speed required; (2) in the amount of fuel and oil to be carried, which will determine the distance the airship may travel without refueling; (3) the amount of ballast required to be carried to insure proper operation and control of the airship; (4) the crew, their quarters, passenger accommodations, and service equipment; and (5) the pay load of passengers, mail, express, and freight when the airship is operated in commercial service.

A properly designed and constructed commercial airship may be adapted for military service. The military airship would have no passengers; therefore the interior structure, that may be built in for passenger use, could be removed and its weight with the weight of the passengers, mail, express, and freight would represent a very considerable lift that would be available for increasing the power for higher speed, for a larger quantity of fuel and oil for increased range of flight, or for military equipment such as airplanes, rapid-fire guns, ammunition, etc.

We are a commercial Nation. Airships for use should be constructed primarily as commercial carriers. Should we require these airships for military use we should change them, as explained, to be adapted for the particular military service to which they are intended to be employed. I feel it would be a serious mistake, at this time, for the United States to attempt to develop and construct airships for exclusive military service.

Military airships can be constructed or maintained in serviceable condition only through the appropriation of public funds, obtained by taxation. With the loss of the Akron and the Macon. I do not feel Congress will appropriate more funds for the construction or operation of new naval airships before several years have passed.

If the funds that were appropriated for building and operating the Akron and the Macon were loaned to some citizen-owned corporation for the construction of two airships for commercial overseas operation, the airships would have been insured, and were they lost by reason of structure failure the insurance money would have been available for building two more airships, in which the likelihood of structure failure would at least be reduced.

The plan of constructing commercial airships with Government loans, as provided in bill H. R. 2744, and with construction loans as now provided for merchant marine vessels, seems may offer the best assurance that we may build a fleet of great commercial airships and thus we may establish a valuable secondary defense without Government appropriations for the construction and maintenance of a military airship fleet.

The United States has always been the leader in transportation and communications. Leadership was usually achieved after many mistakes, which often appeared would block progress, but the mistakes served to disclose the necessity for improvement, and some American always came forward with the improvement. We should not expect American airships to be perfected unless we make some mistakes, and we should not make the greater mistake of refusing to accept the improvement when it is offered.

The Honorable PETER NORBECK, United States Senator from South Dakota, recently said, "I cannot subscribe to the logic that because we have not been able to build as good airships as Germany, we should quit building. I think we should learn to build. A number of mistakes have evidently been made in the building of these airships, but more mistakes were made in developing the harvesting machine, the sewing machine, and the cotton gin, but the hundreds of mistakes eventually led to a perfect product."

I subscribe to everything Senator NORBECK says, but I go further to state we should build better airships than Germany and I know we can do so. I have faith in American ingenuity and engineering skill. This faith is backed by a century of American engineering accomplishment, that refused to accept defeat and always has succeeded.

My faith in the capability of American engineers to construct improved airships is shown by 5 years of the hardest kind of work. I have secured the endorsement and reports of American engineers of international repute; I have followed the standard procedure of construction of a model of the suspension bridge structure for airships and have demonstrated same with tests in one of the leading Guggenheim Schools of Aeronautics, and I have financed this important development personally.

The driving force behind my effort has been chiefly the American achievement of something that is worth while and may result in public benefit to our Nation, through the establishment of a new major form of transportation that may become a safe, luxurious, and an economical mode of travel.

This development has now reached the stage where I believe the construction of American-designed commercial airships is warranted. I advocate the approval of bill H. R. 2744, by the present Congress, because I am convinced we need these airships now and should have them at as early date as possible. If funds are now made available, by the approval of this bill, I hope to construct two airships for North Atlantic service, in slightly more than 12 months. This statement is made with serious consideration of the possibility of such accomplishment.

The matter of building American airships for commercial service is not a new subject. Consideration of the matter was taken up and approved by the House of Representatives June 15, 1932, but was not acted on by the Senate. This bill proposed that the Government should subsidize the construction and operation of trans-Atlantic airships by the payment of $20 per mile, for the round trip, with 10,000 pounds of mail reservation to Europe, which payment made on the basis of the service of two round trips weekly, proposed under our bill H. R. 2744, would be $320,000 per week, or $13,280,000 annually paid for mail alone. This amount is more than the $12,000,000 we request as a loan, plus the sum of $1,200,00 which we estimate would cover our annual charge for the same mail service.

We do not require any subsidy nor mail contract. If the Government desires our airships to carry its mails we would be glad to carry same at not exceeding $1.50 per pound, on a 10,000-pound mail reservation, which charge is less than 10 percent of the $16 per pound estimated cost on the other basis. We feel that all Members of the present Congress who approved the bill H. R. 8681, June 15, 1932, should now approve the present bill, and those who opposed the other, because of the high mail charge, should now approve our bill H. R. 2744, because of the low mail charge.

If there is doubt as to the need of transoceanic airship service and if such service could secure patronage to make a profit, the data supplied in the report of the House Committee on Commerce, on bill H. R. 8681, June 15, 1932, should remove such doubt. I submit attached printed extracts in our bulletin 135–A taken from this report, for your consideration.

Rear Admiral H. I. Cone, retired, when chairman of the Advisory Committee of the United States Shipping Board Bureau, told the Federal Aviation Commission that "the Government should build a series of airships suitable for transoceanic passenger and express service." In that way, he declared, "the United States would assume world leadership in the aircraft industry, enabling us at the same time to recapture our lost position in the field of world shipping", adding: "The United States will be left hopelessly behind unless we take steps for building airships to fill out our merchant marine."

In the consideration of building and operating commercial airships, with subsequent construction of additional airships with private capital, the operations must be conducted at a profit. Thus, there are two vital points to be decided: the type and size of the airships to be constructed and the conditions under which the airships shall be operated.

In the choice of airships the type and size that provides the greatest strength and safety with assurance of rendering the most valuable commercial and military service should be selected. The conditions under which the airships may be operated should give assurance of a reasonable profit, after providing for replacements, liquidation of principal and interests on funds employed in the construction and in establishing the service.

In our bulletin 135, published prior to the loss of the Macon, we submitted a pertinent comparison of estimated detailed operating charges and income for two 7,000,000 cubic feet airships of the Goodyear-Zeppelin type and two of the Respess suspension-bridge type, of the same size, as operating under conditions proposed for trans-Atlantic service under bill H. R. 2744. These figures indicate an annual loss of $3,155,800 for the two Zeppelin-type airships, while the Respess airships indicate an annual profit of $2,902,600. I attach copy of the bulletin for your further information in detail.

In our estimate of operating charges we include $660,000 for "traffic soliciting and handling", to be paid steamship lines. This item was included upon the suggestion of Admiral Cone that the steamship lines, with their established traffic organizations, could handle the business cheaper than we could and the steamship lines may thus receive a larger net income than they might lose from business we may take from them. Admiral Cone further states we should secure 100 percent full loads instead of 75 percent of full loads, as we had estimated, thus it is possible our net earnings could be increased.

These estimates were submitted with realization that no service of this character has ever been operated, and consequently the figures must be taken as approximate. A sincere effort was made to submit figures that are conservative and it is felt that they do show fairly closely what might be expected.

The very substantial difference in the net result of operating the two types of airships emphasizes the difference in the types of structures employed, for the structure of an airship affects its strength and safety, it affects the period of time required for construction and cost of construction, the maintenance and operating costs, the period of useful life and requirement for annual depreciation, the cost of insurance, the useful load, the pay load upon which it must rely for profit in operation and it also affects the military value of the airship.

I could extend my remarks with technical details, to substantiate the really remarkable improvement that may result from airships being constructed with use of the suspension-bridge type frame. I feel, however, the subject will be more effectively presented by engineers who have no financial interest in our company. My aim is to present the commercial and military value of these airships, as warrant for Government support.

If bill H. R. 2744 is approved by Congress, and we are thus supplied with funds with which to construct and operate airships, we are assured of the fullest cooperation of the lighter-than-air personnel of the Navy, Army, Commerce, and other departments of the Government, to which technical forces we would add leading American structural and aerodynamic engineers engaged in private practice, also engineers who specialize in power plants, gas bags, aeronautical equipment, etc.

In other words, I expect we would assemble a specialized technical force of this character that may be unequalled in any other country of the world. Thus, with the combined knowledge, experience, and ingenuity of America's productive minds, we should build airships to be an accomplishment as perfect in result as is possible to attain, with our present knowledge of lighter-than-air craft.

These airships would be designed primarily for commercial service in extending our overseas trade, but also provision may be made for quickly converting the airships to military service in event of war. This conversion feature alone should be warrant for Government loans, with which to build these airships, for thus a very valuable military force would be available, ever ready for use, with a trained personnel signed to enter military service on demand.

That these airships will be a valuable addition to our air forces cannot be denied. We may not judge the importance of the airship by their limited military service in the World War, nor from our experience with the Akron and the Macon. The airships we would build would be strong, safe, and efficient airships that could be converted to become fighting airships, as our Navy airplane carriers are fighting ships. The Akron and the Macon fully demonstrated they could transport and service a number of airplanes, which would leave and return to the airships. In time we should expect to construct 10,000,000 cubic feet commercial airships, each of which could be converted to transport and service 20 airplanes.

The next war in which we may be engaged may be decided in the air, not on the sea or on land. The nation that has the most efficient airplanes should be best fitted to win air battles. No matter how effective military airplanes may become, when designed to operate from land airports or from navy aircraft carriers, such airplanes could be redesigned to be reduced very greatly in weight, increased in speed, and improved in military efficiency if they were designed to operate only from airships and never operate from the ground. This is an accepted fact and is not a theory.

The much discussed present grave danger of bombing and of poison gas attack, by enemy air forces, was not fully demonstrated in the World War, but may be demonstrated in a ghastly manner in the next war between great nations. The very uncertainty of this prospective danger is one of our serious problems in determining what we must do for defense against air attack.

Probably the greatest damage that may result from an aerial attack would be fires that may destroy cities, these fires being started by explosive fire bombs dropped in several sections of a city at the same time.

Another grave danger is the release of explosive shells from enemy bombing planes. This danger was explained by one of America's leading builders of heavier-than-air craft to the Federal Aviation Commission, with the statement, as reported in the press: "An enemy bombing squadron could fly from a thousand miles away from our seacoast, at a speed exceeding 200 miles per hour, at an altitude exceeding 30,000 feet, and in passing over New York City could destroy the buildings of lower Manhattan from the Battery for perhaps a mile northward."

At least five great and intelligent nations, England, France, Germany, Russia, and Japan, expect warfare with use of poison gases, for they have provided gas masks in large quantities and have drilled the men, women, and children of their cities in the use of such masks. This statement is justified by photographs, reproduced in our American newspapers, showing such groups being drilled in the use of the gas masks. There is also provision of airtight containers for babies.

What can we do to protect ourselves?

We might send our Navy far out in the ocean to meet and try to destroy the enemy fleet and its airplane carriers. A larger Navy is suggested, also a larger Army; great batteries of antiaircraft guns are recommended; building a great fleet of naval and Army airplanes is proposed. We suggest the construction of a fleet of great airships that may be self-supporting in overseas trade and be called for military service in event of war.

For protecting our cities these great commercial airships could be quickly converted to carry airplanes, have an airship speed exceeding 100 miles per hour, or be able to cruise slowly at 20,000 feet altitude, over an area to be protected, sending out scouting airplanes to contact enemy planes, and when such planes are located the scout plane may direct the airships in a course to intercept the enemy planes. Thus, at the proper time, the airship may release a fleet of our most efficient fighting airplanes which may destroy the enemy airplane squadron.

If we had a sufficient number of these great convertible commercial airships, we could patrol and protect the areas surrounding our great centers of population and we could establish and maintain a constant defense line a thousand miles out to sea, if desired.

The military value of an airship may be judged by its ability to withstand adverse weather conditions, by its useful load which may define its range, its speed, its military equipment, and by its likelihood of receiving serious injury when attacked by other aircraft.

The suspension-bridge structure of an airship is a type to stand adverse weather and is less vulnerable to gunfire than the Zeppelin-type frame. The gas is not under pressure and would leak very slowly, through holes made by bullets. Damage would occur only provided an airplane could get relatively close to the airship.

For military purposes the airship may be armed with a dozen or more rapid-fire long-range guns, so that at least two of these guns may cover every point of approach to the airship in every direction. These guns could be fired with great accuracy and shoot farther than the guns carried by airplanes; thus in combat the airplane may seldom even puncture the fabric cover of the airship before the plane is destroyed. In other words, this airship at 20,000 feet altitude may be able to operate with less danger from enemy heavier-than-air craft than naval vessels.

Another feature of importance in considering the future military value of airships, employing the suspension-bridge structure, is these airships can be constructed very quickly and in large numbers should we be unable to avoid war with another nation and suddenly require more airships. Under pressure of war need these airships, capable of transporting and servicing 20 airplanes, may be duplicated in quantity in about 6 months or less. This is not possible with Navy vessels, Navy airplane carriers of merchant-marine ships.

In requesting a loan of $12,000,000 for erecting a $4,000,000 southern airship plant, $2,000,000 for the construction and equipment of an Atlantic operating terminal, $5,000,000 for building two 7,000,000 cubic feet airships, and $1,500,000 for operating capital, with which to establish these airships in service crossing the North Atlantic, I believe the loan is justified by the tremendous public benefit that may accrue, and that approximately 5,000 men will be employed, in direct and indirect labor, thus increasing employment and forming the foundation upon which a new great American industry may be established.

The construction may be carried forward with ability, with the strictest economy, without waste, and without profit. About $10,000,000 may be expended under patents or patent rights that ordinarily would be entitled to royalty payments of not less than 5 percent. With allowance of a reasonable profit, plus royalty, the Government should have additional value of at least 15 percent of such expenditures, or $1,500,000, when compared with other Government construction by private contract.

Reference should also be made to the fact the new airship docks at the plant and the operating terminal will be constructed with use of an approved new patent engineering design that also is of the suspension-bridge principle, and it is estimated that at least $2,500,000 may be saved as compared with similar size docks of the arch-frame type now employed in the docks in New Jersey and California.

Thus with the combined economy of the airships being constructed at cost and without royalty, with the additional saving in dock cost through the employment of a new type of construction, protected by patent rights, the Government is secured by property value that ordinarily might require $16,000,000 to duplicate. In addition, there are valuable patent rights and it is also contemplated we may later do public financing for the construction of additional airships and these new funds may provide additional security for the loan.

In constructing these airships, it should be understood we cannot build commercial airships that may be converted to military use without provision for such possible military use being included in the design and construction. Thus the cost of construction may be considerably increased over airships required solely for commercial service, and some additional weight must be built in, which may reduce the pay load and the commercial profit of operation. These facts should be duly considered in connection with proposed Government loans.

Reference has been made to locating the new plant in the South. In view of the fact that there is now a dock erected in Akron and another at Lakehurst, which possibly could be used for the construction of airships, an explanation should be made as to the desirability of erecting the new plant in a southern location.

For construction in the North it is necessary to provide heat for perhaps 6 months each year, and with so large a building of the type employed, provision of sufficient heat is impracticable, thus the work may be badly delayed during cold weather. Overhead, taxes, insurance, plant upkeep, and depreciation continue, however, adding to the cost of the airships being constructed.

In the South, below the snow and ice belt, no heating is required, and work can be carried on 24 hours per day every day in the year if desired. Building two airships under the same roof in the South will effect very great economy as compared with building a single airship at Akron or elsewhere where heating is required for construction. Economics of this character may not be neglected if successful commercial operation must be achieved.

The loss of the Akron and the Macon is a challenge to our Government, to our engineers, and to our Nation. In the consideration of bill H. R. 2744 there is an opportunity for Congress to assert its faith in American ingenuity and engineering skill by providing means for building American-designed airships. This bill is warranted on the basis of—

1. With the suspension-bridge frame airships can be constructed to be strong, safe, and avoid structure failure.
2. Immediate increase in employment, 80 percent of loan to be expended for direct and indirect labor, with employment of 5,000 men, for 1-year period at high wages.
3. May establish the foundation for a new great American industry which may become a valuable asset to our country for increasing employment, for extending our foreign commerce, and for the construction of military equipment in event of war.
4. May, in effect, expand our merchant marine with a more rapid transport service than is possible to secure through construction of sea vessels.
5. May establish extensive valuable bases for commercial or military use, for both lighter-than-air and heavier-than-air craft.
6. May result in establishing an American-controlled major transportation system, extending to the important commercial centers of the world, to interior cities as well as seaports.
7. May establish a valuable secondary defense, which may ultimately be developed to become a primary defense or offense.
8. May salvage an investment of $12,000,000 which the Government has already expended on the development and conservation of our natural helium-gas resources.
9. May establish twice-a-week, 32-hour trans-Atlantic mail service, at a charge of only $1.50 per pound.
10. May establish a profitable overseas service which may liquidate the Government loan and promote an extension of the services with private capital.

THE CRIME BREEDING MOVIES

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, the most potent social influence that has come into being since the invention of printing is the photoplay. Moving pictures are, to my mind, the most powerful instrument for the communication of thought that mankind has devised. Speaking a universal language they create or destroy our allegiance to culture, education, and religion.

INFLUENCE OF MOVIES ON LIFE

While the photoplay has become one of the most powerful forces in our national life under present auspices it is exerting a blasting influence upon our civic and religious idealism. The specious appeal of the photoplay has in part submerged the strengthening and uplifting ideals of the home, school, and pulpit. As now presented, the movie is a head-on collision with the social influences that make for the advancement of government and society.

I said a moment ago that the appeal of the screen is universal. The House will recognize this to be so when I call attention to the fact that last year between twenty-eight and thirty million minors entered the 20,500 movie theaters in America every week and that 11,000,000 of these young people were under the age of 14 years. These children, of course, were at the impressionable period of their lives. I will demonstrate later that the moving pictures that these children saw had a powerful effect upon their attitudes and conduct, more potent, in my judgment, in their effect upon social reactions than the average home or the average school. I do not emphasize the weekly attendance of 45,000,000 adults at these performances.

It is my belief, based on many years of observation, that the alarming antisocial trend of the moronic and delinquent types has been created and stimulated by attendance at these performances. It is the judgment of those who have attempted to chart the minds of children that behaviorism and juvenile delinquency in the child and crime in the adolescent and adult have been immeasurably increased by their drinking in the crude, antisocial presentations of life so universal in the present-day movies.

THE SCREEN AND CHILDHOOD

Of late years trained psychologists have gone far in their study of the youthful mind. I believe that they can now diagnose the source of germs that attack the youthful intelligence. For years we have been without chart or compass as to the effect of the photoplay upon childhood. The House will be interested to know that in 1932, those in charge of the Payne Fund, a foundation devoted to the welfare of youth, realizing the social importance of learning just what effect the screen was having on the minds of children, at the instance of Dr. Lowell, president emeritus of Harvard, financed an investigation in this field. The results were published in 1933 under the title of "Motion Pictures and Youth." This work appeared in six volumes and the titles were 12 in number. They range from Motion Pictures and Standards of Morality to Movies, Delinquency, and Crime. The studies upon which these books are based extended over 2 years and were conducted by outstanding educators and psychologists of our eastern and western universities.

These experts sound a note of alarm. They find that children, even of the early age of 8, see 70 percent of the facts of a picture and remember them for a surprisingly long time. They find that a single exposure to a picture may make a child antisocial and delinquent in his attitudes. These research men find that there is too much sex and crime and love for a proper diet for children. These studies make additional findings, as follows:

First. That motion pictures, in stimulating desires for easy money and luxury, are an important factor in shaping criminal courses.

Second. That the picturizing of criminal activity, ways of burglarizing or robbing, of escaping detection, and of avoiding pursuit, contribute to delinquency or crime. Twenty percent of the convicts whose experiences were studied in this particular, stated that motion pictures taught them ways of stealing.

Third. That 17 percent of the truant- and behavior-problem boys state that movies had made them want to run away from school, that 49 percent of 110 criminals examined say that the movies gave them the desire to carry a gun, 28 percent declared that it gave them the practice of stick-up, 20 percent stated that the movies had taught them ways of stealing, and 21 percent stated that movies taught them ways of fooling police.

Fourth. Twenty-five percent of 117 delinquent girls in the State training school indicated that the movies were a direct contributing influence to their own delinquency. That 49 percent of 252 girls in a State training school said that the movies made them want to live a fast life.

Fifth. Twenty-five percent of 252 delinquent girls studied, many from 14 to 18 years of age, had been led to sexual irregularities following the arousing of sex impulses by passionate love pictures.

These thoroughly reliable findings tell the story of the disaster that is being done to the youth of America by the photoplay. These, of course, represent only those whose delinquency and crime come to the surface. In my judgment, there is a vast army of delinquents and criminals that are never detected or arrested, who fall from grace by reason of the movie influence. There is a vast army of Americans whose lives never reach a crisis, whose citizenship is unfavorably affected by the present-day screen.

Henry James Forman, in his book entitled "Our Movie-Made Children" states on page 6:

> Crime and conduct, however, though of tremendous importance are not the only domains indisputably subject to movie influence. Many educators and laymen alike, * * * have had the conviction that the motion picture with its immense range and vast reach falls little short of being a supplementary educational system of our Nation. Indeed some laymen have gone so far as to believe that the motion picture vies in importance with the national school system.

It is inevitable, therefore, that those charged with the education of children and concerned about the future of the Nation should regard the cinema as charged with a public interest. The producing group in this field resent this suggestion and say that it is a regular business engaged in commercial manufacturing for profit. But they have not been successful in rendering themselves immune to public scrutiny. Every thinking group in America has become alive to the fact that our future is greatly dependent upon the production of photoplays which will strengthen and conserve rather than destroy the influence of the home and school.

CHARACTER OF PICTURES PRESENTED

The discussion brings us to the consideration of the type of pictures the movie magnates have inflicted on the American people since the birth of the cinema. Dr. Dale, one of the Payne investigators, found that in 115 pictures presented, 406 crimes were actually committed and an additional 43 crimes attempted; that in another block of 35 pictures 54 murders were committed. The fact is that in these pictures the Al Capone type is so conventionalized that he has become the model for many American schoolboys who, freed from the scrofulous influence of the cinema, would otherwise have gone along normally.

Father Daniel A. Lord, S. J., of St. Louis, Mo., who has made an intimate study of the screen products, issued a booklet in June 1934 under the title of "The Motion Pictures Betray America." In this publication he analyzed 133 pictures which were screened in the latter part of 1934. He states these pictures show a minimum of 81 major crimes against the law. This does not include wholesale murders in one superfilm. Father Lord states that due to the character of movies presented the whole moral law is at stake. He continues:

> The Commandments that God gave to Moses on Mount Sinai are being smashed in the daily grinding of the motion-picture projectors. * * * The very things which did Jesus to death are being shown glamorously and attractively on the screen. The innocence of little children is being corrupted, and youth is being initiated into explicit methods of crime.

P. S. Harrison, editor of Harrison's Reports, which is the authoritative reviewing service in the moving-picture field, is even more vigorous in his denunciation of pictures than Father Lord. In Mr. Harrison's report made last year, only 30 out of 133 pictures are suitable for children and adolescents.

Bishop Edward D. Mouzon, senior prelate of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, said:

> I am about to reach the conclusion that the filthy, lewd, sex-filled pictures shown to our children, stimulating emotions far beyond their years, is the most damning influence that ever swept out of hell.
>
> I thank God that the Roman Catholics took the lead in this fight. * * * The time has come when all who believe in God, the Ten Commandments, the sanctity of the home, and decency—Jew, Roman Catholic, and Protestant—must stick together.

I now call the attention of the House to another illuminating piece of data. The motion-picture division of the University of the State of New York, which, under the educational law, is charged with the duty of reviewing and licensing motion pictures, during the year ending June 20, 1934, the last report available, eliminated from pictures examined 1,337 scenes and 818 titles, a total of 2,195. The following is a statement of the grounds on which these eliminations were based:

Indecent	838
Inhuman	79
Tending to incite to crime	511
Immoral or tending to corrupt morals	752
Sacrilegious	15
Total	2,195

The Legion of Decency, organized in November 1933, by the Catholic Hierarchy of North America, was the body referred to by Bishop Mouzon. It is estimated that 5,000,000 Catholics signed the Legion of Decency's pledge to refrain from attending movies which were indecent in character. The Legion of Decency movement reached its peak in the fall of 1934 and performed a great service to the cause of public morality. The movement terrified the producing group and resulted in a substantial betterment in production. The movie press and the lobbyists are now writing off this influence and the producers now have their nerve back. They are ignoring or subsidizing the advance guard of this great army. I shall refer more fully later to this phase of the question in my discussion of the organization of the producers' group.

George Jean Nathan, brilliant dramatic critic, who originally was one of the foremost opponents of interference with photoplay production, wrote in the American Spectator in October 1934 as follows:

> The current movie censorship drive, as everyone knows, is directed primarily against smut, with which the pictures in recent years have been brimming. Smut—and there is no other name for the thing the pictures have been retailing—is no part of any kind of art or even pseudo art, and forced elimination should not concern any anticensorship body with an ounce of intelligence left in its head. * * * The truth about the movies is that in many cases they have got to be so filthy that they do not in their present plight deserve the least consideration from any anticensorship organization.

The fact is that every church group, every welfare organization, every group of men and women concerned with the educational and cultural advancement of America has protested in thunder tones against the demoralizing and destructive influence of the cinema upon childhood and youth.

Thus far, they have done so in vain and here is proof of it. I hold in my hand the May 23, 1935, issue of the Catholic Sun, published at Syracuse, N. Y. On page 5 of that issue appears a list of pictures divided into three groups as to their moral fitness by the Queen's Work Sodality, Chicago Legion of Decency. Out of 197 pictures showing in the latter part of May of the present year, but 59 pictures are recommended as unobjectionable and suitable for public entertainment. Fifty-four pictures are neither approved nor forbidden, but are for adults only; while 84 pictures are considered indecent and immoral and unfit for public entertainment. It would seem from this appraisal that Hollywood, despite the waves of criticism that have broken over it, has learned nothing. In the language of George Jean Nathan, who is no purist, they seem to have no vehicle except smut with which to represent human life and human endeavor.

There are happy exceptions, however. The capacity of the photoplay for recreational purposes and the cultural uplift of the people is without limit. Single instances of this may be found in a few productions which have come from the Hollywood studios. The complete artistry—both pictorial and histrionic—which was displayed in the recent production of David Copperfield establishes the fact that there are in the ranks of Hollywood men of genius and extraordinary capacity, who, if freed from some of the present influences, would blaze a trail to a real era where the screen would play a constructive part in the recreational and cultural field. This picture and a few others of the same merit have been enjoyed by many millions—many of whom had previously withdrawn their patronage.

A CRIMINAL TRUST

Before discussing the proposed legislative phases of this extraordinary situation, I desire to present to the House as briefly as possible a picture of the background and present organization of the movies. It will surprise the House to know that the producers not only are the most antisocial influence in America by reason of the character of the product, but their whole structure of control is built upon illegality, violation, and evasion of existing law. The movie industry is the fourth largest industry in the United States, with an estimated investment of two and a half billion dollars. It employs more than 30,000 people, and more than 900 of the persons in the production field enjoy annual salaries of about $10,000. It has been under fire by the courts as violating the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act. What it cannot get by fair means in the open, it buys in the twilight zone of venality. Eight companies control 90 percent of the photoplay production in America. These are banded together by hooks of steel, and they own and operate 20 percent of the talking-picture theaters in the United States. It should be noted that 80 percent of the theaters are owned by the independents.

It will be developed later that the independents' control over their own property is of a nominal nature by reason of the operation of the Movie Trust through block booking. The name of their central organization is the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc. This outfit has various ramifications, but through its producing and distributing factors controls the production and sale of pictures in America.

In 1922, Will Hays, then Postmaster General and chairman of the Republican National Committee, became the nominal head of these organizations. He was a Presbyterian elder and was supposed to have close contact with the Protestant groups in America. The public, which had been alarmed with the antisocial tendencies of the movies, was encouraged in the belief that under his leadership the movie production would at last become less antisocial and cease to be a destructive influence upon the minds and characters of the American youth. It was considered fair procedure to give him a chance to work this program out. The public waited in vain for any change in the character of production. Pictures became more salacious and more daring. Filth is a mild word when used for descriptive purposes in connection with the productions that ensued. The public then woke up and found that the redoubtable Will Hays instead of being a Moses leading the movies out of the cesspools was in fact a lobbyist whose sole function was to keep the public off the producers. He had no authority then and has none now. On the lot in Hollywood a current phrase is, "To hell with the reformers! We are paying Will Hays $250,000 a year to give us immunity." For years Mr. Hays has been the artful dodger that has kept public sentiment in leash. In 1922 Hays and the producers adopted 13 high moral standards of production to which they promised obedience. They broke that promise by sending the screen to a lower depth of antisocial production. Hays manipulated the various denominational groups by placing some of their quasi-leadership on the pay rolls of the Movie Trust. He had contact men for every religious group on the pay roll. He had contact men for every educational group on the pay roll.

His job was to lull the patriotic and genuinely American groups who wished to prevent our children from being destroyed into passivity by promise of reform which never came. And it is doubtful if he ever had such power. The practical men at the head of the film industry had no use for him, except so far as he was able to keep the public off their shoulders. In the meantime, year by year, the streams of filth from Hollywood augmented a thousandfold.

The Movie Trust is definitely a violation of the Antitrust Act. Under the N. R. A., which is now history, the trust control of the movie production reached its peak. The N. R. A. code, as written, turned the independent producers and exhibitors over to the Movie Trust, body and soul. These were happy days for Will Hays and those whom he represented, but unhappy days for the independents and those concerned with the human documents of America. Rapacity and tyranny were on the throne, and the picture looked very black so far as the public interest was concerned. The Supreme Court decision in the Schechter case ended all this.

Today the distinguished, able, and public-minded Attorney General of the United States, Hon. Homer S. Cummings, is conducting a prosecution in St. Louis, Mo., which will, if successful, have a far-reaching effect upon this industry. It will take the shackles off the independent producers and will subject the antisocial types that are in command to the restraints of law. America is already heavily in Mr. Cummings' debt for his law-enforcement accomplishments. If he carries this fight to a knock-out, this and future generations of Americans will call him "thrice blessed."

Not long ago it was stated that Will Hays could no longer deliver and that he was on his way out. It was also stated that the Honorable James A. Farley would succeed him at a salary of $250,000 a year. But the time was not quite ripe for this procedure, and Will Hays executed a flank movement on those who were trying to oust him by hiring John Boettiger, who was about to marry the daughter of President Roosevelt. Mr. Boettiger had been an able newspaperman and had an attractive personality, but the purpose of his employment was obvious. George Ackerson, former President Hoover's secretary, occupied a similar post, but when the election went against the former President, out of his job went Ackerson. If a change of this administration comes, this will be the fate of Mr. Boettiger. I have no doubt that he has personally no illusion about his status. I know the public has none.

Another phase of the movie situation is worthy of consideration. The penny arcaders and their successors and assigns got into deep water in 1929. They were obliged to go to the Chase National Bank for succor. Vast loans were made them by this organization, in which, as the public knows, the influence of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is more or less dominant. In addition to that, the Western Electric Co., which is a subsidiary of the American Telephone & Telegraph, has become a major creditor of the producers. There is some hope in this situation. The gentlemen on the directorate of these outfits have a large stake in the future of America. I said before that the present-day photoplay tends to destroy our culture and to destroy the influences of education and religion.

Any casual student of affairs recognizes that that is what movies are doing now. It might be added that overnight they might almost destroy our present form of government. They were used extensively in Russia in putting across the communistic theory. They sowed the seed of fascism in Italy. This may seem improbable here in America. May I say, however, that the destruction of the civic character in America is vastly more serious and devastating than even the destruction of our present governmental construction. If the national character is destroyed, our form of government is immaterial. So I call upon these gentlemen who are the present overlords of big business to take a hand and help save the childhood and youth of America from being debauched. I am familiar with the mistaken ethics with which high finance buffers itself in a situation like this, but make bold to say that if they continue fiddling while Rome burns the blood will be on their own heads.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Prior to coming to Congress I was for 17 years engaged either in the prosecution of crime or as judge of the domestic relations court of Oswego County, N. Y. For many years I handled intimately the problems of those whose lives had led them to violations of the law, and in the case of children under 16 years into the growing field of juvenile delinquency. By intensive investigation into the causes of maladjustment among children I came to the conclusion that the screen, as presented, was a powerful factor in their stumbling. I came to be of the opinion that the photoplay not only seriously affected the lives of the delinquent but also the social viewpoint of the normal child and adolescent. I therefore felt strongly on this subject, and when I was elected to Congress endeavored to find a way to harness the photoplay for the purposes of mankind.

Several years ago I reintroduced the Hudson bill, H. R. 2999, with some minor changes. This bill establishes a Federal commission and writes into law the set of standards adopted by the producers' organization itself in 1922. It is, to my mind, sound and necessary legislation if the salutary lessons of the home, school, and church are to be preserved. Personally I favor making motion pictures a public utility, as they are in England and France. Telephones, telegraphs, and railroads are public utilities and are under Federal supervision as such. How much more vital it is to the life of the Nation that its far-reaching influence—which in the present hands has destroyed the influence of the home, church, and school—should be under governmental direction. We have protection for our children's bodies against adulterated foods, but no regulation or control over the germs that destroy their minds. In the second session of this Congress I intend to press this bill vigorously for passage. No opportunity for a hearing has been had on it at this session. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has been submerged in the hearings on utilities, transportation, and related subjects.

For the present I urge the passage of H. R. 4757, presented by me, which regulates the practice of block booking and blind selling by prohibiting the compulsory and mass booking of copyright films and amending section 2 of the Clayton Act to make it apply to licenses, agreements, and leases, as well as sales in interstate commerce.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] has introduced H. R. 6472, which is of the same general purpose. The gentleman introduced this bill, partially at my request, as I am more concerned about the passage of the legislation than the credit of sponsoring it. I feel, however, that this legislation—H. R. 6472—should be strengthened by certain amendments, which I am hoping he will accept when the time comes. With these qualifications I am heartily back of his bill. Either one of these bills will break the present monopolistic control which a handful of men now exercise over the movies. This legislation will destroy the present vicious and indefensible system of block booking by which the local theater manager must buy his pictures—the bad along with the good—in blocks of as many as 60 without the privilege of choosing what he wants in the open market. It will destroy the system of blind selling by which the exhibitor has to book his pictures before they are even produced without a chance to see them and know whether or not they are suitable for his clientele.

BLOCK BOOKING SHOULD END

Under the present system the exhibitor in northern Maine or in a prairie city in Kansas is obliged to buy and present the same type of pictures that are presented in the metropolitan centers where the audiences are necessarily more sophisticated and certainly more adult. At present the exhibitors buying in blocks of 60 pictures either take what the producers give them or else they get nothing. The producers complain of the threatened censorship. They rail at those who suggest it as guilty of an unwarranted impertinence. Yet they themselves exercise a censorship at once brazen and illegal. They have a strangle hold on the exhibitors and compel them to buy and show such pictures as they see fit to produce and are prepared to sell.

The producers demand the freedom of the screen, yet a few irresponsible and covetous men, whose vulgarity predominates in film production, hold the whole situation in the hollow of their hand. This legislation will break that strangle hold and make the screen free. It will fix responsibility. The present block-booking procedure ties up the theater screens of the country. It practically paralyzes the entrance of independent producers in whom many people believe lies the whole hope of the proper development of this medium of expression. It is not wholesale selling, and that argument has no basis in fact. This legislation will make the local manager responsible to his own clientele, and local influence will have a part in the selection of the films to be presented.

The situation as it exists at present can best be illustrated as follows: You wish to buy a book and go to a bookstore for that purpose. The bookseller tells you that he cannot sell you the book you want unless you buy 49 more, all of his own selection. That is the case in a nutshell.

Every socially minded organization in America is militantly opposed to block booking and blind selling. Here are some of them:

Federated Women's Clubs, Parent-Teacher Associations, ministerial associations, brotherhoods, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, North American Congress of Home Missions, National Grange, Northern Baptist Convention, General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, various branches of the Legion of Decency, including many prominent ecclesiastics and lay leaders of the Catholic Church, General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, Women's Missionary Council Methodist Episcopal Church South, Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Oregon Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the International Reform Federation.

Since the introduction of these bills I have had communications from 244 organizations and 121 individuals, from various parts of the United States, favoring both my bills (H. R. 2999 and H. R. 4757).

The mothers of the United States, under the leadership of the parent-teacher organization, are embattled on this proposition. They are looking toward Congress for relief from the tainted influence of the present screen. I want to tell the House that they are up in arms and will not be denied. Every influence, venal or otherwise, will be marshaled by the purveyors of filth against these needed reforms. I urge the House to pass this legislation abolishing block booking at the present session. If you do it, you will make a substantial contribution to the cause of America, because it will rescue the citizens of the next generation from an influence that is steadily but surely destroying them. I have faith in the courage and vision of my colleagues in the House on both sides of the aisle. I am content to submit this issue to them for action. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAIBORNE. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is unavoidably detained in the hospital due to illness. Had he been able to attend the session here today he would have voted for the holding-company bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 285

Whereas the Representative from Maine, the Honorable RALPH BREWSTER, did on this date, July 2, 1935, arise in the House of Representatives and make a statement that he had been approached by an official of the United States Government and told that if he (BREWSTER) did not vote against the death-sentence provision in the so-called "Federal Power Act" that certain funds allocated for public works in his congressional district in the State of Maine would be withheld, and whether any political threats were made by other officials: Therefore

Resolved, That a special committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the charge made by the Representative from Maine, Mr. BREWSTER, and report its conclusions and recommendations to the House at the earliest practicable date. For such purpose the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths to witnesses and to sit during the sessions of the House or any recess thereof.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that is not a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, such a resolution to be privileged is one that affects the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of the House collectively. In what way does this incident affect the safety, the dignity, and the integrity of the proceedings of the House collectively? In my judgment, not at all.

Why, there could be occasions when someone employed by the Government might approach every one of the 435 Members of the House and make this threat or that threat, but that does not affect the privileges of the House. We are supposed to be strong enough to withstand any such approaches from any employee of the Government. If this had been a Cabinet officer or someone connected with the President's office, the situation might be different.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, there are in Washington today over 100,000 Government employees on the pay roll of the Government. In the United States there are over 700,000 Government employees. Because someone employed by the Government approaches a Member of Congress and makes a foolish, futile threat to him does not violate the privileges of the House, because it does not affect the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of the House collectively.

The resolution which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] offers, therefore, is not a privileged resolution raising the question of the privilege of the House collectively. This is not a question of personal privilege. No one has risen on the floor raising the question of personal privilege. If privileged at all, therefore, it must be a privilege of the House collectively. It must be something that affects the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of the House of Representatives collectively, and there is nothing of that kind in this resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLANTON. No. I want my point of order ruled on first. I did not yield to the gentleman for that purpose. Mr. Speaker, I desire a ruling on my point of order.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order. It seems to me this resolution obviously affects not only a Member's representative capacity, and I refer to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], but the integrity, the dignity, the reputation, and the good name of the House of Representatives. It is of the highest privilege for the resolution to be immediately considered. It is inconceivable that charges of this nature may be made upon the floor of the House by the gentleman from Maine, whom everybody on both sides trusts, as shown by the applause that he received, and that no action should be taken. I do not believe it is proper that after such a charge has been made that it should be ignored and no consideration given it by the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this affects the integrity and honor of the House of Representatives itself. A definite charge has been made by a distinguished Member of this House that he was wrongfully approached by a high public official in order to influence or change his vote. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] referred to it and said it did not come from a member of the Cabinet. The charge was aimed at one of the sponsors of the utility bill, a high Government official who speaks with authority. If this charge is correct, there should be an immediate investigation. Mr. Speaker, I submit this is a matter affecting the integrity of the entire House of Representatives and therefore of the highest privilege.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is correct in stating that this is not a privileged resolution, but I hope that the resolution will be passed unanimously by the House. I believe it brings up a very important question.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say this much about the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. The gentleman was for the Senate bill; at least he said so when he attended a meeting with me at the Power Policy Commission and in conversations. He attended secret meetings and got all the inside stuff. Of course, we were associated with the "brain trusters"—to which some may object; but I have no contempt for brains. I attended this meeting with the gentlemen from Maine, Mr. BREWSTER and Mr. MORAN, Mr. RANKIN, Mr. MARCANTONIO, Mr. SCOTT, and others; and Mr. BREWSTER consented to make a speech for the Senate bill, section 11, and discuss the legal phases of it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in order.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course, make a point of order when it hurts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will discuss the point of order, which is the only thing pending before the Chair.

Mr. MAVERICK. I have not the parliamentary experience and ability to get up here and beat the parliamentary rules; but I do say I hope the House passes the resolution, and I do not believe a word the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] said.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. If this resolution should be held privileged——

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MAVERICK. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for gentlemen to be seated and keep quiet while the gentleman from Illinois submits his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has the floor, if he desires to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SABATH. My parliamentary inquiry is this: If the point of order that has been made should be overruled——

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maine rise?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of the highest personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot take the gentleman from Illinois off the floor in that way.

Mr. BREWSTER. I was standing here seeking recognition, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SABATH. My parliamentary inquiry is whether it would be in order to amend the resolution by broadening the resolution and providing that the lobbying on both sides be investigated. [Applause.] I believe such a resolution should be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the House can do with the resolution as it pleases, and if it is held to be in order it is subject to amendment.

Mr. SABATH. That is the inquiry I wished to make, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maine rise?

Mr. BREWSTER. I rise to ask whether it is possible for the gentleman from Texas to challenge my word on the floor of this House without having his words taken down. I rose immediately the words were uttered, and it seems to me nothing could transcend such a proposition. If that is not possible, it transcends my conception of parliamentary procedure.

The SPEAKER. To what words does the gentleman object?

Mr. BREWSTER. He said, as I understood him, that he did not believe a word I had uttered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the Chair does not think that implies that the gentleman uttered an untruth. That was the opinion of the gentleman from Texas, but not necessarily the opinion of anyone else, and the Chair does not understand that there is any question of privilege involved in the remarks uttered.

Mr. BREWSTER. May I ask that the words be taken down?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could have done that——

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to rule on a point of order now, if the gentleman will permit the Chair to do so.

Mr. McFARLANE. I wanted to make my point of order before the Chair rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas made the statement, but that does not necessarily imply that the gentleman from Maine intentionally made a misstatement on his own part. He simply said he did not believe it, but this did not necessarily imply that the gentleman from Maine intentionally made a misstatement. What the gentleman from Texas said may be construed as meaning that the gentleman from Maine was merely mistaken in his conclusions, and that the gentleman did not deliberately make a false statement. So the Chair fails to see where any question of privilege is involved in the statement. Of course, if the gentleman wishes to make his own statement about it, he can do so with the permission of the House.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not think I can add to what I said. It becomes an issue of veracity.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has presented a resolution of investigation, which has already been read from the Clerk's desk and which it is not necessary to read again. I am sure every Member of the House, as does the Chair, feels jealous of the dignity and integrity of the House, its entire membership, and all its proceedings.

Rule IX provides that—

> Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has made certain serious charges. It is not necessary, of course, for the Chair to pass on the charges. That is a matter for the House to determine. But the Chair does feel that in view of the statements made by the gentleman from Maine on his own responsibility as a Member of this House, as well as those contained in the pending resolution, that if such statements are found to be correct, then it seems to the Chair that the integrity of the proceedings of this House have been seriously interfered with. The Chair, therefore, thinks that the resolution presents a question of the privilege of the House, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Substitute motion offered by Mr. PETTENGILL:
> "Whereas the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has just informed the House that one Thomas Corcoran, not a Member of the House, improperly approached him and attempted to unduly influence him as to his vote on the Utility Act of 1935: Be it
> "Resolved, That the Rules Committee of the House be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate such charges and all charges of the exercise of undue influence on Members of the House by both the proponents and opponents of S. 2796, and report its findings to the House, with its recommendations."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, on the motion, sometime ago a similar matter occurred and the Rules Committee was authorized to investigate it.

I may say that the charges are serious. There have been a lot of serious charges made around here. If this matter is intrusted to the Rules Committee, I feel safe in saying it will move promptly and without any consideration of anybody who is involved.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were 180 ayes and 1 no.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I have a resolution with reference to the Rules Committee which I desire to offer now as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order at this time, the previous question having been ordered. The question is on adopting the substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I rise to answer the charges made today against Mr. Thomas Corcoran, R. F. C. attorney, by my colleague from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

I have been on the floor of the House today every minute, except a very few minutes during which period Mr. BREWSTER made his speech. I do not charge that Mr. BREWSTER selected that brief period for his speech. I am merely stating the facts as they are. It would have been courteous for him to have made the speech in my presence. Upon my return to the floor, I obtained a transcript of his remarks, and following that, I interviewed Mr. Thomas Corcoran to obtain his reply. In view of the fact that this controversy concerns a Maine project, in consideration of my background of several years' political experience in Maine, with my close personal knowledge of the events discussed by Mr. BREWSTER, and with the advantage of an interview with Mr. Corcoran within the last few minutes, I am in an excellent position to answer my colleague.

Two matters of great importance to Mr. BREWSTER and to me, have been occurring simultaneously. First, the public-utility bill, and, second, the so-called "Quoddy" power project in Maine. The interest of Mr. Thomas Corcoran in the public-utility bill is well known. It is not, however, generally known that Mr. Corcoran is also handling for the administration the legal features of the "Quoddy" project, which is located in Mr. BREWSTER's district.

Regarding the public-utility bill, meetings have been held by those favoring the so-called "death sentence." Those meetings were attended by several of my honorable colleagues, including Mr. RANKIN, Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. MARCANTONIO, Mr. McFARLANE, and various others of that group in the House which believes in the "death sentence" provision. To some of those meetings Mr. Thomas Corcoran was invited, as our group recognized in Mr. Corcoran a man who combined brilliancy of intellect with the sole desire of serving the public interest, and we knew of his vast store of information concerning this bill. My colleague Mr. BREWSTER was considered by us as one of our group; he was invited to attend such meetings; he did attend; he participated actively in discussions. At those meetings, our strategy was discussed, in addition to the provisions of the bill. Mr. BREWSTER actively engaged in the discussions. It was our understanding that as probably the best lawyer among us, he would handle on the floor any of the legal features of corporate reorganization involved in section 11. This is no hearsay; this is my personal knowledge; I was present, and know whereof I speak. The other colleagues I have mentioned will readily substantiate my statement that Mr. BREWSTER actively participated with us.

The Members of the House, therefore, can readily imagine my surprise on last Monday to see Mr. BREWSTER pass through the tellers and vote in opposition to the group with which he had been actively participating. His actual vote was my first knowledge of his change of heart. My amazement was beyond imagination.

Regarding the "Quoddy" project, I have been interested in it from the beginning of my term in the last Congress. The first time the "Quoddy" project was ever presented to the present administration was by me on May 29, 1933, when I presented it to the Federal Power Commission and formally requested a study. When the P. W. A. later came into existence, I presented the project to that unit. The Federal Power Commission made its report to me personally, as stated therein, and the report was unfavorable. Believing the report to be an "overnight" matter not given thorough consideration, I demanded reconsideration and a real study. It would be tedious and inapplicable here to trace the many activities by me in connection with this project long before

Mr. BREWSTER came to Congress, and during which time Maine Republicans were charging that the whole effort was political and that the project never would be undertaken, but the project finally received an allocation of $10,000,000 under the new work-relief fund, and work is now beginning at the site.

There were many legal matters to be considered in connection with this project, as, for example, a settlement with Mr. Dexter P. Cooper, whose fertile mind originated the project, an allowance for his expenses, rights, and so forth. These matters had to be handled with a great deal of care, as there are private interests in Maine opposed to this project, who would seize any opportunity to hamstring it. It so happens that Mr. BREWSTER is the only attorney in the Maine delegation in the House; naturally, Mr. Corcoran, charged with the responsibility as representative of the administration in handling these legal details, discussed these matters frequently with Mr. BREWSTER. There was also a problem of requiring the Maine Legislature to adopt legislation creating a so-called "power authority" to carry out the project. I know that in determining his course on this legislative problem, Mr. Corcoran heavily relied upon assurances of cooperation from Mr. BREWSTER and myself. Mr. BREWSTER offered to bring two Maine attorneys of his selection to Washington for one interview to discuss various features, and did so. This all explains the perfectly natural contacts which Mr. BREWSTER had voluntarily with Mr. Corcoran.

No one realizes more than Mr. Corcoran the fact that all these legal matters must be in the hands of the friends of the project. No one realizes more than I do the most dangerous possibilities if a person beholden in any way to private power interests should be in the inner councils of the administration in working out these matters. Therefore, when Mr. Corcoran learned of Mr. BREWSTER'S change of heart on the public-utility bill, it was but natural that he should inform Mr. BREWSTER that his legal services in connection with the "Quoddy" project were no longer trustworthy. Mr. Corcoran, after having had one experience of participating with Mr. BREWSTER in conferences on the utility bill, with such an amazing result, apparently does not wish to have the administration take such a risk in connection with the "Quoddy" project.

All of these facts are interesting background to the present controversy. Whether Mr. BREWSTER became panic-stricken over what he had done on the utility bill, and took the method of attacking Mr. Corcoran, a most useful public servant, to cover up his own action, I do not know.

I know that President Roosevelt would not for one minute countenance such action, as charged by Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Corcoran denies the charge absolutely.

I have implicit faith in Mr. Corcoran; I do not believe there is a man connected with this administration who is more honest, who is more truthful, and who is more interested in the best kind of public service for the people of America. Nothing has occurred in my many dealings with him which has given me the slightest reason to believe any such charge as has been leveled at him by Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Corcoran plays the game square; even in the heat of the many controversies which have centered around him, no one has ever charged him with being a "double-crosser." He fights toe-to-toe courageously, honestly, enthusiastically, but always fairly. His whole soul is wrapped up in helping this administration give to the people social security, economic freedom, and political freedom, which are the main objectives of our great leader in the White House, President Franklin D. Roosevelt. I believe in "Tom" Corcoran; I am fully confident that any investigation will demonstrate to the American people that he is the kind of a man that I know him to be.

Some men can take comfort in the fact that there is something greater than high political office, no matter how high; that there is something more worth while than being the subject of blazing headlines of newspapers, or the acclaim of the multitudes, both of which are temporary in character; that "something" is for a man to be honest with himself and with his fellow man, which inevitably carries with it self-respect and the respect of his fellow men. Such a man can meet with equanamity and confidence any charges leveled at him by anyone not similarly blessed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as this matter is to be investigated by the Rules Committee, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I ask that the gentleman have 2 minutes in which to finish his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. I am sorry. If I had more time I should be very glad to yield, but I have only a moment or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES IN THE STATE OF OREGON

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, on Friday I addressed the House on the pending utilities bill and talked particularly about the regulation of utility and other holding companies in Oregon under our modern law.

It may be recalled that I told how those regulatory laws were passed and how the financial rackets of the holding companies were stopped, and I took particular occasion to state very definitely in my remarks on Friday that I was opposed, not only to holding companies of the racketeering sort but that I had little use for holding companies at all, even the good ones. I stated, however, that, in my opinion, it was not necessary to ruin innocent security holders by destroying the companies in order to solve the holding-company problem.

I have just looked at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for yesterday, and, much to my surprise, I find that my colleague from the Second District of Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] has accused me of making a speech on the floor on Friday in favor not only of utility holding companies in general but of utility holding company racketeering in particular.

By the way, this is an extension of his remarks in which he makes that assertion. He did not say these things on the floor yesterday when I was present. He wrote them into his remarks as an extension to his speech, so this is my first opportunity to read his speech, which speech, of course, he did not really speak.

He says, among other things, that he is amazed to learn that the Congressman representing those investors raises his voice in defense of the type of financial pirates who have robbed us; and then he tells the story of the robbery of Oregon investors by the Central Public Service Corporation, the corporation which I mentioned on the floor as being, in my opinion, the worst racketeering utility holding company in the country; and he says I am in favor of letting companies of that kind operate, because I oppose section 11 of the Senate bill.

I told you on Friday how we made the laws that enabled us to stop just that sort of racketeering in the State of Oregon. I told you they were made during the 8 years I was a member of the legislature, and I had a rather considerable part in the making of them. I told you how we stopped the racket of this particular holding company by the proper enforcement of these laws when I was appointed corporation commissioner of the State of Oregon. I stated that we were able to stop, and that we did stop, every holding-company racket in that State.

We stopped the sale of all racketeering securities and prosecuted and convicted all the racketeers who sold them, and yet the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] says in his extension of remarks that on Friday I made a speech in favor of these very holding companies and holding company rackets, when as a matter of fact my speech was a denunciation of them. I wish the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] were here. I am sorry he is not. I do not like to talk about him in his absence. He ought to be present when important business is going on, but, of course, that is something over which I have no control.

My colleague from Oregon was in the State legislature for about 8 years preceding the time I was a member of that body. He was Governor of the State for 4 years also. During the time he was Governor of the State and during the time he was in the legislature we had rather inadequate utility and securities laws and not always very good enforcement of them. During all of that time I do not recall that my colleague ever made a suggestion, either as State senator or as Governor of Oregon, that those laws be improved. Perhaps he was satisfied with them.

At any rate, after my colleague left the legislature, and after I came into the legislature, we did take an interest in this field of legislation and proceeded to make those modern, progressive, and effective laws by which, as I told you Friday, we stopped the rackets. The very rackets which my colleague, the gentleman from Oregon, told you we could not prohibit by State law, are the rackets that we stopped with the law we made in the Oregon Legislature after my colleague ceased to be a member of that body.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has placed in the RECORD the figures to show the rates of the State of Oregon, to show that that State is being penalized some $6,510,000, as I remember it, in excessive rates above what would be a reasonable rate when compared with the Tacoma, Wash., rate. If the gentleman stopped all these rackets, why are his people being charged these excessive rates?

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Texas does not understand what I mean by "a racket", and what is generally understood as "a financial racket" by corporation commissioners and people who have knowledge and experience in this field. A financial racket, I may say for the gentleman's information, is the issuance and sale of worthless securities.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think those rackets all over the country are the same.

Mr. MOTT. The utility rates in Oregon are low compared with rates of private utilities in other parts of the United States, including the gentleman's State. They are obviously not as low as those of municipal plants. However, that has nothing to do with this subject.

Let me finish. Now, my very lovable friend and colleague from eastern Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is a little hard of hearing, and perhaps he did not understand just what I was talking about in my speech on Friday. I was talking about holding-company rackets, and particularly about how under the laws of Oregon we were able to clean up the rackets. I said that I held no brief for holding companies of any kind, but that all the evil practices of them could be stopped by proper regulatory laws.

It really is not worth talking about. My speech was very, very definite on that point, but I do not like to have a plain speech construed and commented upon in the RECORD as something that it was not. For that reason I have risen to correct the statement made in my colleague's extension of his remarks yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has expired.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY—PERSECUTION OF CATHOLICS AND OTHERS IN MEXICO AND OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include certain excerpts from statements of the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, dispatches from Mexico yesterday to the American press report that "Mexico is planning to ease its church policy" and that the Mexican Government recently has been inclined toward showing some tolerance to Catholics.

We certainly are living in dark and troublesome times. In many countries all over the world we find evidence of intolerance, hatred, and a spirit of cruelty and malice. Forces of darkness hardly conceivable in our civilized day, are sweeping over lands whose people were once charitable, lovable, and kind. Men seem to have lost their reason, and the cruelty of the animal seems to obsess them.

Nation appears eager to war nation; and within the nation class is pitted against class, and minorities, either of race or religion, are being persecuted.

We pray that none of these evil forces enter our gates. What a frightful nightmare for man or woman to live through—in dread of prison, detention camps, forced labor, or purges on the morrow. And this only because of their race or religion, or because they exercised their God-given right to think and express their own opinions and convictions.

Has civilization improved the soul and spirit of man? Then why such hatreds which resemble only that of barbarians, whom we might excuse, or that of fiends, whose minds we cannot discern. Are we recurring to the prejudices and bigotries of the Dark Ages, or is mankind only going through a period of mob insanity?

The supplication of the people of our country is that those who so wrong against civilization may be forgiven. We forgive them because we know they are misled. The fault and responsibility is not theirs; they are misinformed and tyrannized by their leaders. The spirit of Nero and the sin of Cain find a resting place among some present-day dictators—their modern prototypes; but the evil they do is overcome by the onward march of civilization in making this a better world to live in.

We, in this country, must raise our voices for the suppressed, persecuted, and afflicted. Should we stand idly by and see the oldest of Christian religions persecuted in Mexico? Can we permit the persecutions of the Middle Ages, reborn under a new cloak and guise, to exist next door to our land? Our consciences dictate to us to protest at the horror of attacks on all religions—Catholic, Protestant denominations, and the Jewish faith. It is only too true that these evil forces are an attack upon the spirit of democracy.

But always after darkness, light appears. I hope that this dispatch from Mexico means a change of conditions in Mexico. I believe that in Mexico and other countries, sanity among the rulers will eventually prevail. And let us be ever watchful that this spirit of intolerance does not spread its poisons into our country. I doubt if it could, because the spirit of our Nation's birth lives within us—the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the ideals of our Constitution, the principles of our traditions, and the very hopes for a better world are ingrained in all of us so much that this country shall continue to stand as the beacon light of liberty, democracy, and social justice.

Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to narrate specifically the times and places of persecutions in this day of half-enlightened and pseudo-cultured despots and dictators. I can only say that the people of this country look with horror upon such a state of events. Men of all classes, races, and creeds have expressed their abhorence in protest of all kinds.

There are many reasons for such wrongful conduct, such as the zeal for supernationalism, economic exploitations of peoples and consequent revolts often accompanied by revengeful activities, arousing of racial and national passions, and a philosophy prevailing in many parts of the world that the end justifies the means—an idea propagated by dictatorships. Lastly there smolders from the World War hatreds and revenge.

How to meet this problem has been the ever-continual dream of the world's greatest idealists. Needless to say, the traditional doctrines of our people and Government have immeasurably contributed toward the continuous efforts of mankind to teach love of neighbor, to aid and assist the persecuted and downtrodden.

I shall conclude with a few quotations from various opinions on religious freedom made by some of our Presidents.

OPINIONS OF PRESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES ON RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

In instructions of September 14, 1775, to Benedict Arnold, about to lead a force into Canada against Quebec, General Washington said:

As the contempt of the religion of a country by ridiculing any of its ceremonies, or affronting its ministers or votaries, has ever been deeply resented, you are to be particularly careful to restrain every officer and soldiers from such imprudence and folly, and to punish every instance of it.

On the other hand, as far as lies in your power, you are to protect and support the free exercise of the religion of the country, and the undisturbed enjoyment of the rights of conscience in religious matters, with your utmost influence and authority. (Writings of Washington, edited by Sparks (N. Y., 1847), vol. III, p. 89.)

Washington, writing on August 15, 1787, to Lafayette concerning the French Assembly of Notables, said:

I sincerely hope with you, that much good will result from the deliberations of so respectable a council. I am not less ardent in my wish, that you may succeed in your plan of toleration in religious matters. Being no bigot myself to any mode of worship, I am disposed to indulge the professors of Christianity in the church with that road to heaven, which to them shall seem the most direct, plainest, easiest, and least liable to exception. (Writings of Washington, edited by Sparks (N. Y., 1847), vol. IX, p. 262.)

In May 1789, Washington responded to the good wishes of the general committee representing the United Baptist Churches of Virginia, by saying:

I have often expressed my sentiments, that every man, conducting himself as a good citizen, and being accountable to God alone for his religious opinions, ought to be protected in worshipping the Deity according to the dictates of his own conscience. (Washington's Writings, edited by Sparks (N. Y., 1847), vol. XII, p. 155.)

In 1790, Washington, writing to the Jewish Synagogue at Newport, R. I., said:

May the same wonder-working Deity, who long since delivered the Hebrews from their Egyptian oppressors and planted them in the "promised land"; whose providential agency has lately been conspicuous in establishing these United States as an independent nation, still continue to water them with the dews of heaven, and to make the inhabitants of every denomination participate in the temporal and spiritual blessings of that people whose God is Jehovah. (Maxims of Washington, D. Appleton & Co. (1790), (p. 373.)

In October 1789, Washington, writing to the Quakers, in response to their good wishes expressed at their yearly meeting, said:

The liberty enjoyed by the people of these States, of worshipping Almighty God agreeably to their consciences, is not only among the choicest of their blessings, but also of their rights. While men perform their social duties faithfully, they do all that society or the State can with propriety demand or expect, and remain responsible only to their Maker for the religion or mode of faith, which they may prefer or profess. (Writings of Washington, edited by Sparks (N. Y., 1847), vol. XII, p. 168.)

In January 1793, replying to the good wishes of the members of the New Church in Baltimore, Washington said:

In this enlightened age and in this land of equal liberty it is our boast that a man's religious tenets will not forfeit the protection of the laws nor deprive him of the right of attaining and holding the highest offices that are known to the United States. (Writings of Washington, edited by Sparks (N. Y., 1847), vol. XII, p. 202.)

JEFFERSON—GOVERNMENT AND RELIGION

Whatsoever is lawful in the Commonwealth or permitted to the subject in the ordinary way cannot be forbidden to him for religious uses; and whatsoever is prejudicial to the Commonwealth in their ordinary uses and therefore prohibited by the laws ought not to be permitted to churches in their sacred rites. For instance, it is unlawful in the ordinary course of things or in a private house to murder a child. It should not be permitted any sect, then, to sacrifice children; it is ordinarily lawful (or temporarily lawful) to kill calves or lambs. They may, therefore, be religiously sacrificed, but if the good of the State requires a temporary suspension of killing lambs, as during a siege, sacrifices of them may then be rightfully suspended also. This is the true intent of toleration. (Jefferson, Notes on Religion (1776?) See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. II, p. 102.)

Our civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions more than on our opinions on physics or geometry; that therefore the prescribing of any citizen as unworthy of public confidence by laying upon him an incapacity of being called to the offices of trust and emolument, unless he professes or renounces this or that religious opinion, is depriving him unjustly of those privileges and advantages to which, in common with his fellow citizens, he has a natural right. (Thomas Jefferson, Statute of Religious Freedom (1779). See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. II, p. 238.)

We (the Assembly of Virginia) * * * declare that the rights hereby asserted (in the Statute of Religious Freedom) are of the natural rights of mankind, and that if any act be hereafter passed to repeal the present (act), or to narrow its operations, such act shall be an infringement of natural right. (Jefferson, Statute of Religious Freedom (1779). See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. II, p. 239).

How far does the duty of toleration extend?—

1. No church is bound by the duty of toleration to retain within her bosom obstinate offenders against her laws.

2. We have no right to prejudice another in his civil employment because he is of another church. (Notes on Religion, Writings of Thomas Jefferson. See Ford edition, vol. II, p. 99.)

I do not like [in the Federal Constitution] the omission of a bill of rights, providing clearly and without aid of sophisms for freedom of religion. (Jefferson to Madison (December 1787.) See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. IV, p. 476.)

I sincerely rejoice at the acceptance of our new Constitution by nine States. It is a good canvass, on which some strokes only want retouching. What these are, I think are sufficiently manifested by the general voice from north to south, which calls for a bill of rights. It seems pretty generally understood that this should go to * * * religion. * * * The declaration that religious faith shall be unpunished, does not give impunity to criminal acts, dictated by religious error. (Jefferson to Madison (July 1788.) See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. V, p. 45.)

One of the amendments to the Constitution * * * expressly declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press"; thereby guarding in the same sentence, and under the same words, the freedom of religion, of speech, and of the press; insomuch that whatever violates either, throws down the sanctuary which covers the others. (Jefferson, Kentucky Resolutions (1798). See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. VII, p. 295.)

In matters of religion I have considered that its free exercise is placed by the Constitution independent of the powers of the general Government. I have, therefore, undertaken, on no occasion to prescribe the religious exercises suited to it; but have left them as the Constitution found them under the direction and discipline of State or church authorities acknowledged by the several religious societies. (Jefferson's Second Inaugural Address (1805). See Ford's edition of his writings, vol. VIII, p. 344.)

I do not believe it is for the interest of religion to invite the civil magistrate to direct its exercises, its discipline, or its doctrines; nor of the religious societies, that the General Government should be invested with the power of effecting any uniformity of time or matter among them. (Jefferson to Rev. Samuel Miller (1808). See Ford edition of his writings, vol. IX, p. 175.)

Thomas Jefferson, writing to Albert Gallatin, June 16, 1817, said:

Three of our papers have presented us the copy of an act of the Legislature of New York, which, if it really has passed, will carry us back to the times of the darkest bigotry and barbarism to find a parallel. Its purport is that all who shall hereafter join in communion with the religious sect of Shaking Quakers shall be deemed civilly dead, their marriages dissolved, and all their children and property taken out of their hands. * * * It contrasts singularly with a contemporary vote of the Pennsylvania Legislature, who on a proposition to make belief in God a necessary qualification for office, rejected it by a great majority, although assuredly there was not a single atheist in their body. (See Ford's edition, vol. X, p. 91.)

MADISON

James Madison, writing from Montpelier, July 10, 1822, to Edward Livingston, said:

I observe with particular pleasure the view you have taken of the immunity of religion from civil jurisdiction, in every case where it does not trespass on private rights or the public peace. This has always been a favorite principle with me. * * *

I should suppose the Catholic portion of the people [of Louisiana] * * * would rally, as they did in Virginia when religious liberty was a legislative topic, to its broad principles. * * * In a Government of opinion like ours, the only effectual guard must be found in the soundness and stability of the general opinion on this subject. Every new and successful example, therefore, of a perfect separation between ecclesiastical and civil matters is of importance. (Madison's Writings (Philadelphia, 1865), vol. III, pp. 274–75.)

LINCOLN—MARCH 4, 1864—MEMORANDUM ABOUT CHURCHES

I have written before, and now repeat, the United States Government must not undertake to run the churches. When an individual in a church or out of it becomes dangerous to the public interest, he must be checked; but let the churches, as such, take care of themselves. It will not do for the United States to appoint trustees, supervisors, or other agents for the churches.

I add if the military have military need of the church building, let them keep it; otherwise let them get out of it and leave it and its owners alone, except for causes that justify the arrest of anyone. (Lincoln's Complete Works, edited by Nicolay and Hay (New York, 1894), vol. II, p. 491.)

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

During the campaign of 1908 there were some who objected to Taft as a Unitarian. After the election Theodore Roosevelt wrote under date of November 6, 1908, to J. C. Martin:

To discriminate against a thoroughly upright citizen because he belongs to some particular church * * * is an outrage against that liberty of conscience which is one of the foundations of American life. (Works of Theodore Roosevelt (Scribners, N. Y., 1921), vol. XVI, p. 46.)

PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES IN THE STATE OF OREGON

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there any more real business to come before the House this afternoon?

Mr. EKWALL. What does the gentleman mean by "real business"? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not so advised.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any further legislative business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information of any.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be rather a family affair. Most of the real business for the day, as the minority leader has mentioned, seems to be concluded. I would like to sort of correct my colleague from the Second District of Oregon, whom I personally love and respect on account of his years and experience.

I want to say that his talk on yesterday was about a minute or 2 minutes on the floor, and then under the provision of unanimous consent, whereby he extended his remarks, he has put three or four pages in here, in which he has seen fit to criticize my colleague, Mr. MOTT, from the First Oregon District, and myself. In part, he said:

I am amazed to learn that a Congressman representing those investors can raise his voice in defense of the financial pirates who robbed us.

Well, I did not raise my voice in behalf of the holding companies of this country, and I did not raise my voice in behalf of any financial pirates. I thought I made myself perfectly clear also that I was raising my voice on behalf of the innocent investors, on behalf of certain helpless citizens of this country.

I said at that time, among other things:

I hold no brief for holding companies as such. Some of them are good and some of them are bad; but I submit that with honest utility-commission officials and efficient corporation commissioners, who will fulfill their oaths of office and conduct themselves properly, that with proper regulation the utility holding companies and the utility companies can be curbed.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. How did the gentleman vote on the holding-company bill?

Mr. EKWALL. I voted against the holding-company bill because I think there is a "death sentence" clause in it, and that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. FERGUSON. The gentleman voted against regulation, then.

Mr. EKWALL. No; I did not vote against regulation. I voted against the "death sentence." I am for regulation. I have stated that on the floor and it is in the RECORD; but I did not state it in a minute or two here on the floor and then put in a lot of extraneous matter in the RECORD that my colleagues could not hear; and I resent to a certain extent my colleague from eastern Oregon putting in these remarks without even giving my colleague, Mr. MOTT, or myself a chance to know they were there except to run across them rather accidentally.

Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], or to anyone else, my interest in the citizens of my country or the users of electricity; neither do I think that I should be criticized here because I have raised my voice on behalf of the millions of investors in this country whose life savings I thought were imperiled; and I stand by my record on the floor of the House on this bill and on my speech on last Friday. I will compare it with that of my worthy, genial, and aged colleague from eastern Oregon. Methinks the gentleman protesteth too much. My colleague, Mr. PIERCE, exhorts us all to stand by the President in this particular piece of legislation; but when legislation is considered which has for its purpose inflation of our currency notice the alacrity with which he switches position. He does not hesitate to disagree with our President, when it suits his fancy, but he swears undying fealty when he sees eye to eye with his Chief.

In closing, I reiterate that I am not in anywise championing the cause of any holding company, but I am speaking for the millions of investors who have done no wrong, and who should not be punished because some crooked manipulators have acted in an unconscionable manner in the past. I would have been glad to vote for a strict regulatory measure, but I felt that the bill in question was unwise, illegal, and unfair to investors who are in position to lose their all by its passage.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] may proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I am at a disadvantage, for I did not come into the Chamber until near the close of the speech of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], having been detained by urgent departmental business for my constituents.

Mr. Speaker, if my speech in the RECORD of July 1 has attracted attention, I am glad of it. I stand on every word of it. I regret that men representing districts of Oregon that have been victimized by holding companies should cast their votes today to leave in existence companies that will do what they did in Oregon. We all know that is what is meant by the House amendment, and the talk about removing any "death penalty" clause is a mere subterfuge, possibly intended to render the act unconstitutional or to delay regulation by endless litigation. I admit it is a clever propaganda, but it is not satisfying to those who really want to better conditions for investors and consumers.

Some years ago we had an electric operating company doing business in Portland, Oreg., a company that was supposed to be solvent. Portland is a most desirable place for an electric power company, because it has an abundant and regular supply of water power and a population ready to buy electricity.

The Albert E. Peirce Co., a subsidiary of Electric Bond & Share, secured control of the stock of the local operating company. The first thing that happened thereafter was an order for the operating company to take stock in the Central Public Service Corporation, an Albert E. Peirce holding company, and transfer it for stock in the operating company. Next came an order to the operating company to take $6,753,748 from its treasury, money belonging to its stockholders, and purchase stock in the Seattle Gas Co. That stock was worth $15 per share on the market, but they paid therefor $225 per share—15 times its market value. The holding company then caused the operating company in Portland, Oreg., to enter on its books $6,753,748 for "equipment and plant", when they never bought a bit of equipment nor improved the plant.

The operating utility was simply forced to purchase the worthless stock of the Seattle Gas Co. It has all been published time and again in the Portland papers, and, so far as I know, never denied. I gave the history in my speech yesterday. I cannot conceive how any man representing a district so victimized could cast his vote to leave in existence holding companies that can rob the people in this manner.

The holding company increased the debt of the operating company in Portland, Oreg., from $45,000,000 to $71,000,000, and then went into bankruptcy, not, however, until after the holding company had sold their stock all through that country to the amount of millions, victimizing the purchasers. Then they had the audacity to go back and get those poor people whom they had swindled to telegraph here to me, and I presume to the genial judge, and to the former corporation commissioner, my colleagues from Oregon, urging support for the holding companies. I surely did not follow their advice. Let the RECORD speak for my colleagues.

Do the holding companies think they can fool all the people all the time? Are the holding companies promising to give back some of the money that they have stolen from the people?

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. The majority, today, has voted to perpetuate this same racket all over the Nation, which, if not stopped, will continue to extract from the pockets of the electric consumers about $1,000,000,000 annually, of which $6,510,000 comes from the people of Oregon. The stock racket, which you mention for Oregon, has gone on Nation-wide. It is the same kind of a racket exactly.

Mr. PIERCE. Answering my colleague from the western Oregon district, who assumes that, since he became corporation commissioner in Oregon, there has been no chance to do anything except write into the capital stock of a company in Oregon or Washington, honest investments, real money invested; may I say that the late corporation commissioner of Oregon evidently does not know what is going on and what has gone on. I assert to him and to my colleagues in this House, that there is not an electric power company in Oregon but what can be duplicated for a far less amount of money than is being carried in their capital structure today.

OREGON NOT "SAFE" FROM UTILITY EXPLOITATION

I have no desire to enter into a controversy over petty or personal matters with my colleague from Oregon. I cannot understand his position taken on this floor when he states (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 10430) that Oregon is safe because "no company of any kind in the United States can sell one of its securities in the State of Oregon without first receiving a permit from the corporation commissioner of that State." Corporation commissioners sometimes make mistakes. Such a mistake was made when a permit was issued to Albert E. Peirce & Co., to act as brokers and sell stock in the State of Oregon. One who issued that commission cannot escape responsibility for the financial disaster which followed. My colleague further asserts complete confidence in the ability of State officers or regulatory bodies to deal with the problem. Why was action not brought against these particular racketeers? There were many who relied upon the State to prosecute the company which was unfortunately allowed to operate in Oregon.

The facts of the case are that Oregon has not been, and is not today, sufficiently protected from the depredations of fraudulent, piratical holding companies. Never, during our long struggle for power rights, have the utilities been in such ruthless control. The situation in Oregon is, as my colleagues have stated, "satisfactory", but for the utilities, and not for the people. The rackets have not been stopped in Oregon. I do not know that it can be done, and that is one reason why I voted for abolition of holding companies. They still exist, and move in their own mysterious ways their wonders to perform. They work in the interests of their Wall Street backers.

BONNEVILLE POWER MUST BE PROTECTED

Oregon is paying twice what it should pay for electric energy. Yes; twice what it will pay if we are allowed to distribute the electric power from Bonneville at cost, plus a sufficient amount to amortize the investment in 50 years. That is our present problem, one which this body must help to decide. Think of the heritage we may leave to our children, those of the next generation—the electric energy of the Columbia River harnessed, paid for, and ready for use! Millions upon millions of kilowatts! It can never be done if the racketeers of Wall Street are allowed to stand between the Government-erected power plant and those who desire to use the electric energy. This opportunity must be protected from abuse by predatory interests. You must, by your votes, guarantee that protection.

Under unanimous consent of this body I withheld insertion in the RECORD of my remarks of July 2, in order to secure from Oregon an authoritative statement on the utility situation in Oregon today, said by my colleagues to be "satisfactory." This statement, which follows, is made by C. M. Thomas, utility commissioner of Oregon for 4 years, retiring last February. May I point out the fact that our utility companies still charge to operating expenses, contributions for political purposes? The press of Oregon has reported within the month an order of the present commissioner refusing further continuation of allowance as "operating charges" in a utility budget of $3,500 as a contribution to the National Security Owners' Association, whose propaganda has been on your desks this winter.

STATEMENT OF FORMER OREGON UTILITIES COMMISSIONER

SALEM, OREG., July 8, 1935.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter in re present situation in Oregon concerning public utilities, particularly referring to watered stock, dividends thereon, and holding-company fees and charges.

This information is embodied in my final report to the Governor under date of February 11, 1935. Referring only to the larger companies, the report states: "The three companies comprising the Electric Bond & Share Co. group already mentioned are carrying enormous amounts in their capital structures as common stock for which the operating company received nothing of value. This is known as 'watered stock.' Dividends have been paid on this stock. The following gives the name of the company, the date of the issuance of the watered common stock, the gross amount of dividends paid thereon, and the total service fees of each company:

Name	Year	Amount	Dividend	Service fees
Northwestern Electric Co	1914	$10,000,000	$890,000.00	$340,593.32
Pacific Power & Light Co	1910	4,764,553	1,130,920.54	1,686,966.84
Portland Gas & Coke Co	1910	2,446,100	3,616,860.37	1,384,632.35
Total for group		17,210,653	5,637,780.91	3,412,192.51

"The amount of watered stock, $17,210,653.

"The ratepayers of Oregon have provided these dividends and service fees.

"The preferred-stock holders have also suffered through loss of dividends.

"In 1934–35 the Northwestern Electric Co., having delivered notes previously to the American Power & Light Co. for dividends on the said $10,000,000 of common stock, took up said notes, paying the sum of $649,957, and passed the preferred-stock dividends, although they were earned."

HOLDING COMPANY FEES AND CHARGES

Under this heading the report states:

"The commissioner has and does consider the holding-company question the most important of all the many questions involved in the subject of the control of operating companies. Great progress has been made in this field. While commissions throughout the United States and members of the public have constantly criticized holding-company charges and fees, no practical solution had been offered until the commissioner on November 1, 1934, entered order in the cases involving the California-Oregon Power Co. and the Mountain States Power Co. This order provided that the Byllesby Engineering & Management Co. may serve the local operating companies under the following conditions:

"1. That the present contracts providing for payment on percentage of gross revenue be canceled on the ground of public policy.

"2. That a percentage charge of gross revenue or a charge by allocation is hereafter prohibited.

"3. That services may be performed and paid for under a new contract, providing:

"(a) The contract is submitted to and approved by the commissioner.

"(b) That such services must be necessary and essential to the operation.

"(c) The fee or charge must be for a definite amount, based on the actual cost of performing or furnishing.

"(d) The account must be itemized and so entered upon the books of the operating company.

"(e) Provided that if such cost exceeds the reasonable price then such reasonable price shall prevail.

"This order has been accepted by both of said companies and is now in operation.

"A list of the companies which have discontinued payment of holding-company service and managerial fees as per order of the commission, together with the amounts involved are as follows:

Portland General Electric Co., Portland Traction Co. (street car), Portland Electric Power Co. (interurban), Yamhill Electric Co., Molalla Electric Co	$268,488
West Coast Telephone Co	4,600
Oregon-Washington Water Service Co	6,000
Oregon-Washington Telephone Co	1,306
California-Oregon Power Co	121,000
Mountain States Power Co	52,183
	453,567

"There remain but two of the larger companies or groups in the State which contend that the old method of assessing and collecting holding-company fees and charges on the percentage of gross-revenue basis and the allocation method should be retained. These strenuously insist upon a retention of the old system. They are as follows:

"The Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. with its subsidiaries. These fees were rejected in the commissioner's order, which order is now in the Circuit Court of Multnomah County on appeal, and amount to an annual charge of $95,644.

"The second is known as the 'Electric Bond & Share Group.' The American Power & Light Co. holds the common-stock control and the service charges and fees are collected by the Electric Bond & Share Co. from the following:

Northwestern Electric Co	$53,755
Pacific Power & Light Co	48,740
Portland Gas & Coke Co	47,683
	150,178

Since this report was filed the new administration, according to the press, dismissed the California-Oregon Power Co. case, of which the order mentioned was a part, thereby restoring the old contracts, so that the total for 1934 would be increased by that amount. All these holding-company fees are based on percentages of gross revenue. During the depression, the amounts paid have materially decreased, as is shown by comparison with even the year 1932.

In 1932 the charges assessed by holding companies against Oregon operations were as follows:

Northwestern Electric Co. to Electric Bond & Share Co.	$55,944.06
Portland Gas & Coke Co. to Electric Bond & Share Co.	60,061.86
Pacific Power & Light Co. to Electric Bond & Share Co.	71,075.20
California-Oregon Power Co. to Byllesby E. & M.	206,365.27
Mountain States Power Co. to Byllesby E. & M.	100,183.84
Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. to American Telephone & Telegraph Co.	128,491.03
Portland Electric Power Co. to Central Public Service	268,000.00
	890,121.26

Upon the public utilities commissioner's order, the $268,000 was not paid, making total paid $622,121.26. This does not include some of the small company payments.

Notwithstanding that regulation in Oregon was provided for by statute about 1911, it has never been established by administration. Oregon like most States demands efficient regulation, but provides meager and insufficient funds to accomplish results against untiring and adequately financed organizations. The smaller and some of the larger utilities here have cooperated with the commission, but such utilities as the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., subsidiary of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and the Electric Bond & Share group referred to, not only oppose regulations every step but openly defy it. This last group has successfully avoided the establishment of valuations and rate bases.

In 1930 this group expended for donations and political contributions the following:

Northwestern Power & Light Co	$24,280
Portland Gas & Coke Co	30,234
Pacific Power & Light Co	30,758
Total	85,272

Regulation cannot be said to be established unless and until the larger utilities are compelled to submit to the same supervision as the smaller. The situation in the State is thoroughly unsatisfactory to the public.

In connection with overcharges, the overcharges here are enormous growing out of many angles of which several are, viz: (1) Excessive salaries, (2) donations, (3) political contributions and expenditures, (4) merchandising under which losses are charged to ratepayer, (5) stock-selling activities, (6) memberships and dues in clubs of all kinds, (7) holding-company fees.

State regulation cannot succeed until Congress provides effective control and supervision of defiant financial interests foreign to the State.

Very truly,

CHARLES M. THOMAS.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until 6 o'clock tonight to file a report of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to House Resolution 330, which is a very innocent resolution to close Military Road in the interest of human life.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the recently retired public service commissioner of the State of Oregon in reference to the exact condition of the utilities out there at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I have heard much in speeches on this bill of demagogues and corporations—and I almost said, of cabbages and kings. I have heard about the "brain trust"; about the goose that laid the golden eggs—a hundred or so slogans used, as usual, to keep people from thinking. By a resounding use of the word "brain trust" one is supposed to justify contempt for some employee of the Government or other person who has some education and brains. Personally, I have no contempt for a man just because he has brains and an education. Someone shouts, "You must not kill the goose that lays the golden eggs", which sounds good but does not mean anything, for we well know that if we release the investors from the racketeering and heavy expenses and service contracts of the holding companies the investors will be better off, as well as the consumers.

I have heard some able speaking on irrelevant subjects. One of my colleagues claims to be not only a Democrat but a "Jeffersonian" Democrat and a "southern" Democrat. It is true that he is from the South. So am I. I have heard the President compared, by innuendo, to Stalin, Mussolini, and Hitler; have heard the Democratic platform of 1932 referred to. The Democratic platform has been referred to numerous times concerning the "regulation" of holding companies, and yet the following was not quoted:

> We advocate strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws—

And listen closely—

> to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices, and revision thereof for the better protection of labor and the small producer and distributor; the conservation, development, and use of the Nation's water power in the public interest.

Also, in reference to holding companies, the words specifically say:

> Regulation to the full extent of Federal power of—
> (a) Holding companies which sell securities in interstate commerce.
> (b) Rates of utility companies operating across State lines.

I think if we review all angles of this matter thoroughly that we must construe the holding companies we seek to eliminate as "monopolies"; likewise we believe that we have shown that they have "unfair trade practices"; and then, to follow the rest of the thought, "regulation to the full extent of Federal power", it seems to me that the Senate bill is principally such regulation; that we regulate the holding companies in interstate commerce; that we confine them to a State or economic and geographic integrated areas. We insist upon certain simplifications and reorganizations. The word "abolish" is used. It means, on analysis, that certain gigantic organizations that in effect violate both Federal and State laws will have certain features of their corporate organization abolished. But the main purpose will be simplification in order that the people may know what they have.

To go on with the Democratic platform, however, let me go back to 1912 and quote that platform, which was adopted when Woodrow Wilson was a candidate for President, and which platform he approved. It says:

1912

We favor the declaration by law of the conditions upon which corporations shall be permitted to engage in interstate trade including, among others—

Now listen closely—

the prevention of holding companies, of interlocking directors, of stock watering, of discrimination in price, and the control by any one corporation of so large a proportion of any industry as to make it a menace to competitive conditions.

You will note that it says the "prevention" of holding companies. And I believe that it is more or less historically correct to say that the Democratic Party has always been against holding companies altogether. And everyone knows the Senate bill does not even abolish them all. Many others have described its full provisions. In any event, I have quoted the platform of the Democratic Party in order to clarify the subject, but it seems aside from the platform that the Senate bill is good common sense.

Now, let us analyze the Senate bill and see whether or not there is anything socialistic about it. Some speakers have said so. But the Senate bill is no more socialistic than the House bill; and I cannot see, according to any principle of socialism, that either bill has the slightest socialistic tinge about it. Then, why say the Senate bill is socialistic? I cannot see why it is socialistic to have our corporations in such shape that we can handle them. Neither bill provides for public ownership. The Senate bill has the miscalled "death sentence", and this section seems to me to be just old-style Democratic political principle, and it seems to me to be good economics. When any organization becomes too complicated in its various combinations, organizations, subsidiaries, and various similar and dissimilar names, too widely spread and too powerful, it must in some manner be curbed, and such as is harmful corrected by abolition of certain features or regulation. That does not mean that we are opposed to big corporations, but it does mean that we are opposed to corporations which cannot in any way be controlled. So that, I think, disposes of the socialism issue. It is not necessary to defend or denounce socialism, except to say that this bill in no way attaches itself to socialism, and is wholly irrelevant.

And then we get to Thomas Jefferson. He always hated and despised monopolies; there is no question but that the holding companies sought to be eliminated or regulated are monopolies. The Democratic Party, from month to month and year to year, has always denounced monopolies; then if you get down to Democratic doctrine, as a matter of fact, this bill, which seeks to eliminate the unnecessary holding companies and to confine whatever holding companies are left, such as those which operate in a geographical and economic area, or those within a State, why that is simply good Democratic doctrine. And you can say, as far as that is concerned, that it is good, southern Democratic doctrine.

Let us discuss for a moment the matter of corporations as a whole.

All of us know that the problem of government is difficult at best. There is not a man in this House who does not know that it is one thing to make laws and quite a difficult thing to make laws that will actually reach the abuse we are aiming at or that will stop when it reaches its mark. It is difficult enough to govern the individual citizen. There are vicious and violent and cunning men among us who know how to evade the law, to bribe the law administrator, to escape in numerous ways the processes of the law. But, difficult as this is, it is a comparatively easy task compared with the efforts to govern the corporation.

I do not wish to attack the corporation as a useful instrument of organization in industry. They are necessary. But, as practical legislators, we have got to recognize that the bigger, the richer, the more powerful the individual citizen is, the more difficult it is for the Government to reach him if he is disposed to defy it. And in the corporation we have erected fictional legal beings, separate and legal personalities, which are bigger than any citizen can hope to be. The corporation unites the resources of thousands, even hundreds of thousands of individuals. And while those resources belong to the corporation, the corporation itself becomes an instrument in the hands of the small group of men who dominate it. I know that many such groups use those corporations for useful, productive purposes. But we all know that there are many which have been used for the selfish aggrandizement of the men who dominate them. All of us, I think, will agree on these points.

Now again, I repeat, I do not want to do away with the corporation merely because it is so big and powerful. But I say that as practical men, holding in trust the welfare of the Nation, we have to be sure that we do not permit the corporation to grow so large, so powerful, and having such wide economic and political influence that it becomes too big to govern—or so big that it dominates the Government itself.

This in turn means that we do not permit the corporation to possess attributes which, in their very nature, put it beyond the reach of the Government. You can govern the citizen because you can identify him; you can put your hand on him; you can locate him. But you cannot locate the corporation, you cannot put your hand on it. What do I mean by this? Well, the citizen is a man. He has a name. He is a single individual. You do not permit him to divide himself up into two or a dozen or a score of individuals. You do not permit him to operate under an alias. But the corporation can do all these things. By means of the holding-company device, a corporation can split itself up into a score or a hundred corporations. Every department of a business can be made into a separate corporation with a different name. In one State the business is conducted by one corporation, in another State by another. Assets can be passed around. Funds can be juggled; books become utterly incomprehensible. Some of these corporate structures are so complicated that the men who run them cannot remember their countless ramifications. It is said that Ivar Kruger killed himself when he lost his recollection of the interminable tangle of corporations in his vast web and could not keep track of it.

Samuel Insull controlled the light and power resources of 5,000 American cities. Owen D. Young on the witness stand testified that when he went to look into the Insull tangle he could not understand it. No government can understand it. No government can reach it. No government can govern a being which is so vast, so complicated, so indefinable, and which, before the law, actually enjoys, by government franchise, the dangerous privilege of being 10, 20, or 100 beings. We must make up our minds that we must cut these monsters down in size and simplify them in nature to the point where we can subject them to the reign of law or we must abdicate and declare that we are too weak to govern them.

Now on the question of the investor. Right here let me say this. I am growing weary of this incessant, ceaseless clamor of fire alarms that are being touched off by big business at every important piece of legislation pending in this House. Every bill that has been introduced has brought down here a gang of lobbyists who have cried out to the American people that if the bill were to pass American business would be destroyed and chaos would overtake us.

The bankers are here yelling that the Reserve bank bill will ruin all the banks. The utility people are here saying that this utility bill will destroy our utilities, wreck a $16,000,000,000 investment, and bankrupt the investors. The tax bill will destroy what is left of business. The farm bills will wreck the processors of basic commodities. The labor bill will crush industry. Last year they said the Securities Act would end investment. And they told us if the stock exchange bill were passed it would end our financial system.

These men are engaged in one ceaseless, indiscriminate, boisterous ballyhoo of disaster and destruction, and I think it is time to stop it.

On this bill they are telling the investors that it will force the dumping of shares on the market in the midst of a great depression and that this will wreck all values. They know that is not so. Of course, some shares will have to be sold. But the companies will have from 3½ to 4½ years to make their sales. Do they mean we are still going to be in the depression in 1940 and after?

And why will it be necessary to dump shares of operating companies on the market? The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, in 1911, was a holding company and the Supreme Court dissolved it. It did not sell a single share of its operating companies. And it was not destroyed. The General Electric was a holding company as to the shares of Electric Bond & Share back around 1924 or 1925. It did not sell those shares. It merely passed them around to its own shareholders. There are plenty of examples of that. They told us back in 1932 when Senator GLASS introduced a bill to compel banks to divest themselves of their affiliates within 2 years that this was not enough, that it would take 5 years and that this would work great hardship on the banks and affiliates. But then came the exposures of the National City Bank and the Chase National Bank. The Chase Bank saw it was on the spot and, without waiting for any law, its directors announced that it would divest itself of its affiliates and it did so within a few months. And did this wreck the bank? Did it wreck the affiliate? Why I read in the paper the other day that the shares of that affiliate, now known as the "Boston Co.", have had the most sensational rise in the market of any stock.

Some of these companies will prove a little difficult to untangle. Of course, that is so. But it can be done. There is not one cent of value in these holding companies save the value that it is the operating companies which they own. If we do nothing to impair that, the values that are left can be distributed among the investors who own the shares. These men know that. This talk about loss is only another case of trying to frighten Congressmen. The American people have lost $16,000,000,000 in holding-company securities. Who got that sixteen billion or at least that portion of it which was paid out by investors in actual cash? The promoters who organize and in most cases still dominate these holding companies. They have robbed the American people of $16,000,000,000, and the weapon they used was the holding company. Now, when this Government proposes that we take that machine gun out of their hands, these fellows, with that $16,000,000,000 still in their pants pockets, come down here and pretend to act as the protectors of the very investors they have impoverished. Here is a corporation, the Electric Power & Light Corporation. Here is an investor who owns a share of stock in it. He paid $83 for it. Now it is worth 85 cents. Standing by his side is a gentleman who says he is the investor's protector and guardian. But he is the fellow who has the investor's $83 in his jeans. Now he looks very pious and says Congress is about to rob him of the remaining 85 cents.

There is really not much left to be destroyed. But what is left ought to be saved for the investor, and the only way to do that is to break the hold of the exploiter on him. The way to do that is to take out of his hands the machine gun—the holding company—with which he has held up the American investor in holding-company utilities of billions and with which he hopes to resume his depredations as soon as times get better.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have worked up certain information concerning the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, which has a capital of its 11 operating subsidiaries of some $1,000,000,000.

This study, which I submit here, shows how the simplifications can be made and how it does not in effect abolish anything or destroy anybody's investment, and will, in fact, benefit all of the stockholders of these various companies. The study which I have prepared is as follows:

The Commonwealth & Southern Corporation

(Source: Moody's Public Utilities, 1934–35. A. E. Hay, June 22, 1935)

	Book value as of Dec. 31, 1934	Percent of the total fixed capital of the 11 subsidiaries
Total fixed capital of its 11 operating subsidiaries	$1,013,118,914
A. Southern group:
1. Alabama Power Co., Alabama	179,839,589
2. Georgia Power Co., Georgia	260,992,016
3. Gulf Power Co., Florida	16,578,625
4. Mississippi River Power Co., Mississippi	32,929,634
5. South Carolina Power Co., South Carolina	23,349,575
6. Tennessee Power Co., Tennessee	98,270,300
Total fixed capital	611,959,744	60.40
The above group or system fully meets the requirements of the Senate bill 2796.
B. Northern system:
7. Consumers' Power Co., Michigan	211,519,257	20.87
The property of this company is also a "geographically and economically integrated public-utility system."
C. Eastern systems:
8. Ohio Edison Co.,[1] Ohio	114,631,566	11.31
9. Pennsylvania Power Co., Pennsylvania	12,694,124	1.25
Total	127,325,690	12.56
These 2 properties[1] constitute a "geographically and economically integrated 'public utility' system extending into 2 or more contiguous States."
D. Illinois group:
10. Central Illinois Light Co., Illinois	$42,217,990	4.17
Except for a small separate system serving 8 towns in northern Illinois, the "Illinois group" forms "a single geographically and economically integrated 'public utility' system."
E. Indiana system:
11. Southern Indiana Gas & Electric Co., Indiana	20,096,233	1.99
This Indiana company also forms a single geographically and economically integrated "public utility" system.
Total fixed capital	1,013,118,914	100

	Fixed capital	Percent of total
RÉSUMÉ
The first 3 groups or systems named fully meet, each in itself, the requirements of Senate bill 2796 as to constituting "a geographically and economically integrated public utility system":
A. Southern group	$611,959,744	60.40
B. Northern system	211,519,257	20.88
D. Illinois system (except for a small separate system serving 8 towns in northern part of the State)	42,217,990	4.17
Total	865,696,991	85.45
The 2 following properties form "a geographically and economically integrated 'public utility' system * * * extending into 2 or more contiguous States":
C. Ohio and Pennsylvania (except for a small separate system serving about 6 towns in Western Ohio)	127,325,690	12.56
Property which, though forming "a geographically and economically integrated 'public utility' system", for several reasons might have to be disposed of.
E. Indiana system	20,096,233	1.99
Total of above	1,013,118,914	100

[1] Except for a small separate system serving about 6 towns in Ohio.

COMMENTS

A study of the data herewith submitted clearly shows in any reorganization of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, that at least 98 percent in "fixed capital", of its subsidiary properties can be so handled or arranged as to not adversely affect either their outstanding securities or those of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, that is, under any well-considered plan no security holder need to lose any money or any of his or her securities.

Neither under the provisions of the Senate bill, S. 2796, with special reference to section 11 (a) to (e), both inclusive, or other sound reason, will it be necessary to sacrifice either property or securities.

The Commonwealth & Southern Corporation may have to divest itself of the following: Its property in Indiana, in Ohio, in Illinois. The first is practically only 1.99 percent of the corporation's total fixed capital, and it doubtless could be sold to other interests operating in Indiana, and without any loss to security holders.

The properties in Ohio and Illinois would amount to about one-tenth of 1 percent of total fixed capital, so that, as to these three properties, the maximum amount involved would be only 2 percent of total fixed capital, in any reorganization of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and which does not necessarily mean that much or even any loss to the latter or its stockholders.

The Ohio Edison Co. in 1931 exchanged about four of its properties for a like amount of utilities nearer to its Akron property. In fact, all public-utility holding companies have exchanged properties or acquired them on a basis of exchange of securities—because it suited them to do so.

The Commonwealth & Southern Corporation state, since their organization in 1929, that they have reduced the 165 then constituent companies to its present 11 operating subsidiaries—all of this within about 5 years.

The Public Utility Act of 1935 gives it longer time in which to do much less, and without loss to security holders or itself.

SHIP-SUBSIDY LEGISLATION AND H. R. 8555

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the day following the vote upon the ship-subsidy bill, H. R. 8555, some newspaper accounts reported the struggle as one in which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] had come close to defeating an administration measure requested by President Roosevelt. I have challenged a similar statement appearing prior to the vote from the floor of the House and afford myself of this opportunity to reiterate that same challenge. Members of the House were told under varying circumstances that Roosevelt's ship-subsidy bill was at stake, which I will deny until our distinguished leader in the White House indicates that I am in error.

The Chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries stated in the hearings that the bill under consideration at that time was not an administration measure. During the course of the debate on the floor he stated definitely that he had not discussed the proposal in person with President Roosevelt and went only so far as to state that the Secretary of Commerce had approved the proposed legislation. In fact, the proponents of the bill repeatedly made the statement that it differed in several marked respects with the suggestions of the President in his special message to Congress. That is evidenced by the fact that he recommended a reorganization of the administrative machinery and a separation of the regulatory functions from administrative duties, the former to be placed under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission. H. R. 8555 does not conform with this request.

With reference to the corrupt mail contracts awarded under title IV of the 1928 act, the President suggested that the Congress end this subterfuge and indicated that we should terminate existing contracts. H. R. 8555 conforms only in part with this suggestion. It does prevent their renewal or extension, but it permits the said contracts now in force to continue until they have expired, if the President sees fit to permit such a state of affairs. Such a provision fails to comply with the suggestion that we end the subterfuge, but what is even worse it continues to "pass the buck" to the Chief Executive.

The President also suggested in his special message to the Congress that we terminate the business of lending Government money for shipbuilding. H. R. 8555 does not do this, but continues and glorifies the evil. It is entirely possible that the shipping interests of this country can secure loans that will total more than 80 percent of the cost of the ship and then trade in their obsolete bottoms as part and perhaps full payment on the balance due. It should be evident from the above facts and from the very admissions of the proponents of the bill themselves in the hearings before the committee and on the floor of the House that the bill now before the Senate does not follow the suggestions of the Chief Executive based upon the findings of the investigation on the part of the Post Office Department, but disagrees in vital respects. It cannot, therefore, be said that the measure that so recently passed the House by a narrow margin is an administration bill. The facts indicate we can reasonably assume the opposite to be the case.

One of the principle objections I raised to H. R. 8555 was the fact that many of its sections incorporate a specific prohibition against many of the evils that have been brought out by recent investigations, and that all admit should be stopped, such as the tendency to pipe out subsidies through the agency of subsidiaries and similar unfortunate circumstances that have cost the American taxpayers millions of dollars without having resulted in a better merchant marine under the 1928 act, and then in the concluding sentences of the said sections include permissive authority to permit the recurrence of such evils on the part of the body charged with the administration of the pending bill. Such permissive authority is a direct contradiction of the avowed purpose on the part of the proponents of the bill to prevent a recurrence of what has happened under old ship-subsidy legislation. If a thing is bad, it should be prevented and no agency of the Government granted the authority to permit its recurrence. In answer to my charge the statement was repeatedly made that the President can be trusted to select the proper personnel. That is true; but Franklin D. Roosevelt will not always be President of the United States. Our experience has been that even where any part of the Government has been granted limited jurisdiction in the administration of subsidies abuses have occurred, inspired, no doubt, by those who were to profit thereby. With that thought in mind, I discover in Senate Report 898, covering Preliminary Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Ocean and Air Mail Contracts (pp. 34, 35, and 36), certain facts which, in my judgment, it has now become necessary to place before the Congress and country, through the agency of the RECORD, in an effort to protect the public interests.

Government officials, charged with the administration of this subsidy, have on various occasions taken illegal action, in some instances previously objected to by the Comptroller General, and in at least one case directly disregarding the expressed desire of Congress.

In spite of the fact that Congress had specifically forbidden the payment of any moneys on the purported contract of Seatrain Lines, Inc., the Post Office Department, under Postmaster General Brown, regularly dispatched mails under this contract. Such dispatch continued until the fall of 1933, when it was first brought to the attention of executive Post Office officials of the present administration and was promptly discontinued.

As a result of transactions involving the sale of a Shipping Board vessel, steamship Storm King, and concessions on the sale price of certain stores, it appears that the Export Steamship Corporation was permitted to profit at Government expense in the amount of $152,082.79. Without apparent authority in law, the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation has paid out in premiums on vessels sold by the Shipping Board to the Export Steamship Corporation $457,457.19, $240,000 of which has been repaid by the Export Steamship Corporation, leaving an outstanding amount of $217,457.19.

The Comptroller General has consistently taken exception to the operating agreement of 1930, commonly known as the "lump sum" agreement, upon the ground that such agreements are illegal. Notwithstanding the expressed position of the Comptroller General, millions of dollars have been paid out under such agreements, some of which are still in effect. Appropriations, however, have been passed providing for payment under the operating agreement of 1930.

On November 14, 1932, the Comptroller General advised the Shipping Board that it was without authority to pay the United States Lines Co. to assume their extended liability in connection with prepaid tickets sold by the Government prior to April 8, 1929.

Prior to this ruling, however, and on September 16, 1932, the accounts in question had been assumed by the United States Lines Co., which for assuming the account, received from the Shipping Board $216,639.96, and had disbursed to December 31, 1933, against the assumed liability, only $18,731.

In the spring of 1929 the vessels of the American Merchant Lines and the United States Lines, regarded as the prize fleet operated by the United States Shipping Board, were sold to the United States Lines, Inc., for $16,000,000, 25 percent of which was paid in cash. A large amount of stock in the United States Lines, Inc., was sold to the general public.

In 1931 the United States Lines, Inc., experienced financial difficulty in complying with the construction requirements of its mail contracts. As a result of this situation, which involved construction loans, the United States Shipping Board compelled the United States Lines, Inc., to name as 4 of its 7 directors, 4 nominees of the Shipping Board, Ira A. Campbell, Robert L. Hague, Edward N. Hurley, and Franklin D. Mooney. In the month of July 1931 the Shipping Board began to press for some reorganization of the United States Lines, Inc., and advised representatives of various steamship companies of its intention. The Board eventually offered for sale the notes of the United States Lines, Inc., in the approximate amount of $11,000,000. The highest bid was made by a group composed of the Dollar, Dawson, and Chapman interests, the International Mercantile Marine being one of several unsuccessful bidders. The bid of the Dollar-Dawson-Chapman group, submitted on August 17, 1931, was not immediately accepted by the Shipping Board. However, on October 13, 1931, a contract was entered into between Messrs. Dollar and Dawson and representatives of the International Mercantile Marine Co. whereby the International Mercantile Marine Co. obtained an interest in the new company to be organized upon the acceptance of the Dollar-Dawson-Chapman bid. On October 30, 1931, the United States Lines Co., a Nevada corporation, organized pursuant to the bid of the Dollar-Dawson-Chapman group, and in which the International Mercantile Marine Co. had obtained an interest by the contract of October 13, 1931, entered into a contract with the Shipping Board for the purchase of the notes for $3,170,900. While less important and more reasonable concessions had theretofore been refused to the United States Lines, Inc., by the Shipping Board, this contract made among others the following concessions to the new company. The contract provided for the redelivery of the steamship America and the steamship George Washington to the Shipping Board and the cancelation of the outstanding indebtedness on these two ships. The outstanding notes purchased amounted to $8,983,620.56, which the new company purchased for $3,170,900, a net reduction in the amount of $5,812,720.56. All payments on the amount of $3,170,900 were deferred for 3 years. No interest was to be paid on the outstanding indebtedness of $3,170,900 until October 30, 1934, at which time interest was to and did begin to accrue at 4½ percent. Miscellaneous payables due the Shipping Board by the United States Lines, Inc., in the amount of $196,168 were deferred for a period of 3 years.

The International Mercantile Marine Co. was represented in this transaction by Mr. Cletus Keating, law partners of Ira Campbell, placed upon the board of directors of the United States Lines, Inc., by the United States Shipping Board. Chauncey Parker, who, as general counsel for the Shipping Board, drew the contract of October 30, 1931, in which the concessions detailed above were granted to the new company in which the International Mercantile Marine Co. was interested, held 6-percent bonds of the International Mercantile Marine Co. in the amount of $10,000. Postmaster General Brown, when he approved subcontracts on mail routes 43 and 44 by the United States Lines, Inc., to the new United States Lines Co., in which the International Mercantile Marine Co. had an interest, held over 4,000 shares of stock in the International Mercantile Marine Co.

In spite of the fact that the law gave the Postmaster General no power beyond that of making contracts to carry the mail, it is conclusively established that in letting these contracts no real attention was paid to the effect of such action upon the Postal Service. In every instance where, on grounds bearing no reasonable relation to "mail", the Postmaster General determined to let contracts for the carriage of the mail, he stood ready to and did certify the proposed service as a "mail route." The incorrigible optimism of the Postmaster General as to the "substantial volume of parcel post which might be developed" on routes whereon no mail moved when the contract was let has been equalled only by the ingenuity of the operators in making this optimism bear fruit in correspondence addressed by themselves to their agents abroad and especially ear-marked for carriage by their "mail contract" ships (lest benighted postal employees, concerned with service rather than subsidy, dispatch it by speedier means), and even in transporting empty mail sacks.

The Postmaster General has advised the President that out of 43 such active mail routes only 12 are of substantial value as mail carriers, 8 are of slight postal value, 23 have no postal value whatever, and that a number of them are actually detrimental to the speedy transmission of the mails.

Particular attention is called to the part the lobbyist, Ira Campbell, took in transferring the net assets of the United States Lines, Inc., to the United States Lines Co., the latter now a subsidiary of the International Mercantile Marine Co. Bear in mind that Mr. Campbell was placed on the Board of Directors of the United States Lines, Inc., by the old Shipping Board. Mr. Cletus Keating, a law partner of Mr. Campbell, represented the United States Lines Co. in the transaction.

Approximately $150,000 has been paid the Campbell-Keating firm by the United States Lines Co. in fees (p. 557, pt. 3 of the Farley reports). Cash in the amount of $8,400,000 was invested in the United States Lines, Inc., by P. W. Chapman & Co. at the outset (p. 275 of pt. 2 of the Farley reports).

P. W. Chapman & Co. sold a great deal of this stock to the general public and the literature used in selling said stock to the public was approved by the United States Shipping Board (see p. 258 of pt. 2 of the Farley reports). Testimony before the Black committee (pp. 4120–4122, inclusive, of pt. 9 of the hearings) indicates that when the assets of the United States Lines, Inc., were transferred to the United States Lines Co. the general public held approximately 47,000 shares of stock in the United States Lines, Inc., which cost them over $3,000,000.

The United States Lines Co. issued to the United States Lines, Inc., for all their assets, junior preferred stock in the new company—the United States Lines Co.—which has thus far proved worthless.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, stated before that committee that the stock issued to the old company was as worthless as so much wall paper (p. 565 of Davis hearings in 1932). Thus far his statement has proven true, the transfer having taken place in 1931.

The above information reflects a picture whereby stockholders, including some 4,700 individuals scattered over approximately 45 States, have invested over $3,000,000 in a worthless venture recommended by the Government—this does not include the net investment of approximately $5,000,000 by P. W. Chapman & Co. after a certain percentage of the stock had been sold to the general public. In other words, they have worthless stock in the United States Lines, Inc., and the United States Lines, Inc., in turn, has the thus far worthless junior preferred stock in the United States Lines Co., representing a cash investment of $8,400,000.

Incidentally, this is more outside money than has been brought into the steamship companies now holding mail contracts by all other investors since the World War. One would not wonder at the ill repute in which the steamship industry has fallen, and this, no doubt, is one of the many reasons why outside capital is not, and cannot be, interested in the steamship industry. It is an additional reason why the taxpayers should not invest more millions in an enterprise handled by the same people unless they retain title to the ships.

It is also interesting to note that Mr. Campbell was not only a party to this questionable transaction but he is attorney for the American Steamship Owners' Association, whose members have mail contracts with a gross value of $300,000,000, which contracts, the Postmaster General has advised, were illegally awarded. Mr. Campbell's firm is also attorney for the group of companies controlled by the International Mercantile Marine Co., who hold contracts valued at over $40,000,000, and which are included in the total contracts that are subject to cancelation. He is also attorney for the Lykes' Companies, who hold contracts valued at over $35,000,000, which contracts are also a part of this group. The Seatrain Lines, Inc., hold an alleged illegal contract for which the Senate has refused to appropriate any money. The Seatrain Lines, Inc., are suing the Government, and Campbell is their attorney. From the testimony before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, we can reasonably conclude that the subsidy provisions of H. R. 8555 are satisfactory to Mr. Campbell, who speaks for the shipping interests.

I call the attention of the Congress and the country to the above facts to indicate the selfish manner in which the shipping interests of this country functioned under the 1928 act, through which they received their subsidies and likewise their failure to cooperate with the letter and spirit of the law, not to mention the interest of Congress to develop an American merchant marine. There is nothing that leads many of us to believe they will act differently under the bill now before the Senate should it become a law.

It will be recalled that during the debates upon H. R. 8555 last Tuesday and Wednesday I called attention to the fact that the bill provided for at least 10 different forms of subsidies. Among the most vicious of the group are the construction, operating, and what I have termed trade penetration and general loss subsidies about which there has been thrown but slight safeguards against excessive expenditures thereunder. In fact, from the experts, including Mr. Alfred H. Hall, of the Department of Commerce, I learn, as do proponents of the bill, that the very element of differential between foreign costs and American costs which is the basis of the proposed act is an evasive term that cannot be determined accurately. We have no way of discovering how much money could be spent under a bill of such a character. It is evident from the character of the measure that tremendous sums could be advanced to the shipping interests of this country without violating the terms of the bill if it should become a law.

The American taxpayers would not tolerate such a situation nor should they even be asked to do so, especially when our experience in the past has been that the altruism of the interests this measure attempts to favor now has not prompted them to cooperate with the Government in building an adequate merchant marine.

If private capital is not available to promote an American merchant marine without the investment of practically the entire amount on the part of the Federal Government then we are justified in believing that the American Government should retain title to the ships built until such time as the operators are in a position to purchase and pay for them. Under such a program we would be assured of developing American-flag services as rapidly as we desire which is the goal toward which many people profess to be laboring.

MERCHANT MARINE—H. R. 8555

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the merchant marine bill, and to include therein excerpts from Senate Report No. 898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, after studying very carefully H. R. 8555 and also after listening attentively to the several days' discussion of the merchant marine situation and to the unsuccessful efforts of a well-informed minority presenting amendments to this essentially unsound bill that would provide no protection in the disbursement of the taxpayers' money, I am convinced that this Congress should have the benefit of the conclusions and recommendations contained in the preliminary report of the Special Committee to Investigate Ocean and Air Mail Contracts—Senate Report No. 898—which report was published after a study of over 2 years had been made by the committee of the administration of the ocean mail contracts and the merchant marine situation generally. They follow:

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

From the mass of evidence relating to the American merchant marine which has been uncovered, examined, and considered it is possible to draw certain definite conclusions.

In the past the Government, by managing-operator agreements on the percentage and lump-sum basis, and by mail contracts, has subsidized ship lines which did not then have, do not now have, and probably never will have commerce and trade sufficient to make them self-sustaining. It has subsidized others, then and now, capable of earning fair—and in some instances large—profits without a dollar of Government aid. Having in mind the policies of the past, and the present regrettable status of the American merchant marine in which these policies have resulted, it is evident that certain decisions must be made, and that it is imperative for those decisions to be made immediately. It is abundantly shown that the present situation is intolerable.

The first question (and it must be decided upon the sole ground of public interest) is whether or not the Government shall expend taxpayers' money to create and maintain a merchant marine. This Government may, should it see fit, leave the business of shipbuilding and the operation of ships in foreign trade to the natural forces and elements of private business, and refrain from using public funds in these enterprises. If this course should be followed, it is believed by many that fewer ships would be built in America, and that some non-self-supporting ship lines would be abandoned. The natural result of declining shipbuilding in America would probably be the decline of facilities for shipbuilding to such an extent that this country would have inadequate shipyards capable of expanding the American merchant marine to necessary size under emergency conditions. Your committee believes, however, that many American ships would continue to operate without financial aid from the Government, and that if a constructive national policy were adopted there would be developed a merchant marine commensurate to the commercial and national needs of the country.

However, assuming that the public interest requires the expenditure of Government funds to create and maintain an American merchant marine, a second and more complex problem is presented as to the method by which the Government is to create and maintain the desired merchant marine. There are several major alternatives which the Government may adopt:

(1) It may provide for Government ownership and operation.

(2) It may provide for Government ownership and private operation, the operation to be subsidized where this is proved necessary.

(3) It may provide for private ownership and private operation, the operation to be subsidized where this is proved necessary.

Under any system of Government aid, the problem of construction and its cost is particularly important. Under the system which has operated up to the present, the Government has undertaken to supply the differences between the cost of construction in American yards and the cost of construction abroad without reference to whether or not the cost of construction in the American yard was just and equitable. The cost of construction has been left entirely to the private operator and the private shipyard. It is obvious that there can be no justification for payment of more than a reasonable price for the subsidized construction of ships. The cost of ships constructed for an American merchant marine with the aid of Government funds to be operated either by the Government or by a private individual should be rigidly scrutinized and provisions made to prevent profiteering in this business at the expense of the taxpayer. It is believed that ships for an American merchant marine can, and should be, constructed in private American yards. If, however, it be found impossible to secure private construction of suitable ships on reasonable terms and conditions, it will, of course, become advisable for the Government to construct ships in its own yards. No necessity excuses the payment of Government tribute to private monopoly.

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY VERSUS GOVERNMENT OPERATION

Undoubtedly there are various trade routes wherein operations could not be carried on profitably. If it be deemed in the public interest for the Government to extend financial aid for such operations, an annual expenditure of millions of Government dollars must be expected. This expenditure is inevitable in such an undertaking, whether the ships be Government operated or privately operated, but Government subsidized.

True Government operation implies that the business is conducted without hope or possibility of private individual profit and with complete Government control of the wages, salaries, working conditions, and activities of those employed therein. In such Government operations, if there is profit it inures to the taxpaper, and if there is loss it is borne by the taxpayer.

True private operation implies that private individuals supply the capital and operate and control the project for private profit, stimulated by the hope of profit to operate frugally and efficiently.

Business subsidized by the Government looks to the Government for a part or all of its capital. Government subsidy absorbs whatever losses are incurred in whole or in part. In the past, control of wages, salaries, working conditions, and profits of business subsidized by the United States has been vested in private individuals. In other words, while the Government has supplied, during the past decade, far more than 50 percent of the capital of enterprises engaged in foreign shipping, as the investor of the greater portion of this capital, it has not had that management and control which private investors would have had under the same circumstances.

As between true Government ownership and operation of a merchant marine and true private ownership and operation, your committee would favor the latter.

As between true Government ownership and operation and private ownership and operation subsidized by the Government, your committee believes that Government ownership and operation would best serve the interest of the people.

Private ownership and operation of merchant and aerial transportation with Government subsidy has resulted in a saturnalia of waste, inefficiency, unearned exorbitant salaries, and bonuses and other forms of so-called "compensation", corrupting expense accounts, exploitation of the public by the sale and manipulation of stocks, the values of which are largely based on the hope of profit from robbing the taxpayer, and a general transfer of energy and labor from operating business to "operating on" the taxpayer. Measured by results, the subsidy system, as operated, has been a sad, miserable, and corrupting failure. Many of its apologists have been shown to be those who have directly received financial profit or those who for various reasons have been influenced by those who did directly profit from it. Not the least of these influences has been the millions of Government dollars flowing through the hands of the immediate recipients, their associates, affiliates, subsidiaries, holding companies, and allies into the treasuries of newspapers, magazines, and publicity agencies. Evidence before this committee has illustrated the existence and effect of these evil influences.

True Government operation has had only one trial. Although certain marine profiteers and some portions of the press have repeatedly asserted that the Government has lost huge sums by direct Government operation and drawn therefrom the unsound conclusions that such losses are inevitable in true Government operation, the truth is that this Government has not, since 1920, with the exception of one fleet, engaged in any such operation. The exception is the fleet operated as the United States Lines.

After spending $5,565,327.05 during a period of 4 years in the development and operation of this line in a manner similar to the development of lines privately operated, the Government, for the fiscal year 1927, showed a profit of $404,017.12 in the operation of this line. During that same year so-called "private operations" on other Government-owned lines operated for private profit cost the American taxpayers $9,283,035.31.

This was prior to the wide-spread decline in maritime business conditions. This line was sold to private interests in the year 1929 and has been privately operated since that time with the aid of huge grants of so-called "mail pay." The result of this single instance of true Government operation does not show the impracticability of such operation, but, on the other hand, demonstrates that true Government operation, under normal business conditions, has been and can be profitable.

As heretofore stated, Government losses, persistently described by selfish interests as arising out of Government operations, have really resulted from private operations in the form of subsidized operating agreements variously called "managing-operator agreements", "lump-sum agreements", and "mail contracts." Under all of these, the private operators took the profits and the Government took the losses. Your committee believes from the experiences of the Government, particularly during the past decade, that it would be difficult and almost impractical to devise safeguards sufficient to save the taxpayer from the unfair and unjust extortions of persistent profiteers under a subsidy system.

This committee, therefore, recommends that whenever the taxpayers' money is invested in ships or shipping enterprises, the Government retain full and complete ownership and control. It is believed that loss and waste from such ownership and operation would be far less than that which inevitably results from the subsidy system. Certainly the Government would not reduce the wages of its smaller paid workers and at the same time permit its agents and employees to profit from salaries, bonuses, commissions, and other forms of so-called "compensation" to the extent of one hundred thousand to half a million dollars in a single year, which have, in several instances, been the results of subsidy.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP WITH PRIVATE OPERATION

As heretofore stated, your committee considers Government ownership and operation preferable to any system involving subsidy. As between Government ownership with subsidized private operation and true private ownership with subsidized private operation, your committee would unquestionably prefer the latter. Your committee, however, does not believe that it is possible to bring about the latter system.

Not all the Government aid which has been expended over a long period of years, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, with the practice of lending Government money for shipbuilding (which practice the President has stated should terminate) has been able to create a privately owned American merchant marine. It has been shown that the resources of private enterprises engaged in foreign shipping are wholly inadequate to finance the necessary construction program which has been conservatively calculated to require an expenditure of not less than $245,000,000 at the rate of $35,000,000 per annum during the next 7 years. It appears axiomatic that if the Government, by reason of its investment, is to be the equitable owner of the American merchant marine, it should retain legal title to the ships themselves, and with such title retain that complete control which accompanies legal ownership.

Government ownership with private subsidized operation should not, however, permit the iniquitous managing-operator or lump-sum systems of the past. The operation should be upon a charter basis or a profit-sharing basis, permitting no more than a reasonable profit for those private interests best equipped and experienced to operate the Government's fleets in an efficient and aggressive manner.

Your committee therefore recommends that whenever the taxpayers' money is invested in ships or shipping enterprises, unless it be considered (as we consider it) in the public interest to provide for Government ownership and operation, that the system adopted provide for Government ownership with private operation.

SUBSIDIZED PRIVATE OWNERSHIP AND OPERATION

The Merchant Marine Act of 1928, according to its terms, was designed to create and maintain an adequate merchant marine ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States. While this act has been flagrantly maladministered, it is incapable, even if administered with maximum efficiency, of providing an adequate American merchant marine at reasonable cost.

Its administration has been distinguished by a startling disregard for the public interest. Public officials have been encouraged to believe that the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 actually meant what it did not say, and that they should administer it—as they have administered it—upon this essentially unsound basis.

It is conspicuously devoid of those safeguards which should always accompany grants of public money to private persons for the effectuation of a public purpose.

Its administration was confided to the Post Office Department, then and now without the proper facilities for the administration of a marine subsidy.

Instead of an adequate American Merchant Marine it has produced unconscionable exploiters, intent upon wringing every possible penny from the public purse while giving an absolute minimum of service in return. It has facilitated every conceivable form of holding company—subsidiary, affiliate, and associated corporate hocus-pocus. It has financially assisted favored operators in the protected and semiprotected trades against competition limited to unsubsidized American-flag enterprises. While it has given birth to a situation to delight unscrupulous, self-seeking individuals, it has caused the marine subsidy of this Nation, with real reason, to become known as "pie."

The Merchant Marine Act of 1928 should be repealed.

The history of marine subsidy in the United States does not encourage this committee to believe that such a subsidy is likely to be honestly administered in the future. Reserving to itself the right to doubt that it is possible to secure honest administration of such an act, this committee points out a few essentials which must be contained in any subsidy program. The following conclusions with respect to the administration of a subsidy apply with like force to a system contemplating Government ownership and private operation and to a system contemplating subsidized private ownership and operation.

The subsidy must be administered by fearless, uncompromising men, unsusceptible to the insidious influence of selfish interests. These men must bring to their difficult task intelligence, industry, candor, and courage, and minds single to the best interest of their country. They must not be compelled to take over entire the personnel of existing governmental agencies, shot through with the destructive propaganda of the past, but should be encouraged to avail themselves primarily of those now in Government service who have resisted that propaganda and should be permitted to call others of like mind to their aid.

The system to be adopted must be as simple as the complexity of the problem permits. It must possess the maximum of elasticity compatible with existence of essential safeguards. Above all, it must be no temporary subterfuge but the candid crystallization of painful experience into permanent policy worthy of a great Nation.

Specifically, this committee makes the following recommendations:

The marine subsidy should be divided into a construction subsidy and an operating subsidy, later to be discussed in detail. The construction subsidy should be available to all American shipping operators engaged in foreign commerce upon the same terms, and no operating subsidy should be paid to a shipping operator whose business or interests are in the protected coastwise or intercoastal, or the semiprotected nearby foreign trades, except that subsidy should be available upon the same terms to all American operators in cases where substantial foreign competitors operate parallel services, even in cases where the American operator is in the semiprotected trade.

No subsidy should be paid to any ship operator or shipbuilder who fails to maintain a uniform system of bookkeeping to be prescribed by the agency administering the subsidy, or whose books, files, and records are not open to the inspection of the designated employees of this agency.

No operating subsidy should be paid to any ship operator who fails to comply with Government-required manning and wage scales and labor conditions, or to provide the most improved equipment and trained personnel for the preservation of safety at sea, or who operates, charters, acts as agent, or has any financial interest directly or indirectly in the operation of foreign-flag tonnage. A substantial portion of the operating subsidy is designed to be received by American seamen. The rate of pay of the American seaman is generally higher than that paid by foreign nations, but in view of the many benefits provided for foreign seamen, which are not received by American seamen, it is doubtful if the actual compensation received by the American seamen is greater than that received abroad. Most certainly every effort to bring about security and better conditions should be encouraged, and it is a primary duty to see that this portion of the subsidy reaches its intended beneficiaries, thus encouraging an all-American personnel, which is an essential element of a truly American merchant marine.

No subsidy should be paid for the benefit of any operator whose financial or corporate structure, in the opinion of the agency administering the subsidy, permits the diversion of the subsidy into activities other than bona fide American-flag foreign-trade shipping enterprises, except that such subsidy payments may be made upon terms and conditions prescribed by the agency administering the subsidy sufficient to protect the Government against such diversion, nor should any construction subsidy be paid to any shipbuilder whose activities are not confined to shipbuilding and ship repair.

No subsidy should be paid to any operator or shipbuilder who pays or causes to be received any officer, agent, or employee (which terms should be construed in the broadest sense to include, but not to be limited to, managing trustees or other agencies) wages, salaries, or compensation exceeding in amount or value the sum of $17,500 in any one year.

No subsidy should be paid to or for the benefit of any ship operator or shipbuilder whose private capital, in the opinion of the agency administering the subsidy, is insufficient to insure a reasonable likelihood of continuous successful operation with a fair amount of Government assistance, or which in the case of an operator is unwilling to provide for an adequate replacement program for its fleet.

The purpose of a construction subsidy is to increase the building of ships for foreign trade in American yards by equalizing the cost to American citizens of constructing them in American yards and placing them in operation on foreign trade routes with the cost of constructing the same ships in foreign yards and placing them in operation upon the same routes. The present system of construction loans should be abolished, but the ship operators should be free to borrow from governmental agencies (other than the United States Shipping Board, whose power to make loans should be abolished) upon equal terms and conditions with other private enterprise. The construction subsidy should equal in amount the difference between the cost of similar first-class construction in that foreign yard where construction by the operator is, in the opinion of the agency administering the subsidy, most economically practicable plus an amount equal to that required to place the vessel in operation at a point equal in advantage to that point where it will be placed in operation by an American yard without added cost to the operator and the reasonable cost of American construction. This amount should be paid directly by the Government to the shipbuilder. No such subsidy should be paid to any shipbuilder unless its wage scale is, in the opinion of the agency administering the subsidy, sufficiently high to equal the wage scale for similar services in foreign yards plus that portion of the subsidy properly allocable to shipbuilder's wages. In the judgment of your committee, it is impossible to prescribe the exact formula for the computation of foreign construction costs. This conclusion is borne out by the testimony of Alfred H. Haag, Chief of the Division of Shipping Research of the United States Shipping Board Bureau, before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives on May 6, 1935, when he stated that he knew of no method by which this cost could be determined. For accuracy and fairness in such computations it will be necessary to rely upon the initiative and integrity of the officials administering the subsidy program, whose calculations must, in great part, be based on what amounts to hearsay evidence.

Subsidy payments to the shipbuilders should be subject to recapture. When at the end of any calendar year the cumulative profits on the true investment exceed 6 percent per annum calculated from the enactment of the new subsidy program, 75 percent of profits exceeding 6 percent should be paid to the Government until subsidy payments theretofore made to the shipbuilder have been retired.

No vessel, the construction of which is subsidized, should be permitted to operate other than in foreign trade, except with the consent of the agency, and the agency should specifically be denied authority to consent to such operation until there shall have been repaid an amount which bears the same proportion to the construction subsidy theretofore paid as the remaining economic life of the vessel bears to its entire economic life.

No such vessel should be transferable to foreign registry except under similar terms and conditions and under no circumstances should any such vessel be so transferred unless provision be made for American construction and registry of tonnage of at least equal value to the American merchant marine.

The operating subsidy should equal the differential between the operating cost of the American operator and the operating cost of that substantial foreign competitor operating most cheaply in that service, foreign subsidy being taken into consideration. As in the case of construction differentials, your committee is of the firm opinion that it is, and always will be, utterly impossible for an agency of this Government to determine accurately the true operating costs of foreign ships owned and operated by foreign citizens whose records are maintained in foreign countries. In view of this fundamental precept, the operating subsidy should be subject to recapture and should be returned to the Government in the same manner as heretofore provided with respect to the construction subsidy.

There is considerable force in the theory that no profit other than compensation for personal services in the form of reasonable salaries should accrue to private individuals from activities aided by Government funds. In no event, however, can there be valid objection to a system (such as that herein set out) providing for the possibility of the return of the subsidy in whole or in part where cumulative profits make this possible. This percentage division of profits in excess of a cumulative average of 6 percent per annum will permit both the recapture of excess subsidy by the Government and the creation of reasonable reserves by the private operator.

No operating subsidy should be paid to any line operating in competition with an unsubsidized American-flag line rendering adequate service upon a foreign-trade route.

The subsidy program should not be administered by any existing governmental agency but by an entirely new, absolutely independent establishment. The administrative heads of the agency should be subject to removal by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, and their terms of office should not be so long as to preclude effective supervision by the Senate. It should not be necessary for this agency to concern itself with regulatory functions which should be exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This new agency should, in addition to administering the subsidy, assume all of the duties, other than regulatory, now vested in the United States Shipping Board Bureau and the Merchant Fleet Corporation of the Department of Commerce.

No person should be eligible for appointment to any executive or supervisory position in the agency administering the subsidy who has or has had within a period of 3 years prior to appointment any financial interest in any shipping, shipbuilding, or ship-repair company, its subsidiaries or affiliates, or in any business or concern deriving a substantial portion of its revenue from such sources, or who has, within 3 years prior to appointment, been employed by any such firm, person, company, or corporation aforesaid. The acquisition of any interest in any such business or the receipt of any gratuity or valuable thing from any such source should be ground for immediate dismissal of any officer or employee, and the acquisition of any such interest or the receipt of employment, compensation, gratuity, or valuable thing by any immediate relative of an employee should also be ground for dismissal, if, in the opinion of the appointing agency, such action is required in the public interest.

All existing mail contracts let under the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 should be terminated. The effective date of cancelation should permit a reasonable time within which adequate service can be provided under the new law. Within such reasonable period, to be provided by Congress, the holder of any ocean-mail contract should be entitled to adjust with the agency administering the subsidy all claims between the contractor and the Government growing out of its mail contract, excepting speculative or prospective future profits, and such settlement should be final.

If such settlement and adjustment is made, the company previously holding the mail contract should be eligible to apply for and to receive the benefits under the new act.

Any mail contractor failing so to settle its claims against the Government should be entitled to sue in the Court of Claims for just compensation.

In all suits so filed the Attorney General of the United States should be directed to seek damages in the full amount paid out under any contract which has been found by the Postmaster General to have been left without competitive bidding, and to urge all proper legal defenses and assert all just claims in all suits filed by mail contractors.

The Postmaster General should be further authorized to transmit ocean mail in the most expeditious manner possible and at existing poundage rates, giving a reasonable preference to American-flag vessels.

Before closing this report, your committee desires again to stress the necessity for immediate action by Congress. In his message of March 4, 1935, the President stated that:

"An American merchant marine is one of our most firmly established traditions. It was, during the first half of our national existence, a great and growing asset. Since then it has declined in value and importance. The time has come to square this traditional ideal with effective performance.

In the report of the Postmaster General, as well as the report of the Interdepartmental Committee on Shipping Policy, it is conclusively demonstrated that the present system is unsound, unsatisfactory, and cannot provide what the President rightly states the American Government owes to its people, that is, "ships in keeping with our national pride and national needs." Your committee is convinced of the immediate necessity of enacting laws which will provide such ships to serve the needs and justify the pride of the American people and to that end it urges instant action.

In the Senate's consideration of any proposed legislation, your committee specifically invites attention to the present appalling lack of resources in the shipping industry and presents the inescapable question as to whether this wholesome desire for upbuilding our merchant marine shall be fulfilled by an aggressive governmental program, or shall private interests be intrusted to bring about the desired results with money they do not now have, and which it is readily apparent they cannot secure except from governmental sources.

The conclusions and recommendations contained in this report are submitted for the sole purpose of making available to the representatives of the American people factual information vital to the efficient performance of their duty. Much of this information has hitherto been unavailable. Some of it has been carefully and effectively concealed. This report is submitted in the hope and with the desire that it may be of service in bringing about immediate, candid, and courageous congressional action, reasonably calculated to create and maintain an American merchant marine worthy of this Nation.

Respectfully submitted.

HUGO R. BLACK.
WILLIAM H. KING.
PAT MCCARRAN.

Senator KING approves the report with the following statement of exceptions:

Though I signed the foregoing report, it was with the understanding that I did not agree with all of the conclusions and recommendations.

I believe the report to contain a fair and accurate statement of the facts disclosed by the record.

I have not been in accord with the policies of the Government in granting subsidies and bounties to shipping interests, and insofar as the report approves of bounties or subsidies or the operation by the Government of a merchant marine I do not approve of the same.

If, however, bounties and subsidies are granted, then I believe that every possible safeguard for the protection of the Government and the taxpayer should be provided. The safeguards recommended in the report would fairly meet the requirements and should be embodied in any subsidy legislation.

The United States had for many years an adequate merchant marine which carried from 83 to 87 percent of our foreign commerce. Unwise legislation drove American ships from the seas and almost destroyed our merchant marine. In my opinion an American merchant marine can be developed and operated without bounties or subsidies.

The Democratic Party has upon a number of occasions denounced subsidies and some of the best thought of our country has believed that an adequate merchant marine was not only possible, but certain, if measures were enacted removing restrictive legislation destructive in its application. I cannot believe that with the genius, wealth, and commerce of the United States, bounties or subsidies are essential to the building and operation by private capital of a merchant marine.

Undoubtedly, if American citizens were not prevented from purchasing ships built in foreign countries and operating them under American registry and under the American flag, one of the obstacles to the realization of an effective merchant marine would be removed. The repeal of other statutes would aid in providing an effective and adequate merchant marine.

A sound and rational tariff policy would produce important results and materially aid in the establishment and maintenance of a merchant marine.

WILLIAM H. KING.

It is obvious that the committee which reported out this bill failed to either acquaint itself with the valuable data contained in the Senate report and the reports of the Postmaster General, or they were read and not considered very seriously.

The purpose of new legislation, however, is to better conditions, if possible, instead of converting a racket into a superracket. It is earnestly hoped that each Member will find time to read Senate Report No. 898 in detail, from which my quotations were taken; and also parts 1 and 2 of the Farley reports, which have so clearly called attention to the illegality of all except one of the existing contracts and the various forms of abuses that have arisen in the administering of these contracts. It is not believed that anyone could pass intelligently on new legislation until they have acquainted themselves with these reports.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, there are now nearly 400 bills on the Private Calendar, and many of the Members are quite anxious to have them considered. I feel that if the Members of the House desire to come here on Friday and consider just the unobjected-to individual bills on that calendar under the rule, that we might pass a large number of them on that day. For this reason, and at the request of a number of Members, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Friday next to consider only individual bills on the Private Calendar under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that request, if granted, would mean that on Friday, except those who have these bills and the few Members who investigate these private bills to stop the bad ones, all the balance of the Membership are discharged under present orders and may do what they please between now and Monday. They may catch up with the work of their districts and may catch up with their mail and office work. But it would penalize those Members who have to carefully study these bills on the Private Calendar and force them to use their time on these bills and would compel them to work in the House Friday. This is a week-end after a hard session. I have been working here continuously since last November.

Mr. TALYOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am merely submitting the request of a great many Members.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think all of us alike ought to have this week-end to catch up with our office work.

THIRD WORLD POWER CONFERENCE (H. DOC. NO. 240)

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted requesting the President to invite the World Power Conference to hold the Third World Power Conference in the United States in 1936 and 1937, and providing an appropriation of the sum of $75,000 for the necessary expenses of organizing and holding such a meeting.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OLIVER (at the request of Mr. HILL of Alabama), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. FERNANDEZ, for 2 weeks, on account of illness in family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Colorado what the program will be on Friday?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There will not be any program, as a matter of fact.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3012. An act to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Hopkins County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky; and

H. R. 6464. An act to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Friday, July 5, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

(Wednesday, July 3, 10:30 a. m.)

Committee will hold hearings on various bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

402. A letter from the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting its twenty-first annual report, covering operations during the calendar year 1934 (H. Doc. No. 27); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

403. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting copies of the fifty-second supplement, General Rules and Regulations Prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, and also copies of the fifty-first supplement, covering the new boiler rules; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

404. A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting three copies of the domestic and residential electric energy rates in the State of West Virginia on January 1, 1935; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. McREYNOLDS: Committee on Foreign Affairs. Senate Joint Resolution 139. Joint resolution requesting the President to extend to the International Statistical Institute an invitation to hold its twenty-fourth session in the United States in 1939; with amendment (Rept. No. 1415). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8577. A bill to amend the Teachers' Salary Act of the District of Columbia, approved June 4, 1924, as amended, in relation to raising the trade or vocational schools to the level of junior high schools, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1417). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee of the District of Columbia. H. R. 8078. A bill to repeal sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act approved February 3, 1909; with amendment (Rept. No. 1418). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8579. A bill to amend the law with respect to jury trials in the police court of the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1419). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8580. A bill to amend the law with respect to the time for jury service in the police court of the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1420). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8581. A bill to amend the law providing for exemptions from jury service in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1421). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8582. A bill to provide for the semiannual inspection of all motor vehicles in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1422). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PALMISANO: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 395. An act relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia; with amendment (Rept. No. 1423). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mrs. NORTON: Committee on the District of Columbia. H. R. 8583. A bill to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia in relation to the qualifications of jurors; without amendment (Rept. No. 1424). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 6740. A bill to amend an act approved December 17, 1928, entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment thereon in claims which the Winnebago Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes"; with amendment (Rept. No. 1425). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. House Joint Resolution 330. Joint resolution to close Military Road temporarily; with amendment (Rept. No. 1428). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. H. R. 8750. A bill for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1426). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee on Claims. S. 2488. An act for the relief of the widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation, Department of Justice, and operative in the Secret Service Division, Department of the Treasury, killed in line of duty; without amendment (Rept. No. 1427). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLOOM: A bill (H. R. 8749) to increase the limit of cost for the Department of Agriculture Extensible Building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PATMAN: Resolution (H. Res. 284) to amend House Resolution 226; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 8750) for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHURCH: A bill (H. R. 8751) to provide a preliminary examination of the Fox River and its tributaries in Wisconsin and Illinois; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 8752) granting a pension to Clarence Edgar Stephens; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9060. By Mr. COLDEN: Resolution of the Allied Automotive Industries of California, Ltd., by A. Brandhofer, executive secretary, in regard to unfair trade practices, reduction of employees' salaries, etc., in the automotive maintenance and garage industry in California, due to the loss of its National Recovery Administration Code and the Motor Vehicle Maintenance Code No. 543; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9061. By Mr. DOBBINS: Petition of J. R. Hefner and 49 other citizens of Monticello, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9062. Also, petition of E. E. Logan and 30 other citizens of Bement, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9063. Also, petition of J. A. McNally and 546 other citizens of Decatur, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9064. Also, petition of William V. Hains and 15 other citizens of Blue Mound, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9065. By Mr. DORSEY: Petition of the Shakahappo Tribe, No. 138, of the Improved Order of Red Men of Pennsylvania, endorsing the proposals of the Dies joint resolution (H. J. Res. 69); to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

9066. By Mr. FENERTY: Petition of the Poutaxet Tribe, No. 145, Improved Order of Red Men of Pennsylvania, located in the city of Philadelphia, urging passage of House Joint Resolution 69; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

9067. Also, petition of the Tongwee Tribe, No. 322, Improved Order of Red Men of Pennsylvania, located in the city of Philadelphia, urging passage of House Joint Resolution 69; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

9068. Also, petitions from sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging passage of House Joint Resolution 193, directing the President to name July 9 of this year Commodore John Barry Memorial Day, and authorizing the Postmaster General to issue a series of postage stamps; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

9069. By Mr. FORD of California: Resolution of the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, urging the President and the Congress to enact legislation proposed by House bill 6984, providing benefits to persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the Quartermaster General during certain wars; to the Committee on Pensions.

9070. By Mr. HALLECK: Petition of citizens of Lafayette, Ind., favoring Senate bill 1629, for the regulation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce, as it was passed by the Senate; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9071. Also, petition of citizens of Buck Creek, Ind., favoring Senate bill 1629, for the regulation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce, as it was passed by the Senate; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9072. By Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: Petition signed by about 725 employees of the Ohio Match Co., of Wadsworth, Ohio, and citizens of the State of Ohio, urging that every effort be made to prevent any further influx of foreign matches into the markets of the United States by increasing the duty on matches from 20 to 40 cents per gross; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9073. By Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: Memorial of the General Court of Massachusetts, urging the Federal Government to grant funds for removing elevated railway structures in the city of Boston; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9074. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Railroad Employees Pension Association, urging immediate action on Senate bill 2826 and House bills 8371 and 8121; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9075. Also, petition of the Midwest Conservation Alliance, to close the season on migratory waterfowl for 1 year beginning September 1935, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, July 2, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Lewis	Pope
Ashurst	Coolidge	Logan	Radcliffe
Bachman	Copeland	Lonergan	Reynolds
Bankhead	Dickinson	Long	Robinson
Barbour	Dieterich	McAdoo	Schall
Barkley	Donahey	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Duffy	McGill	Sheppard
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	George	McNary	Smith
Borah	Gibson	Maloney	Steiwer
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gore	Minton	Trammell
Bulow	Guffey	Moore	Truman
Burke	Hale	Murphy	Tydings
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	Norbeck	Walsh
Caraway	Holt	Norris	Wheeler
Carey	Johnson	O'Mahoney	White
Chavez	Keyes	Overton
Clark	King	Pittman

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are detained from the Senate on important public business. I request that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is absent on account of illness, and that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are necessarily detained from the Senate. I request that this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PAY OF SPECIAL ASSISTANT ATTORNEYS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the names of persons employed under the appropriation, "Pay of special assistant attorneys, United States courts", with the rates of compensation or fees paid for the period from January 1, 1935, to June 30, 1935, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 754) to amend section 21 of the act approved June 5, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property required thereunder, and for other purposes", as applied to the Virgin Islands of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1010) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) providing for participation by the United States in the Pan American Exposition to be held in Tampa, Fla., in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the landing of Hernando De Soto in Tampa Bay, and to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at such exposition to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1014) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1011) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1991) for the relief of Wilson G. Bingham, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1012) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2734) to confer jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of Henry W. Bibus, Annie Ulrick, Samuel Henry, Charles W. Hensor, Headley Woolston, John Henry, estate of Harry B. C. Margerum, and George H. Custer, of Falls Township and borough of Tullytown, Buck County, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1013) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7050) to amend the act of June 27, 1930 (ch. 634, 46 Stat. 820), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1015) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2523) authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1016) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2849) to provide funds for cooperation with Wellpinit School District No. 49, Stevens County, Wash., for the construction of a public-school building to be available for Indian children of the Spokane Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1017) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 2d instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1958. An act to diminish the causes of labor disputes burdening or obstructing interstate and foreign commerce, to create a National Labor Relations Board, and for other purposes;

S. 2074. An act to create a National Park Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes; and

S. 2642. An act to incorporate The American National Theater and Academy.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 3202) granting an annuity to George J. Kleffner; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3203) granting a pension to Dorothy King; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORBECK and Mr. BULOW:

A bill (S. 3204) to provide additional funds for the completion of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 3205) to provide for the retirement of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CLARK:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) establishing a commission to be known as the "United States Commission for the Celebration of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Mark Twain" (Samuel L. Clemens); to the Committee on the Library.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the river and harbor bill, being the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, may be printed showing the Senate amendments numbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECALL OF UNITED STATES SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES (S. DOC. NO. 108)

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a brief on the constitutionality of the recall of United States Senators and Representatives in Congress, prepared by Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE, Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, United States Senate. It is a matter which is of general interest to Senators and Representatives. I also ask that the brief be printed as a Senate document.

There being no objection, the brief was ordered to be printed as a Senate document and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE RECALL OF UNITED STATES SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS

For the reasons hereinafter specified, any attempt by a State to recall a United States Senator is repugnant to the Federal Constitution and is therefore void and of no effect.

There are three questions to be answered:

First. Can a State declare a vacancy to exist in the United States Senate prior to the expiration of the term of the incumbent?

Second. Can a State hold a special election to elect a United States Senator when no vacancy exists?

Third. Can a State set up qualifications for United States Senators in addition to the qualifications outlined in the Constitution?

The first and second questions can be answered jointly. Article I, section 4, clause I, of the Federal Constitution provides that the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators. The times for holding regular elections for Senators and Representatives has been prescribed by Congress (title 2, U. S. C., secs. 1 and 7), and has the effect of superseding any State statutes inconsistent therewith. It therefore follows that the States are precluded from fixing a different time for the regular election of a Senator or Representative (Ex parte Siebold (Md. 1880) (100 U. S. 383)).

Article XVII of the Federal Constitution provides that when vacancies occur in the Senate the executive authority of the State may issue writs of election to fill such vacancies, and the legislature of the State may empower the executive to make a temporary appointment until such vacancy is filled by election.

The Governor of a State derives his authority to make an appointment to fill a vacancy in the United States Senate solely from the Federal Constitution and a law enacted by the legislature of his State pursuant to the Constitution. This power is conferred upon the Governor so that he may exercise his own best judgment as to whom he will select to fill such a vacancy until the people may express their choice at a subsequent election. No State can by law in any manner limit the choice which a governor may make in such an event. He is limited only by the Federal Constitution which requires that the person whom he appoints shall be at least 30 years of age, an American citizen for at least 9 years, and a resident of the State. Any such attempt further to limit the Governor's complete freedom of choice is vain and wholly without force.

Twelve States have laws which provide for the recall of State and local officials but it is unnecessary to comment thereon except to say, generally, that under this procedure the official against whom a recall petition may be properly filed is given an opportunity to resign. The usual requirement is that such petition must be signed by 25 percent of the qualified electors. If he refuses to resign, a special election is held to determine by majority vote whether the official shall be removed from office by the election of a rival candidate.

The application of this State recall system to the office of United States Senator would be an attempt by a State to fill a vacancy in the United States Senate before a vacancy exists therein and cannot be justified under either article I, section 4, of the Federal Constitution (relating to the time of holding regular elections) or under article XVII of such Constitution, which provides for a special election only when an actual vacancy exists.

No authority can be found under any other provision of the Federal Constitution for such special election. On the contrary, the result attempted to be achieved by such special recall election is in direct conflict with article I, section 5, clause 2 of such Constitution, which provides that each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a Member.

Under the guise of a recall election the State would attempt to expel a Member of the Senate and thereby usurp a power vested exclusively in the Senate by the Constitution. In Burton v. U. S. (202 U. S. 344, at p. 369) the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Harlan, stated that the seat into which a Senator is originally inducted can only become vacant by his death, by expiration of his term of office, or by some direct action on the part of the Senate in the exercise of its constitutional powers.

It therefore follows that if a vacancy does not exist, a State cannot create one, and a special election called to fill a nonexistent vacancy must necessarily be futile and without effect.

Answering the third question, in 1856 the Senate decided that a State might not add to the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution for a Senator. In the Lyman-Trumbull case a provision of the Constitution of the State of Illinois provided that certain judges of that State should not be eligible to any other office of the State or of the United States during the term for which they were elected, nor for 1 year thereafter. Mr. Trumbull had been a judge and came within the prohibitions of the State constitution. Notwithstanding that fact, the Senate, after lengthy debate, by a vote of 35 yeas, 8 nays, declared Mr. Trumbull was entitled to his seat (Hinds' Precedents, vol. I, p. 387, sec. 416).

Article XVII of the Federal Constitution provides that the terms of Senators shall be for 6 years. If a State may recall a Senator elected for a term of 6 years, and before such term has expired, a further qualification has been added for Members of the Senate from that State. The recall law would provide, in effect, that a Member of the Senate may hold office for 6 years, but only at the will of the people of the State. The State is not only attempting to set up an additional qualification for Senators but is also attempting to be the judge of such qualification in contravention to article I, section 5, clause I, of the Federal Constitution, which provides that each House shall be the judge of the qualifications of its own Members.

Furthermore, the historical background of the 6-year term shows conclusively that Senators were to be chosen "to hold their office for a term sufficient to insure their independence." During the Constitutional Conventions held at Philadelphia and elsewhere prior to the ratification of the Constitution by the States, the terms of Senators were debated at great length. Terms ranging from 2 years to life were proposed. Madison reminded the delegates that the Senate was designed to protect the people against themselves as well as against their rulers—against their hasty and ill-advised decisions—a purpose more likely to be secured if its Members were given long terms and so gained experience. (See the Records of the Federal Convention, Farrand, vol. I, p. 228; Elliot's Debates on the Federal Constitution, vol. V, pp. 186–187, 241–245; and "the Madison Papers", vol. 2, p. 962.)

The recall law of any State is not in harmony with the reasons that led to the adoption of the 6-year term as such a law operates not to insure independence of thought and action but to restrict such thought and action by leaving Senators at the mercy of organized minorities and by leaving their tenure in office uncertain at all times.

If the independence of Members of the Senate is desired to be restricted, such restriction must necessarily take the form of an amendment to the Federal Constitution. No State can impose upon its Senators any restriction which is not applicable to Senators from all other States.

Any attempt to recall a Member of the House of Representatives must fail for the reasons above stated. A recall election is in effect nothing more or less than a petition by the ballots of a certain number of voters requesting the Senator or Representative against whom the recall is directed to resign his seat in Congress. There is no lawful way to compel such a resignation, which must be purely voluntary. If the Senator or Representative should resign nothing that has occurred prior to his resignation can be of any force or effect in bringing about the election of his successor in office.

A Senator or Representative has a right to resign his seat. When he does so the Federal law alone prescribes how the vacancy may be filled. In the case of a Representative in Congress, the Governor has no power under the Federal Constitution to fill a vacancy by appointment. All that the Governor can do is to call a special election, or, by declining to do so, leave the congressional district without representation until after the next general election.

That a State may not superadd or vary the qualifications prescribed to the Senator or Representative by the Federal Constitution is clearly set forth in the following extract from Story on the Constitution (sec. 627):

"The truth is that the States can exercise no powers whatsoever which exclusively spring out of the existence of the National Government, which the Constitution does not delegate to them. They have just as much right, and no more, to prescribe new qualifications for a Representative as they have for a President. Each is an officer of the Union, deriving his powers and qualifications from the Constitution, and neither created by or dependent upon nor controllable by the States. It is no original prerogative of State power to appoint a Representative, a Senator, or President for the Union. Those officers owe their existence and functions to the united voice of the whole, not a portion of the people. Before a State can assert the right it must show that the Constitution has delegated and recognized it. No State can say that it has reserved what it never possessed."

In conclusion, a recall election held by any State in an attempt to remove from office a United States Senator, a Representative in Congress, or any Federal official serving within such State is void and of no effect. No State can impair the supremacy of the Federal Government by in any manner interrupting the tenure of office of any person serving under Federal authority.

WALTER F. GEORGE,
Chairman Committee on Privileges and Elections,
United States Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LOBBYING ACTIVITIES IN CONNECTION WITH HOLDING-COMPANY BILL

Mr. WHEELER. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 165, submitted yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], providing for the appointment of a special committee of five Senators by the President of the Senate, such committee to be authorized and directed to hold a complete investigation of lobbying activities in connection with the so-called "holding-company bill." I presume the resolution will have to be referred now to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at this point I wish to seek information, and I ask the Senator from Alabama whether the resolution contemplates an inquiry as to matters of the House as well as of the Senate? Is it intended to extend to all the suggestions of lobbying in the House, or is it limited to the Senate?

Mr. BLACK. It is intended to apply to any efforts which have been made to influence legislation relating to the so-called "holding-company bill", wherever they may have been made. Frankly, I submitted the resolution with the idea that there should be a full, fair, and complete investigation.

Mr. LEWIS. I am anxious to know if the Senator from Alabama submitted the resolution upon the theory that Members of this honorable body have been approached by those called "lobbyists", and whether it was as to them the Senator was seeking investigation?

Mr. BLACK. I was seeking investigation, I may say to the Senator, on the basis that charges have been publicly made that a large amount of money has been spent in order to influence the proposed legislation; that a large amount of money has been spent in order to prevent the passage of the holding-company bill; that the charges have been widespread that lobbyists have filled the galleries of both the Senate and the House; that they have come here from all over the United States; and that they have worked, in some cases, effectively to accomplish their purposes. It is my judgment that, if an investigation is to be held of these lobbying activities, it should be an investigation prompted by the idea that we must investigate everything that pertains to the proposed legislation, and to do it fully and fairly. Frankly, I think it should come from sources that want a full, fair, and complete investigation of the matter.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Alabama assumes this resolution to be all-embracing rather than being addressed to individual Members of the Senate or of the House?

Mr. BLACK. I intended it to be all-embracing, and for that reason it is my opinion that it is utter folly to discuss making an investigation without an appropriation. If there is going to be an investigation it should be a real investigation, and should not be a mere superficial scratching of the surface because somebody says that somebody else told him that some one else said so-and-so would happen if he did or did not act in a certain way. I have submitted a resolution which provides a substantial appropriation with the idea that if there is to be an investigation it shall be full, fair, and complete, extending all over the Nation, to find out what has been done and whether or not money has been spent to influence legislation, and, if so, how and by whom and in what amount.

Mr. LEWIS. Since such is the Senator's purpose, would it not be prudent, possibly profitable, to have the resolution adopted at once, and then take such course as reference to the Committee on Appropriations as may be necessary? Is it important that the resolution be disposed of early?

Mr. BLACK. If I thought it could be done, I should make the request. It is my understanding, however—and I ask the Chair—that the rules provide that such a resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and that that rule cannot be waived.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama states the situation correctly. Under the rule of the Senate the resolution has to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. We might anticipate their action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state again, as he has often stated, that the Senate can do anything by unanimous consent except to amend the Constitution. If Senators want to adopt the resolution by unanimous consent they may do it, because that would be waiving the rule requiring reference of the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. LONG. It is not a rule. It is a statute.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hesitate to disagree with the Chair, but it is not a rule. It is a statute. I do not believe that by unanimous consent we can waive such statutory regulation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair say to the Senator from Oregon—and the Chair is sure he will agree—that if the Senate should by unanimous consent adopt the resolution, the test would come when the Committee to Audit and Control should be called upon to approve the vouchers.

Mr. McNARY. Oh, yes; but I still say that, in my judgment, we could not act upon the resolution without first referring it to the Committee to Audit and Control.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it could be done by unanimous consent. In any event, however, the resolution has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control.

DOES THE POT CALL THE KETTLE BLACK?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has submitted some observations, in his presence I wish to make a brief remark about the resolution which he has introduced. I was in the Committee on Interstate Commerce this morning and I voted to report the resolution back to the Senate and to have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which, of course, meant a favorable report.

I have noticed that in the House an investigation has been started on the other end of the line, to investigate what influences have been used, first, in order to pass the holding-company bill and then also what has been done to defeat the holding-company bill.

Mr. President, I do not believe Senators ever have paused very long to consider what we are doing in connection with this legislation, or we would be probably a little bit more charitable with ourselves, and some of us might come to wonder if we have been exactly honest in our convictions with reference to this legislation. The bill was founded upon our party politics and our platform pledge for the regulation of holding companies. I call it regulation broad enough to include destroying the evil holding company. I think, like the taxing power, that the power to regulate in many cases includes the power to destroy. This bill is neither a bill to regulate where holding companies should be regulated nor a bill to destroy where they should be destroyed.

I was called upon by some very good friends I have in the House who brought to my mind the great fight which has been made in this country against food monopoly and the holding companies which have such control over foodstuffs. Also, as I mentioned on the floor of the Senate the other day, I was reminded of the status of the oil monopoly and the status of various marketing monopolies. Many people are unable to understand us, because if there is not a great principle at stake in this bill how is it that our platform singled out no particular enterprise and that the President's message singled out no particular enterprise? If there is any great issue between right and wrong, the people cannot understand why it is that we are indulging in a great harangue against the one singled-out particular industry and leaving the balance immune.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator spoke about food monopolies. Let me say that, as he will recall, as Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee I submitted a resolution which was adopted by the Senate and is now pending in the House before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of that body, requesting the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the food monopoly and the processors of food products.

Mr. LONG. I know the Senator from Montana and I think exactly alike on this matter. If the Senator from Montana and I should undertake to write a law we would not have the slightest difference of opinion about it. I know we would write a law covering all monopolistic holding companies which are in themselves, in my opinion, practicers of evil.

I had considerable difficulty in reconciling in my own mind the fight for this principle when we take such devious steps as that we take razor blades and save for the future every other evil except one connected with the electrical business. In other words, we were so careful in this broad and great principle—I was not, but I mean as a whole our committee and the Senate were—that we undertook, in tackling this gigantic, mammoth fraud, to peel off of it, and to preserve from the effect of the legislation, anything and everything except the electrical companies.

What is our excuse today for raising this hubbub that we have heard so much about? The oil companies, which are far more effective in the life and affairs of the country than the electrical companies could be, because there are thousands of people who are not affected by the provisions of this bill, are left untouched.

What is the excuse? The excuse stated on the floor of the Senate was that we are not strong enough to battle against all of these concerns in one bill; that if we came here with a bill carrying out the party platform pledge for regulating or destroying all of these nefarious influences, because there is no ground for excluding one and including another, we could not get our own selves to vote for a bill which would attack this cancer in an expansive and honorable way.

When we went to the House with this bill something else happened, but something had happened in the Senate as well. We put on the bill as an amendment a provision including the gas interests more broadly than they were at first covered in the report submitted by the Interstate Commerce Committee. Through the influence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and myself, with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] being very willing—and what I would call a very willing witness to having it done—we wrote into the bill a provision covering the gas-distributing lines in a broader sense. That was not anticipated, and, if I may state what came to my ears, not particularly in confidence—and I would believe that I should not undertake to find out particularly the source whence it came—it had been understood that we would leave out the gas companies if the gas companies would not lend any effort to prevent the electrical holding companies from being broken up by law.

In other words, we made government a matter of favoritism. This matter of favoritism is the great fault with our Government today. Every other government has to fight it. We make this great principle one of favoritism, one of immunity. We picked out all the culprits except one and made them State witnesses. We gave them all the right to go free provided they would help us convict the one. From the experience I have had, I am not so sure that we picked the most culpable one to convict, and in letting the whole barnyard go free I am not so sure that we did a good thing or an honorable thing.

It hurt my heart in the committee. I went to the Interstate Commerce Committee at one time. I think the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] knows that I have quite a regard for his position. When the names of La Follette and Wheeler could not even be gotten on the ballot in Louisiana, I was one of the few candidates for public office in that State who dared to express confidence in the Senator from Montana. I had great faith and confidence in him, knowing that the Senator from Montana at one time had run on a platform advocating public ownership of public utilities. I am not so sure that that is not going to be the final course Congress is going to have to take. I would rather have it today than what we have. I saw the Senate do an act here yesterday which convinced me that we are destroying one effort at regulation with another effort to do something that is contrary to the regulation. But I went before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I said to the chairman, and I said to the committee—I think perhaps my friend the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] was there that day; not so very many of us were there—I said:

> I want to know what this bill is going to do. Are we going to come here with a holding-company bill that is going to undertake to carry out the promise of the party to the country while excluding everybody except the electrical companies? I want to urge that the committee meet this issue while it can and while it should. I think this bill should either regulate or destroy, or both, holding companies as a general proposition, because—no one can point out to me any more reason for singling out electrical companies than they can point out to me for singling out oil companies, or food companies, or shipping companies in this country.

And I make this statement again—

Mr. President, a resolution now is offered here to investigate, to see what influences have been used regarding holding-company legislation. I am not so sure but that we ought to have done some investigating along this line. I did not ask for any evidence of a prima facie case on the resolution of the Senator from Alabama. There was not any evidence before us this morning, but I was willing to vote for the investigation. How unlike the Farley case was our action this morning! How different it has been! We have made fish out of one and flesh out of the other. How different it was this morning, when we belched forth a recommendation for $150,000 without a witness, without a line, without a showing, notwithstanding the fact that with affidavits galore we went on record a few days before as declining to investigate matters probably of equal importance.

However, Mr. President, if this resolution shall be reported favorably by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and if the President of the Senate shall appoint a committee—as he will under this resolution, if the committee shall see fit to spend $150,000—I hope we shall not consider this as a one-way proposition. Sometimes there is such a thing as getting beaten at your own game. If we investigate this matter I hope we shall try to find out what has happened, because the resolution is broad enough, and that is the only basis upon which this investigation can be justified. Did not the holding-company bill, when it got back to the House of Representatives, find there cohorts who had been brought into the opposition by reason of the fact that because there was an amendment to the bill which brought the gas companies into it, certain administration stalwarts became quite recalcitrant when the bill reached there?

We ought to investigate the inside of our own house. Why, for what reason, were the floor leader of the House, Mr. O'CONNOR, and the other gentleman—I have forgotten his name—so disinterested when the bill reached the House that they did not even vote? Why? There was nobody here in the Senate who failed to record himself one way or the other. Why, over there, was there any such disinterestedness that the floor leader did not even vote, and the man next to him——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am compelled to make the point of order against the Senator from Louisiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to call the Senator's attention to the rule.

Mr. LONG. In what respect?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not competent for a Senator to make references to the other body.

Mr. LONG. I have heard that point mentioned here, but I have never been able to find the rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. It is the rule of the House and the rule of the Senate, and has been for more than a hundred years; and let the Chair say to the Senator from Louisiana that it is very well founded upon the theory that if Members of the House or the Senate were to make remarks about the other House, or its Membership, it would not be conducive to their working together for the best possible legislation.

Mr. LONG. Well, that has not been the case in the other House in regard to me. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. That, of course, is a matter for the other House to consider.

Mr. LONG. I shall not quibble about the matter. I can stay within the rule which the Senator from Arkansas thinks ought to be invoked. I hope it will not be taken as a reflection; but I am making, I think, probably more of a defense——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will permit the Chair to make a suggestion, he can say that there is some other body in which a certain thing occurred, and he can discuss that body, whatever it may be—the Legislature of Pennsylvania or the Legislature of Louisiana, or any other body.

Mr. LONG. I shall not even do that. I shall stay within the spirit as well as within the technical letter of the rule. But was our administration entirely pleased with the form the bill finally took? If I may use the words of the Chair, why should another department of our Government, some other body, find its leaders, men upon whom we rely to carry the alabaster vase to a point where it is to be effective, deserting the cause in its hour of need, if it is a good cause? Why should they have deserted it?

Now I wish to say just a word in defense of men of that kind. In the words of the Senate, they have pretty good ground to do it. A friend of mine from Louisiana, a gentleman whom I respect very highly, an honest, honorable, upright man, came to me in the cloakroom and said, "I am not going to vote for this provision in the bill, and I will tell you why I do not think I can do it. The chain stores are taking away all the business that has been done by my friends in the city of New Orleans. There is one of them on every corner, and every time we try to reach the food monopoly and the devious practices to which they have resorted we find that there is always another kind of company to be affected but not the chain stores. When we reach that company there is always another company, to a point where they have managed to wreck every independent competitor they have in my city." He said, "That is one reason." Then he said, "Next, with all the fight you have been making all these years against the Oil Trust, all the fight you have made since 1918, and all the opinions and decisions you wrote against the Oil Trust, why is it that you made no effort, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, to see that the oil companies were kept in the bill, when they have inflicted more distress upon our State, as a result of these holding combinations, than anything else? Why is it that you did nothing to see that those monopolies were kept in the bill?"

I want some Senator to tell me what my answer should have been to that representative. What honest answer could I have made to him? And what could I have said to a man who said to me, "Where are these leaders? Where are these leaders who are opposing this measure? Why have they not just grounds? These are my grounds. They may see the matter as I see it."

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended to speak. I intended to make only a few remarks, but I have brought myself to this point, which I must mention before I close:

It is well that we should investigate, I say to my friend from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], whatever influences have been brought to bear to keep the Congress from acting as Congressmen would act if there were no such influences. It is well that we should cleanse the Augean stables to see that this independent branch of the Government operates without the iniquitous influences which change men's minds on issues and cause them to do other than they would do without such outside iniquity, if it may be so termed. It is only fair and right that we should do that; but let us not make our investigation one-sided.

It is stated in the public press that power lobbies came here representing both sides. I do not doubt it. If I had owned a power line I would have been here. If I had a dime's worth of interest in one of those companies I would have been here, I would have done everything I could to keep the bill from being passed, and I would have had a right to do it. Probably it is a matter of degrees as to when the use of influence becomes something that is contrary to good government. That is something which the lawmakers have to determine.

Is it not a matter for which the Congress should concern itself when a man is told that a Government project in his State will not be built if his vote is one way but will be built if it is another way? Is it not a matter to attract the attention of Congress when it is broadcast in the public press that a certain man has been dehorned of patronage, that this Representative has had this done to him, that this Senator has had this done to him, because he did not vote a certain way?

I want my friends to think a moment. Which is the worse? Is it worse for one who has no connection with Government to use these outside influences in order that he may control the minds and consciences of men, or is it worse that one supposed to maintain the great and pure principles about which we hear should depart from his own understanding of them in order that he may bring to pass what he desires by exerting iniquitous influence on some public official?

Is it not time to investigate, is it not time to find out whether Congress legislates under the fear of punishment or hope of reward, as we hear it said and as it is publicly printed? Is it not time to find out whether or not Congress operates as a matter of favoritism, those whom the administration considers best not to attack being excluded, and those being included whom it considers itself strong enough to defeat?

When the lawmaking body says, "We cannot tackle this company; it is too big. We cannot tackle the food monopoly; it is too big. We cannot tackle the market monopoly; it is too big. We will tackle only an interest that is so small that we are able to whip it"; that is the same as saying that Congress attacks those only who in size and importance have not attained a character of strength which makes battling more difficult. It is the same as saying, "We battle against the weak; we never battle against the strong." It is the same as saying, "Law is intended for the one, but it is not intended for the other." It is the same as saying that justice depends on who you are, how big you may be, and how strong you may be.

Mr. President, if these principles and these pure and idealistic motives inspiring my good friend the Senator from Alabama have their good and their complete application, then let us not make fish of one and fowl of the other. Let us search our own hearts. Let us investigate quietly, without any appropriation by the Congress, among ourselves, and find out why it is that in this legislation we have been afraid to go the full route and destroy the evil that exists, the evil we all recognize to exist, in all these holding enterprises. It is no time to have a wrangle that the pot may call the kettle black.

REGULATION OF TRANSPORTATION BY WATER

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1632) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the first committee amendment was agreed to yesterday. I ask unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendments be considered and disposed of before action on other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Declaration of policy, delegation of jurisdiction, and repeal", on page 2, in line 6, after the word "and", to strike out "maintain" and insert "foster"; in line 8, after the word "carriers", to insert "in the public interest"; in line 9, before the word "adequate", to strike out "provide" and insert "promote"; in the same line, after the word "efficient", to strike out "transportation"; in line 10, after the word "carriers", to insert "and reasonable charges therefor, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, and unfair or destructive competitive practices"; in line 13, after the word "between", to strike out "such" and insert "and coordinate transportation by and regulation of, water"; in line 15, after the word "other", to strike out "agencies of transportation" and insert "carriers"; in line 17, before the word "and" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "coordinate transportation by water carriers and such other agencies and the regulation thereof"; in the same line, after the word "and" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "foster" and insert "develop"; in the same line, after the word "preserve", to strike out the comma and "in the public interest,"; in line 18, before the word "transportation", to insert "system of"; and in the same line, before the word "properly", to strike out "system" and insert "by water", so as to read:

SEC. 302. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to regulate transportation by water carriers in such manner as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of, and foster sound economic conditions in, such transportation and among such carriers in the public interest; promote adequate, economical, and efficient service by water carriers and reasonable charges therefor, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, and unfair or destructive competitive practices; improve the relations between, and coordinate transportation by and regulation of, water carriers and other carriers; and develop and preserve a system of transportation by water properly adapted to the needs of the commerce of the United States and of the national defense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it was my understanding yesterday that the Senator from Montana this morning would occupy an hour or more in explanation of the provisions of the bill. I think we all relied upon the understanding. Very few of us are familiar with the bill. I think we would be better enabled to act upon the amendments if an explanation and statement were had beforehand, and I ask the Senator to make his statement, in conformity with the agreement of yesterday afternoon.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, permit me to say to the Senator from Oregon that the amendments now being acted on are amendments to strike from the bill certain provisions, and I thought it would simplify the matter if we should act upon them and then I could make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 21, after the word "part", to insert "shall"; in line 23, after the word "interstate", to strike out "or" and insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "commerce", to insert "to the extent herein provided"; in line 24, after the word "such", to strike out "commerce" and insert "transportation"; in line 25, after the words "Interstate Commerce", to strike out "Commission to the extent herein provided. The Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, sections 1, 14, 14a, 15–25, and 27–33, inclusive, of the Shipping Act, 1916, and section 19 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920 are hereby repealed" and insert "Commission: Provided, That it is hereby expressly declared to be the policy of Congress to exclude from the provisions of this part transportation by interstate contract carriers by water which, by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirements of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by interstate common carriers by water in the same trade or route; and that the Commission shall proceed immediately to determine the transportation so to be excluded, and shall from time to time make such modifications of its findings as may be necessary to carry out the policy so declared: Provided further, That unless and to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find such application necessary to carry out the policy of Congress declared in section 302 (a), such provisions shall not apply to transportation by water in interstate commerce solely within the limits of a single harbor or between places in contiguous harbors, when such transportation is not a part of a continuous through movement under a common control, management, or arrangement, to or from a place without the limits of any such harbor or harbors, or to transportation by ferry or by small craft of not more than 50 tons carrying capacity or to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers", so as to read:

(b) The provisions of this part shall apply to the transportation of passengers or property by water in interstate and foreign commerce to the extent herein provided and the regulation of such transportation is hereby vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission: Provided, That it is hereby expressly declared to be the policy of Congress to exclude from the provisions of this part transportation by interstate contract carriers by water which, by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirement of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by interstate common carriers by water in the same trade or route; and that the Commission shall proceed immediately to determine the transportation so to be excluded, and shall from time to time make such modification of its findings as may be necessary to carry out the policy so declared: Provided further, That unless and to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find such application necessary to carry out the policy of Congress declared in section 302 (a), such provisions shall not apply to transportation by water in interstate commerce solely within the limits of a single harbor or between places in contiguous harbors, when such transportation is not a part of a continuous through movement under a common control, management, or arrangement, to or from a place without the limits of any such harbor or harbors, or to transportation by ferry or by small craft of not more than 50 tons carrying capacity or to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 3, to strike out:

(c) Nothing in this part shall be construed to diminish any power or duty of the Commission under part I of this act with respect to water carriers and no part of said part I applicable to water carriers shall be construed as repealed or modified by anything in this part, except when and to the extent inconsistent herewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 9, to strike out:

(d) Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect any law of navigation, the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, liabilities of vessels and their owners for loss or damage, or laws respecting seamen, or any other statute or maritime laws, regulation, or custom not in conflict with the provisions of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 17, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "203" and insert "303"; in line 19, after the words "joint stock", to strike out "company" and insert "association"; and at the end of line 19, to strike out "or body politic" and insert "and any trustee, receiver, assignee, or personal representative thereof", so as to read:

SEC. 303. (a) The term "person" includes any individual, firm, copartnership, corporation, company, association, joint stock association, and any trustee, receiver, assignee, or personal representative thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 25, after the word "common", to strike out "carrier," and insert "carrier by water or"; on page 5, line 1, after the word "contract", to strike out "carrier, or otherwise" and insert "carrier by water"; in line 2, after the word "property", to strike out "by water"; in the same line, after the word "interstate", to strike out "or foreign commerce" and to insert "commerce, as a common carrier by water transports passengers or property in foreign commerce", so as to read:

(b) The term Commission means the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(c) The term water carrier means any person who or which, whether as a common carrier by water or a contract carrier by water, transports passengers or property in interstate commerce, or as a common carrier by water transports passengers or property in foreign commerce and is not included in the term "railroad" by section 1 (3) of part I.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, after the words "part I", to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That unless and to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find such application necessary to carry out the policy of Congress declared in section 202 [302] (a), the provisions of this part shall not apply (1) to transportation in interstate commerce solely within the limits of a single harbor or between points in contiguous harbors, when such transportation is not a part of a continuous through movement under a common control, management, or arrangement, to or from a point without the limits of any such harbor or harbors, or (2) to transportation by ferry or by small craft of not more than 50 tons carrying capacity or to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 20, after the word "out", to insert "to the general public", so as to read:

(d) The term "interstate common carrier by water" means any water carrier which holds itself out to the general public to transport passengers or property, or any class or classes thereof, in interstate commerce, for compensation or hire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "or", to strike out "arrangement" and insert "arrangement," so as to read:

(e) The term "interstate contract carrier by water" means any water carrier which transports passengers or the property of others, in interstate commerce, for compensation or hire, under a charter, contract, agreement, or arrangement, but which is not an interstate common carrier by water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 4, to strike out:

(f) The term "interstate private carrier by water" means any water carrier which is not an interstate common carrier by water or an interstate contract carrier by water, except as may be authorized under the provisions of section 212 of this part, and which, unless so authorized, transports, in interstate commerce, solely its own property and/or the property of any person by whom or which it is owned or controlled in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, or with whom or which it is affiliated. As used in this paragraph, the term "control" shall be construed to include the power to exercise control. An interstate water carrier shall be held to be affiliated with the person if, by reason of the relationship of such person to such carrier (whether by reason of the method of, or circumstances surrounding organization or operation, or whether established through common directors, officers, or stockholders, a voting trust or trusts, a holding or investment company or companies, or any other direct or indirect means), it is reasonable to believe that the affairs of such carrier will be managed in the interest of such person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 7, to strike out:

(g) The term "common carrier by water in foreign commerce" means any water carrier which holds itself out to transport passengers or property, or any class or classes thereof, from or to any place in the United States or in any territory or possession of the United States, to or from a foreign country, or to or from a foreign country with transshipment or transfer at any point within the United States or any territory or possession thereof: Provided, That a cargo boat commonly called an ocean tramp carrying on any one voyage cargo supplied by one shipper only, under a single charter party or contract of affreightment, shall not be deemed such common carrier by water in foreign commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 13, to strike out:

(h) The term "wharfinger" means any person, not included in the terms "interstate water carrier" or "common carrier by water in foreign commerce", as defined herein, or in the term "railroad" as defined in section 1 (3) of part I, who or which owns, operates, manages, or controls any wharf or pier, or any dock or other water space for the accommodation of vessels, or any warehouse, yard, grounds, or other facility or equipment of any kind in or in connection therewith, and holds himself or itself out to furnish any such facility, at any place within the United States or any territory or possession thereof, for compensation or hire, in or in connection with transportation by water carriers of passengers or property, or any class or classes thereof, in interstate or foreign commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 4, before the word "The", to strike out "(i)" and insert "(f)", so as to read:

(f) The term "vessel" means any water craft or other artificial contrivance of whatever description which is used, or is capable of being, or is intended to be, used as a means of transportation by water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 8, before the word "The", to strike out "(j)" and insert "(g)"; in line 9, before the word "connection", to strike out "or in"; in line 10, before the word "transportation", to insert "or in connection with"; in line 14, after the word "kind", to strike out "owned, leased, or used" and insert "operated or controlled"; in line 15, after the word "carrier", to strike out

" or by any wharfinger " and insert " and used "; and in the same line, after the word " in ", to strike out " the receipt, handling, carriage, or delivery of passengers or property, or in the interchange thereof with any other agency of " and insert " or in connection with such ", so as to read:

(g) The term " facility " includes any vessel used by or operated in connection with any water carrier in or in connection with transportation subject to this part, whether such vessel is owned or operated under a charter, contract, agreement, or lease, and any facility, warehouse, wharf, pier, dock, yard, grounds, or equipment of any kind operated or controlled by any such water carrier, and used in or in connection with such transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, before the word " The ", to strike out "(k)" and insert "(h)"; and on page 9, line 1, after the word " transported ", to insert " or the interchange thereof with any other agency of transportation. The term ' handling ' shall not be construed to include stevedoring services in the loading or unloading of vessels ", so as to read:

(h) The term " transportation " includes the use of any and all facilities defined above and any and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and any and all services in or in connection with transportation, including the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing, ventilation, storage, and handling of property transported or the interchange thereof with any other agency of transportation. The term " handling " shall not be construed to include stevedoring services in the loading or unloading of vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, at the beginning of line 5, to strike out "(l)" and insert "(i)"; in the same line, before the word " interstate ", to strike out " The term " and insert " The terms "; in line 6, after the word " or ", to insert " ' transportation in interstate commerce ' "; in line 7, before the word " transportation ", to strike out " means " and insert " mean "; in line 8, after the word " water " to insert " or partly by water and partly by railroad or motor vehicle,"; and in line 17, after the word " paragraph ", to strike out " (j) " and insert "(g)", so as to read:

(i) The terms " interstate transportation ", or " transportation in interstate commerce " as used in this part, mean transportation of persons or property wholly by water, or partly by water and partly by railroad or motor vehicle, from one State or Territory or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from one place in any such Territory or possession to another place in the same Territory or possession, whether such transportation be wholly within the United States or by way of a foreign port or waters or the high seas; and includes the use of any and all instrumentalities and facilities embraced in paragraph (g) of this section.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator about the amendment on page 9, line 8. I recall that when the Eastman bills came to us one was to regulate busses, another to regulate water transportation, another to reorganize the Interstate Commerce Commission, to increase the number of its members. Why was this language inserted, " or partly by water and partly by railroad or motor vehicle "? Is that in anticipation of the passage of the third one of these bills?

Mr. WHEELER. No. The bill regulating busses and trucks has already passed the Senate. The change to which the Senator calls attention is necessary in view of the fact that the proposed regulation applies also to transport partly by water and partly by railroad or motor carrier. It is necessary to use this language.

Mr. COPELAND. Was the Senator's committee quite united in support of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. There was only one member of the committee who filed a minority report.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator refers to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Minnesota filed a minority report, and he was the only one who did so.

Mr. COPELAND. I recall that when the bill was introduced I protested on the part of the Committee on Commerce, saying that this water carriers' bill should have been referred to the Committee on Commerce instead of to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. The matter was very amicably adjusted by the invitation of the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the Committee on Commerce to be represented.

I should like to say that, so far as the representatives of the Committee on Commerce are concerned, we are united in opposition to the bill. We are not in approval of it. Therefore our position is apparently that of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think the Senator is quite accurate in saying that the Committee on Commerce is entirely opposed to the bill, because some members of the Committee on Commerce have told me that they favor the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Likewise some members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce have said they were in opposition to it.

I should like to inquire further. I notice in the report of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] that he speaks about the great farm organizations being in opposition to the bill. I note on page 5 of the minority report this language:

The record clearly shows that the public which furnishes the tonnage and pays the freight urges that this legislation be not passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that that is not accurate, as I shall show when I come to explain the bill. As a matter of fact, a number of shippers and chambers of commerce have asked that the bill be passed.

So far as the farm organizations are concerned, I think some farm organizations did appear and object to the bill; but I wish to say that when I asked some of them for their reasons for objecting to the bill they did not advance any reasons; and, in fact, did not clearly understand the bill. The chief objection on the part of any farm organization was that they were afraid the Interstate Commerce Commission was " railroad-minded." I intend at the proper time to take up that phase of the question and discuss it, and to show that the farm organizations are not justified in that fear and that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in dealing with both water and rail transportation, has shown itself to be fair to water transportation. The Inland Waterways Corporation and the Mississippi Valley Barge Line are in favor of the bill.

The Warehousemen's Association of the Port of New York has written me a letter in which they favor the bill. The Shellenberger Mills & Elevator Co., of Salina, Kans., great shippers, have written a letter favoring the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, does the Senator think the ones who wrote those letters knew all about the bill? I assume from what the Senator says that those who knew about the bill were in favor of it. Is the Senator quite confident that these persons who have written him approving the bill really knew all about it?

Mr. WHEELER. Those who wrote favoring the bill gave their reasons for favoring it. A representative of farm organizations appeared before the committee, and if Senators will read his testimony they will see that he did not know anything about the bill, and he could not state specific objections to the bill, but simply took the stand that, generally speaking, he felt that the Interstate Commerce Commission should not regulate water transportation. I might add that he also felt that the Interstate Commerce Commission should not regulate trucks and busses.

Mr. COPELAND. Without knowing about it, he probably was right in that matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Mississippi water carriers, including the Government carriers on that river, all oppose the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. I have before me a letter from the Inland Waterways Corporation, a Government corporation, signed by General Ashburn, who wrote as follows:

I am enclosing herewith a copy of my testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee on the so-called " Eastman bills ", to regulate water carriers, and to reorganize the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I would be very glad if you would read this testimony, because it is my opinion based upon 15 years' experience as the agent of Congress in promoting inland-waterway transportation.

Gen. T. Q. ASHBURN.

He testified in favor of this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. What about the private carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. The Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co. writes, as of February 21:

The Federal Coordinator of Transportation has submitted to the Congress his recommendations for the regulation of all forms of transportation. His arguments in favor of regulation of water carriers are to my mind both sound, practical, and workable.

Conditions prevailing in the transportation industry persuade me to believe that stabilization of rates, a matter in which the public has a very vital interest, can come only through Federal regulation.

Mr. COPELAND. Who is the Senator quoting there?

Mr. WHEELER. I am reading from a letter written by the president of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line.

Mr. COPELAND. The Mississippi Valley Association is bitterly opposed to it.

Mr. WHEELER. In my judgment, the Senator is wrong in assuming that all its members are opposed to the bill. The Missouri River Improvement Association has passed resolutions favoring the bill, and their representatives came before the committee and testified in favor of it; and shippers in Kansas City, shippers in St. Louis, and farther down the Mississippi River have come before the committee personally or have sent letters favoring the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Mississippi Valley Association is quite an old organization, and I am wondering if that association approved it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am told that the Mississippi Valley Association did not approve the bill, but the Missouri River Association did approve the bill. The Government Inland Waterways Corporation, by General Ashburn, testified and wrote in favor of the bill. Also, the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co. approved the bill, both at the hearings and by letters directed to me and to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

I wish to call attention to the fact that the grounds for many of the objections to this bill which were stated before the committee were eliminated from the bill, so that the bill as it was reported out from the committee has eliminated practically all the substantial objections which were made before the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Were the objections raised by the Mississippi Valley Association eliminated?

Mr. WHEELER. I shall have to check that up.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. WHEELER. I know that General Ashburn, of the Inland Waterways Corporation, and the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., which are the largest barge lines on the river, and which would be more vitally affected by the bill than any other lines, in the event the bill were a bad bill, have gone on record in favor of it.

I continue to read from the letter written by the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., as follows:

Conditions prevailing in the transportation industry persuade me to believe that stabilization of rates, a matter in which the public has a very vital interest, can come only through Federal regulation. I am informed that this is also the view of those responsible for the management of the Inland Waterways Corporation, a Government-owned enterprise. More than 95 percent of the common-carrier traffic on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers is handled by that company and ours.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the terms of the bill, is it the opinion of the Senator that barge lines and the water transportation on the Mississippi River would be destroyed?

Mr. WHEELER. The fact of the matter is this: Here is what these people have been afraid of, and, quite frankly, this was the testimony which came out: The railroads at the present time are regulated, and they are constantly coming to the Interstate Commerce Commission asking that their rates be reduced so that they will be down to a point where they can compete effectively with water carriers on the inland waterways and in the coastal business. They are very much afraid that unless this bill passes the railroads will be given opportunity to drive them out of business. I expect to take up, when I come to the explanation of the bill, the reason why it is necessary that the bill be passed, and why, in my judgment, it is necessary for the preservation of the water carriers themselves to have this legislation adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the Senator believes that the water transportation of the Mississippi River will not be destroyed but will be benefited by the provisions of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Let me read further from this letter written by the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co.:

That the shippers are overwhelmingly in favor of regulation appears to be evidenced by the vote on a referendum on the subject, taken by the United States Chamber of Commerce. Sixteen hundred and fifty-four local chambers of commerce voted in favor of regulation, while but 286 voted in opposition to regulation. It is significant that the votes of the Chambers of Commerce of St. Louis, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, Memphis, and New Orleans, which are served by river transportation, were in favor of regulation.

In the consideration of this most important subject I believe it will prove helpful to the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate to have information of conditions that exist in the transportation industry that were not touched upon in detail by the Federal Coordinator.

What follows will, I believe, prove convincing that the existing chaos has other causes more important than the absence of regulation of rail competitive forms of transport. It is also calculated to dispel the belief held by a large body of public opinion that the so-called "plight" of the railroads is due to this unregulated competition. The "plight" of the railroads is not dissimilar from that of other industries and is due primarily to the business depression, supplemented by the utter disregard of sound business principles by the railroads and other forms of transportation, all of whom are equally guilty of both unbusinesslike practices and cutthroat competition. Practices of this character exist in the transportation industry probably to a greater degree than in any other major industry. Uneconomic competition prevails not only between the various forms of transportation but between individual units of the same form.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, let me say that I presume he will read this letter later on. I wanted to have this material brought out. I was reading from the minority views presented by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], but there was a digression. I desire to say that outside of the Government-owned lines, the shipping interests of the Mississippi Valley are against the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no, Mr. President!

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York had the floor, and was asking a question.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from New York asked a question, which I started to answer, and then he interrupted.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I desire to interrupt the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] for a moment in regard to the letter read by him. He quotes the statement in the letter that 95 percent of the common carriers on the Mississippi and Ohio River system favor this bill. The common carriers on those rivers carry only 3 percent, or less than 3 percent, of the total freight carried on those rivers. The remainder is carried by private carriers.

This is said to be a bill to protect and encourage water transportation. I wish to state that the records show that the carriers on the inland waterways which carry 95 percent of the tonnage have asked to be left out of the bill. At first they were included. When I shall later take the floor I will read from the record to show that the lake carriers, who carried 75,000,000 net tons of freight on the Great Lakes last year, came down here. They did not have to appear before any committee. They were too powerful politically. They came down here. The only one who is left is the common carrier who carries a little package freight and carload lots for the small shipper.

I shall not delay the Senator any longer. I thank him for yielding, and I shall later take the floor in my own right to discuss the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that the Senator is completely wrong in the statement he has made to the effect that 95 percent of these people came down here and asked to be taken out of the bill. What I said to the Senate just a moment ago was to the effect that what this bill chiefly seeks to do is to regulate the common carriers by water transportation, and that 95 percent of the common-carrier traffic on the Mississippi and on the Missouri asked to be regulated by this bill. The statement is made that what we are seeking to do is to injure the common carriers by water on the Mississippi, when the Government agency, the Inland Waterways Corporation and the Mississippi Valley Barge Line, as I started to show, say that they control 95 percent of the common-carriage business on the Mississippi, and that they want to be regulated. Not only that, but the chambers of commerce of cities along the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, which would be affected adversely by it, if the statement of the Senator from Minnesota be correct, are in favor of the regulation of common carriers by water.

Now, with reference to the contract carriers, the Senator says that we left out entirely the contract carriers. That is not correct. As a matter of fact, this bill regulates the contract carriers on the Mississippi River; it regulates the contract carriers on the Ohio River; and it regulates the contract carriers on the other rivers, insofar as they come in competition with common carriers by water.

With reference to the bulk carriers on the Great Lakes and the barge lines upon the rivers, which do not come in competition with the common carriers by water, let me make this statement to show the Senator wherein he is incorrect. If the Senator wants the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate these Lake cargo boats and contract barge lines upon the Mississippi River, and he will offer an amendment to do so, I am perfectly willing to accept it; but the only carriers these operations come in contact with are the railroads.

It is said that this omission of the contract barge lines from this bill is favored by the railroads. I say to the Senator that is not correct, because the private and contract barge lines of which he speaks and which handle the bulk cargoes on the Mississippi River and on the Great Lakes are, most of them, owned privately or they are purely contract carriers and do not come in conflict with the common carriers by water. The only carriers with whom they compete are the railroads. We have not attempted to regulate those in this bill, because they only compete with the railroads, and they are left free to make rates as low or as high as they want. If, however, the Senator wants to include them in this bill, I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. To include whom?

Mr. WHEELER. The railroads would like to see all the contract carriers in this bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They have not the power to put them in.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish my statement. If the Senator will offer an amendment to put them in the bill, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator means the private carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the private as well as the contract carriers. If the Senator will offer an amendment to put them in the bill, I will accept such an amendment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not want them regulated, either; I do not want them under the Interstate Commerce Commission. I know what the Interstate Commerce Commission has done to the railroads.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator is complaining that we have left them out because they are so powerful; but I say if the Senator wants them in and will offer such an amendment, I will help him to have them put in. They were left out because we felt that at this time the Interstate Commerce Committee perhaps did not have sufficient evidence of the need for regulating either private carriers or these contract carriers not in competition with common carriers by water, and that the Commission ought to study the question and report back to Congress on that need.

We are seeking in this bill to regulate common carriers by water on the inland waterways and in the coastal and intercoastal trades. We are seeking also to regulate contract carriers in these trades, but only insofar as they compete with the common carriers by water in the same trades; and the bill specifically provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission must recognize the difference between water and rail and at all times to bear in mind that difference.

When I come to discuss the bill, let me say to the Senator, I intend to point out what the Interstate Commerce Commission has done with reference to water rates where they have had the power over them, and I intend to show that, as a matter of fact, the Interstate Commerce Commission has always, over the objection of the railroads, sought to preserve water transportation to the extent they had the power to do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator from Montana, if the Senator from New York will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I myself happen to know a little something about what the Interstate Commerce Commission has done to water transportation where they have had the authority. They had the authority, under the law passed by Congress, to establish joint rates 8 years ago, and the first joint rate that was made provided a differential of 20 percent in favor of the waterways, and they have reduced it to 10 percent. By a recent decision, made January 7 of this year in the case of joint rates for the water carriers from New York to the ports of Chicago and Duluth. All the carriers asked was $1.29 and the Railroad Warehouse Commission raised it to $1.62 over the protest of the water carriers. They gave them a rate higher than they wanted to charge.

So far as this bill protecting the common carrier is concerned, he is going to be protected from whom? If we are going to protect him and the contract and private carriers, then we ought to regulate contract and private carriers. It is said they were left out because there is no competition between contract and private carriers. They carry 97 percent of the tonnage on the inland waterways. It is claimed that there is no competition between them and the railroads. Of course, there cannot be, because on water freight is hauled so cheaply that the railroads cannot compete.

What is left is the little common carrier who carries only 3 percent. He is left in the bill; he is to be protected and the way he is going to be protected is by regulating him.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, he made a statement a minute ago as to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Does he know of any instance where the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates that it has ever helped these interests?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. As a matter of fact the history of water rates under the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that the water carriers have been discriminated against. It was admitted by the Coordinator and others who appeared before the committee that the Transportation Act of 1920 specifically provided that the first business of the Interstate Commerce Commission was to do something for the railroads at the expense of the shipper and at the expense of everyone else; that its business was to save the railroads, and the records of the Commission show that that is what they have been trying to do. But the railroads are in worse shape now than when regulation began.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. While I hold no brief for the Interstate Commerce Commission—and certainly nobody can ever accuse me of being biased in favor of the railroads, because the fact is quite the contrary and the railroads feel that I am extremely unfair with them as to many matters—let me say that if we are going to have full regulation of the railroads, then we have got to have some regulation of their competitors. That is a fundamental proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in connection with that statement, and with other remarks which have been made, does not the question also arise whether we are to have regulation at all or whether the carriers are to be left entirely unregulated?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does any Senator think that the transportation system of the country in its present magnitude, involving as many conflicting interests as it does, can be operated successfully without some form of regulation, insofar as it deals with interstate commerce?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think I will take the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York declines to yield further.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say in reply to the Senator from Arkansas there is not any thought about freeing shipping from regulation. Shipping is now regulated. We have the Intercoastal Act of 1933 and the Merchant Marine Act of 1928. There is regulation of the shipping rates in the Shipping Board and the Commerce Department.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's position, then, is that there must be regulation?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. But that the regulation that is now provided is adequate and reliable?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that there is no occasion for modifying it or entrusting it to any different agency from that which exercises jurisdiction.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the Senator's position.

Mr. COPELAND. I know, if I know anything, that if we put shipping under the Interstate Commerce Commission the shipping men of this country might as well go out of business. The only way shipping can compete with the railroads is by reason of a lower rate for the carriage of freight. If this bill should pass, and shipping concerns should be placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and there should come a complaint from a transcontinental railroad that the intercoastal lines, the shipping lines from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic, were cutting under the rates of the railroads and interfering with the operation of the railroads and the making of profits by the railroads, if the matter should thus be brought officially to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, there would be only one way by which they could settle it to suit the railroads, and that is to insist that the rates on shipping be increased; and the minute the rates on shipping were increased, then shipping would go out of business, and likewise all the great concerns included in the testimony of the Senator from Minnesota would naturally have cause for complaint.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the Senator a few moments ago, in answer to one of my questions, to say that there is at present an adequate regulation of shipping rates. I do not think the word "rates" was used, but my understanding was that it was comprehended or at least implied in the answer. Is that correct?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. What agency now regulates shipping rates?

Mr. COPELAND. The Shipping Board.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me correct the Senator by saying that the Interstate Commerce Commission at the present time regulates the rates of certain inland and coastal shipping. As I shall point out later, where the ships are owned by the railroads the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates the rates. Where the ship lines make joint rates with the railroads, such rates are likewise regulated by the Commission. But the contract carriers by water are not regulated either on the Mississippi River or in the coastal trade.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was my information, and that accounted for the last question which I asked the Senator from New York. My information was that there is no regulation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I should not want to permit to pass unchallenged the general statement just made by the Senator from Montana, because there is a very substantial body of law giving jurisdiction over the rates and the practices of water carriers, and a very large portion of the pending bill is made up by a transfer and a reframing of existing provisions of law. I think that is a fair statement of the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the fundamental fact. When anybody says here that there is no system now in existence for the regulation of shipping and shipping rates, he certainly is misinformed. The purpose of the bill, as the Senator from Maine just pointed out, is to transfer from the Shipping Board and from the Department of Commerce to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power which the Shipping Board now has over the regulation of rates.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. I invite the Senator's attention that in the early stages of the discussion of this matter in the Interstate Commerce Committee there was prepared for the use of the committee, and I think it was at my suggestion, a statement showing the comparable provisions of law and showing the sources from which the provisions in the pending bill were taken. That is set forth in parallel columns in the hearings, and Senators will find repeated references to present law or regulation. The bill is in large part a transfer of existing authority from existing agencies to the Interstate Commerce Commission. There are many modifications, of course.

Mr. WHEELER. So far as foreign shipping is concerned, all the bill seeks to do is to transfer the power from the Commerce Department to the Interstate Commerce Commission in accordance with the message of the President of the United States saying he wanted it all under one agency.

With reference to intercoastal shipping, and so there may be no mistake about it at all, the Commerce Department at the present time may fix maximum rates, but at the present time there is no power to fix minimum rates.

Mr. COPELAND. The courts have held that the Commission have that power.

Mr. WHEELER. No; the Commission does not have the power to fix minimum rail-water rates, but only to fix maximum of such joint rates. Of course, the Commission can fix the maximum and minimum, or the precise rates for rail traffic, and it may fix the port-to-port rates of water carriers owned by railroads, but its power over joint rail-water rates is limited, like that of the Department of Commerce over the intercoastal rates, to fixing only the maximum.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator propose that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall fix specific rates on goods shipped by vessels?

Mr. WHEELER. What the bill proposes to do in respect of interstate common carriers by water is exactly the same thing the Interstate Commerce Commission does at the present time with reference to the rates of railroads. The practice is that the railroad companies file their rates. If the Commission find that those rail rates are unfair or unjust or discriminatory, then they have the power to order the railroads to change the rates so they shall not be unjust, shall not be discriminatory, and shall not be unfair. That is what the bill proposes to empower the Commission to do also in respect of the rates of interstate common carriers by water.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment, and then I shall not bother him further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. On the Mississippi River last year there were carried 57,700,000 tons, while the common carriers carried only 1,350,000 tons. The Senator from Montana said the Federal Barge Line and the Mississippi River Barge Line asked to come under the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is true they did that. They also stated why they came with that request. Their experience with the Interstate Commerce Commission has been such that they are afraid they are going to be driven out of business by discrimination in joint rates and railroad reductions in port-to-port rates against them. They were told that if they came under Federal regulation, there would be placed on the Interstate Commerce Commission some men who would make a particular study of water transportation.

Here is an idea as to why the water carriers carried 95 percent of the transportation on the inland waterways. The tonnage on the Ohio River 2 years ago was twice the amount of tonnage that passed through the Panama Canal. The great metropolitan area of Pittsburgh gets coal hauled down the Monongahela River to Pittsburgh for 23 cents per ton. The people who own those large private and contract carriers who carry 97 percent of the tonnage on the inland waterways are the same people who own the coal, the iron, and the steel industries. They own the great terminal warehouses. They own the boats.

That is the crowd which controls the railroads. They do not want those who carry 97 percent of the tonnage to compete with the railroads. They do not want them regulated. They say there can be no competition between them. But the little common carrier who carries the freight of the small shipper, the carload lots, the package freight, is to be regulated for his own protection. If there ever was anything more ironical and paradoxical advanced in legislation, I should like to know it. He must be regulated to protect himself evidently against himself.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator a question. He complains in one breath that we left them out because of their tremendous power and their tremendous influence, and of course that is not correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I beg to differ with the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. All right. I say that is not correct. The only carriers they come in competition with are the railroads. Is not that correct?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They do not compete with the railroads. They cannot compete because water transportation is so cheap there can be no competition.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator's theory were correct that the Interstate Commerce Commission was railroad-minded, then what would happen if we put the water carriers under regulation would be that the Interstate Commerce Commission would raise their rates so that the railroads could compete with them. That would be the result if what the Senator believes were correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator doubt that would happen?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course I doubt it.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator think that Mr. Eastman is so corrupt and the other members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are so corrupt that they are going to——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just a moment. I have never intimated that Mr. Eastman or anybody else is corrupt.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not want those words put in my mouth. Public officials are not corrupt. I regard Mr. Eastman as one of the outstanding men of the country. I have great confidence in him. I believe that under no circumstances would he be corrupt. When I talk about what the Interstate Commerce Commission would do outside of corruption and in decency, I know as well as I could know anything that is not yet proven—and yet history shows the truth of what I am saying—that the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded. It will continue to be railroad-minded and if this bill should pass it would mean the end of the American merchant marine. We can take our choice as regards the facts of the future.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Let me explain the economic results of this control by the railroads of the coal and grain and iron and steel transportation on the Great Lakes, which is 97 percent of the tonnage, or 75,000,000 tons, and why they do not want competition and why there cannot be any competition.

That tonnage is hauled very cheaply, but do not think for a moment that the consumer or the producer gets the benefit. The coal mines, which are owned and operated by the large coal companies, are owned by the same people who own the Steel Corporation and the boats. They haul the steel and coal on the Great Lakes. They haul the ore from Duluth to Pittsburgh or to Ashtabula and Lake Erie ports, and haul the finished products back. That cheap transportation is not reflected in the prices the consumer pays. They have a monopoly of transportation by water. The Government has spent millions of dollars to develop channels and harbors on the Great Lakes which are enjoyed by the Great Lake Carriers Association, a close corporation, a monopolistic corporation controlling transportation and the price to consumer on commodities carried. They have all the benefit of water transportation, because they have a monopoly, and, of course, they can haul this tonnage cheaper than it can be hauled on a railroad; and they do not want the Interstate Commerce Commission to interfere and take away this piece of pie from them, so they are not in the bill. The little shipper, who must pay the cost of transportation, what little he now gets out of a common carrier—only 3 percent—pays the freight.

These common carriers came here, as I said before, because of their experience with the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing joint rates. They have been discriminated against in port-to-port rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They feel like the banker who has been robbed by bank robbers, and so he thinks he will join them, because they are too powerful to be resisted. That was the substance of their testimony before the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not feel that the Senator has bothered me. I thank him for what he has contributed; but I desire to call a little more attention to the matter which I was discussing in the very beginning, before we entered into this colloquy.

In the minority report presented by the able Senator from Minnesota, he says:

> The record clearly shows that the public which furnishes the tonnage and pays the freight urges that this legislation be not passed. The great farm organizations, such as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Northwest Farmers' Union, the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, and the American Cotton Cooperative Association regard this legislation as inimical to the welfare of farmers all over the Nation.

A little while ago the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], said that when he pinned down one of these witnesses he seemed hazy. I am not surprised that any witness should feel somewhat hazy or be a little bit in doubt about what the bill means, because apparently the Senators on the floor do not fully realize what it means. I may be hazy on a million other matters, but I have not any doubt in my mind that the farm organizations are very wise when they say that this bill is an improper bill, because it means an added burden to every farmer who has occasion to ship his fruit or his farm products any distance. Just as soon as he loses the competition now afforded by the steamship owners, and gets in the hands of the railroads, as this bill certainly provides—because turning over shipping to the Interstate Commerce Commission means turning over shipping to the railroads—when that happens, the agricultural shippers as well as the manufacturers of my section will suffer materially.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In the letter which the Senator from Montana quoted, it was stated that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States were in favor of this bill. The members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States do not pay any freight rates. Whatever business they transact where freight rates are involved, they pass them on to the consumer or the producer, and he pays the transportation charges. The Coordinator, Mr. Eastman, admitted before the committee that this would mean an increase in rates.

Who pays the rates except the farmers who belong to these organizations who came here to protest? They are the ones who pay the bills. They pay the transportation on everything they ship to a terminal market. The higher the freight, the less they get for their product. They pay the freight on every piece of manufactured goods from the factory to the farm; so there is no one in the United States who has a greater stake in transportation rates than the farmer, because he is both the producer and the consumer, and he pays the freight both ways. The testimony of the United States Chamber of Commerce ought to be thrown out of the window, because its members do not pay any freight.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator, if he will allow me, that even though the purchaser pays the freight—and sometimes it is argued that the shipper does not pay the freight; that the purchaser pays the freight—even though the purchaser pays the freight, the price is reflected in the price which the producer receives.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is reflected to him in any event.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Certainly. If wheat sells in Baltimore for a dollar a bushel, and it costs 20 cents to transport it from Minneapolis, the price in Minneapolis is just 20 cents less than in Baltimore. The same thing is true if it is shipped to Liverpool or if it is shipped to Hong Kong.

To show what weight should be given to the views of those who wrote this bill, when they first brought in the bill they had in it a provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission should regulate the rates on all ships leaving the United States for foreign ports. If that should be done, and under the law as proposed here rates were required to be published 30 days in advance, suppose there were a chance for an American citizen to sell 10,000,000 bushels of wheat to Hong Kong. The rate must be published—20 cents a bushel. That would serve notice to all Canadian ports that no ship could leave American ports charging less than 20 cents a bushel for grain to Hong Kong. All the Canadian shipping and Canadian grain interests would have to do to get that business would be to say, "We will haul it for 18 cents." The same thing is true as to ports along the Atlantic coast. It would drive commerce away from the Atlantic coast ports of the United States to Montreal and to Quebec; so they finally took that provision out of the bill.

Then, the framers of the bill were going to regulate wharfage. They did not know that many of the wharves were owned by various States and municipalities, subdivisions of State governments; so they had to let that provision go out when the fact was pointed out that the Federal Government could not step in with a law and regulate an agency or a subdivision of a State.

They also proposed to regulate the great mass of tonnage on inland waters, 97 percent private and contract carriers. When they found out what the opposition was they left that out and said there was not any competition. I happen to know this because some of these people came down to call on me before the session of the Congress opened. There can be no competition between water and rail transportation.

For instance, last year, during the drought, over 11,000,000 bushels of wheat were shipped into the drought area from Atlantic coast ports and Pacific coast ports; and where did it go? It is a distance of 1,500 miles across the country from Oregon and Washington to Chicago or Duluth. That wheat, 11,000,000 bushels, came down through the Panama Canal, across the Gulf, up the Atlantic coast, over the New York barge line to Buffalo, and then across the Great Lakes to Duluth and Chicago, 8,000 miles.

There can be no competition between rail and water transportation; and yet, by forced stretch of the imagination, alleged competition between the two methods of transportation is invoked to kill the growing industry of common-carriage transportation by water, just in its infancy, ostensibly for the benefit of the small shipper, for the benefit of the farmer who ships only in carload lots. It is said that they must be protected, and the way to protect them is to regulate the water carriers. Protect them from whom? If they are in danger from competition, why not regulate their competitors? We are now putting them into the hands and into the power of a commission which, ever since it was given authority over joint rates in 1928, has consistently and constantly discriminated against the water carriers in favor of the railroads, to drive them out of business.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate for taking so much time. I shall merely add that not only all these great farm organizations but the National Industrial Traffic League, the Mississippi Valley Association, the Upper Mississippi Valley Association, the Mississippi and St. Croix Improvement Commission, and many other organizations, are on record against this bill.

I have presumed to say as much as I have about the subject because all these matters were given consideration by the Commerce Committee in connection with the writing of the subsidy bill. There we had the testimony of many persons who were interested in shipping; and I know from the testimony, and from private conversations with them, that outside of those shipping lines which are largely railroad-controlled there is opposition, and bitter opposition, to this bill; and at the right time we shall attempt to present the argument in a more orderly fashion.

I apologize to the Senate for having taken so much time. I suggest that the reading of the amendments be continued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 9, line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 9, line 19, before the word "The", to strike out "(m)" and insert "(j)"; in line 20, after the word "include", to insert "Porto Rico, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of March 2, 1917, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and any other act or acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of this part, and any other possession of the United States except"; and in line 25, after the name "Canal Zone", to strike out the comma and "but this enumeration shall not be construed to exclude any such possession of the United States", so as to read:

(j) The term "possession of the United States" shall include Porto Rico, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of March 2, 1917, to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and any other act or acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of this part, and any other possession of the United States except the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone: And provided further, That nothing in this part shall be construed to affect the power of the Government of the Philippine Islands vested in it by the second proviso of section 21 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended or by any other act or acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "204" and insert "304"; in line 9, after the word "to", to strike out "supervise and"; in the same line, after the word "regulate", to strike out "interstate"; and in the same line, after the word "carriers", to strike out "wharfingers, and common carriers by water in foreign commerce to the extent hereafter" and insert "herein", so as to read:

SEC. 304 (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission to regulate water carriers to the extent herein provided, and to that end the Commission shall have authority to make and amend such general or special rules and regulations and to issue such orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 17, after the word "the", to insert "organization of water carriers and the"; in line 18, after the word "of" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "the" and insert "their", and in the same line, after the word "business", to strike out "of water carriers and wharfingers", so as to read:

(b) The Commission shall have authority to inquire into and report on the organization of water carriers and the management of their business and to keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the same is conducted, and to transmit to Congress, from time to time, such recommendations as the Commission may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 24, after the word "reasonable", to strike out "classification" and insert "classifications"; in line 25, before the word "groups", to strike out "or" and insert "of"; in the same line, after the word "in", to strike out "any one of the several classes of carriers herein defined as an" and insert "the terms"; on page 11, line 2, before the word "interstate", to insert "or"; at the end of line 2, after the word "water", to strike out "and or 'interstate private carrier by water' and 'common carrier by water in foreign commerce'"; and in line 8, after the word "the", to strike out "Commission deems" and insert "Commission, after hearing, finds", so as to read:

(c) The Commission may establish from time to time such just and reasonable classifications of groups of carriers included in the terms "interstate common carrier by water" or "interstate contract carrier by water" as the special nature of the service performed by such carriers shall require; and such just and reasonable rules, regulations, and requirements consistent with the provisions of this part to be observed by the carriers so classified or grouped, as the Commission, after hearing, finds necessary or desirable in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 10, to strike out:

(d) The Commission is authorized and directed in aid of the accomplishment of the purposes of this part.

1. To make rules and regulations affecting shipping in the foreign trade not in conflict with law in order to adjust or meet general or special conditions unfavorable to shipping in the foreign trade, whether in any particular trade or upon any particular route or in commerce generally and which arise out of or result from foreign laws, rules, or regulations, or from competitive methods or practices employed by owners, operators, agents, or masters of vessels of a foreign country; and

2. To request the head of any department, board, bureau, or agency of the Government to suspend, modify, or annul rules or regulations which have been established by such department, board, bureau, or agency, or to make new rules or regulations affecting shipping in the foreign trade other than such rules or regulations relating to the Public Health Service, the Consular Service, and the Steamboat Inspection Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 4, to strike out:

(e) No rule or regulation shall hereafter be established by any department, board, bureau, or agency of the Government which affects shipping in the foreign trade, except rules or regulations affecting the Public Health Service, the Consular Service, and the Steamboat Inspection Service, until such rule or regulation has been submitted to the Commission for its approval and final action has been taken thereon by the Commission or the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to strike out:

(f) Whenever the head of any department, board, bureau, or agency of the Government refuses to suspend, modify, or annul any rule or regulation, or make a new rule or regulation upon request of the Commission, as provided in subdivision (2) of paragraph (d) of this section, or objects to the decision of the Commission in respect to the approval of any rule or regulation, as provided in paragraph (e) of this section, either the Commission or the head of the department, board, bureau, or agency which has established or is attempting to establish the rule or regulation in question may submit the facts to the President, who is hereby authorized to establish or suspend, modify, or annul such rule or regulation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 13, to strike out:

(g) No rule or regulation shall be established which in any manner gives vessels owned by the United States any preference or favor over those vessels documented under the laws of the United States and owned by persons who are citizens of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, before the word "Whenever", to strike out "(h)" and insert "(d)"; in line 12, after the word "to", to strike out "the latter" and insert "such interstate"; in line 13, after the word "relieve", to strike out "the latter" and insert "such"; and in line 16, after the word "undue", to strike out "disadvantage" and insert "disadvantage, consistently with the public interest and the policy declared in section 302 (a) of this part", so as to read:

(d) Whenever it shall appear from complaint made to the Commission or otherwise that the rates, fares, regulations, or practices of water carriers engaged in transportation to or from a port or ports of any foreign country in competition with interstate common carriers by water or interstate contract carriers by water, cause undue disadvantage to such interstate carriers by reason of such competition, the Commission may relieve such carriers from the provisions of this part to such extent, and for such time, and in such manner as in its judgment may be necessary to avoid or lessen such undue disadvantage, consistently with the public interest and the policy declared in section 302 (a) of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 18, to insert:

(e) Upon complaint in writing to the Commission by any person, or upon its own initiative without complaint, the Commission may investigate whether any water carrier has failed to comply with any provision of this part or with any requirement established pursuant thereto, and if, after notice of and hearing upon any such investigation, the Commission finds that any such carrier has failed to comply with any such provision or requirement, it shall issue an appropriate order to compel such carrier to comply therewith. Whenever the Commission is of opinion that any complaint does not state reasonable grounds for action on its part, it may dismiss such complaint.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to insert:

(f) After a decision, order, or requirement has been made by the Commission in any proceeding under this part, any party thereto may make application to the Commission for reconsideration or rehearing of the same, or of any matter determined therein, and it shall be lawful for the Commission in its discretion to grant such reconsideration or a rehearing if sufficient reason therefor be made to appear. Applications for reconsideration or rehearing shall be governed by such general rules as the Commission may establish. No such application shall excuse any carrier from complying with or obeying any decision, order, or requirement of the Commission, or operate in any manner to stay or postpone the enforcement thereof, without the special order of the Commission. If, after such reconsideration or rehearing, it shall appear that the original decision, order, or requirement is in any respect unjust or unwarranted, the Commission may reverse, change, or modify the same accordingly. Any decision, order, or requirement made after such reconsideration or rehearing shall be subject to the same provisions as an original decision, order, or requirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, in the heading after the word "Interstate", to strike out "water transportation, and wharfingers" and insert "transportation", so as to make the heading read:

Interstate transportation; rates, fares, charges, and practices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 6, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "205" and insert "305"; in line 7, after the word "water", to strike out "to establish reasonable through routes for interstate transportation with other such common carriers and with common carriers by railroad and/or by motor vehicle, and"; in line 11, after the word "for", to strike out "the"; in the same line, after the word "transportation", to strike out "of passengers or property in interstate commerce " and insert after the semicolon " and, according to its undertaking or holding out "; in line 14, after the word " reasonable ", to strike out " individual and joint "; in line 22, before the word " transportation ", to strike out " interstate "; in line 23, after the word " property ", to insert " in interstate commerce "; in the same line, after the word " of ", to strike out " such "; and on page 16, line 1, after the word " any ", to strike out " of such parties. Such carriers may also establish through routes and joint rates, fares, charges, and classifications with common carriers by water in foreign commerce and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto, and in the event of such through routes and joint rates the provisions of this section, section 206, and section 207 (except paragraph (c) thereof) of this part, with respect to through routes and joint rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices between interstate common carriers by water, shall apply. It shall be the duty of every wharfinger to provide safe and adequate service, equipment, and facilities used or necessary in or in connection with transportation subject to this part, and to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable charges and classifications for wharfage, handling, loading, unloading, storage, dockage, and all other services or uses related to or connected with such transportation, and just and reasonable rules, regulations, and practices relating thereto. The establishment and maintenance of through routes and joint rates between interstate common carriers by water and by railroad, and any proceeding in relation thereto, shall be subject to the provisions of part I of this act " and insert " carrier party thereto ", so as to read:

SEC. 305. (a) It shall be the duty of every interstate common carrier by water to provide safe and adequate service, equipment, and facilities for transportation; and, according to its undertaking or holding out, to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, fares, charges, and classifications, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, bills of lading, and manifests, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the transportation of passengers or property in interstate commerce; and in case of joint rates, fares, and charges, to establish just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof, which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any carrier party thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 23, to insert:

(b) Interstate common carriers by water may establish reasonable through routes and joint rates, fares, charges, and classifications with other such carriers or with common carriers by railroad or motor vehicle; and in case of such joint rates, fares, or charges it shall be the duty of the carriers parties thereto to establish just and reasonable regulations and practices in connection therewith, and just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof, which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such carriers. The establishment and maintenance of through routes and joint rates or fares between interstate common carriers by water and common carriers by railroad, and any proceeding in relation thereto, shall be subject to the provisions of part I of this act, which shall not be construed as amended hereby; and between interstate common carriers by water and common carriers by motor vehicle shall be subject to part II of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 16, before the word " It ", to strike out "(b)" and insert "(c)"; in line 17, after the word " water ", to strike out " or any wharfinger "; in line 19, after the word " port " and the comma, to insert " port district, gateway, transit point "; in line 21, after the word " port " and the comma, to insert " port district, gateway, transit point "; and in line 24, after the word " whatsoever ", to insert a colon and the following proviso: " Provided, That this paragraph shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever descripiton ", so as to read:

(c) It shall be unlawful for any interstate common carrier by water to make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any person, port, port district, gateway, transit point, locality, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any person, port, port district, gateway, transit point, locality, or description of traffic to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever: Provided, That this paragraph shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 3, after the word " Sec.", to strike out " 206 " and insert " 306 "; in line 7, after the word " the ", to strike out " interstate "; in the same line, after the word " transportation ", to insert " in interstate commerce "; in line 8, after the word " between ", to strike out " points " and insert " places "; in the same line, after the word " own ", to strike out " route " and insert " route,"; in line 9, after the word " between ", to strike out " points on its own route " and insert " such places "; in line 10, before the word " on ", to strike out " points " and insert " places "; in line 16, before the word " other ", to strike out " storage charges, and " and insert " or "; in line 17, before the word " require ", to strike out " may " and insert " shall "; and in line 21, after the word " consignee ", to strike out " Each wharfinger shall file with the Commission and print and keep open to public inspection tariffs showing all his or its charges, classifications, rules, regulations, and practices for wharfage, handling, loading, unloading, storage, dockage, or other services or uses in or in connection with transportation subject to this part ", so as to read:

SEC. 306. (a) Every interstate common carrier by water shall file with the Commission, and print, and keep open to public inspection tariffs showing all rates, fares, charges, classifications, rules, regulations, and practices, for the transportation in interstate commerce of passengers and property between places on its own route, and between such places and places on the route of any other such carrier or on the route of any common carrier by railroad or motor vehicle, when a through route and joint rate shall have been established. Such tariffs shall plainly state the places between which property or passengers will be carried, the classification of property or passengers and, separately, all terminal charges, or other charges which the Commission shall require to be so stated, all privileges or facilities granted or allowed, and any rules or regulations which in anywise change, affect, or determine any part or the aggregate of such rates, fares, or charges, or the value of the service rendered to the passenger, shipper, or consignee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 4, after the word " water ", to strike out " and of wharfingers ", and in line 9, after the word " in ", to strike out " consonance " and insert " accordance ", so as to read:

(b) All charges of interstate common carriers by water shall be stated in lawful money of the United States. The Commission shall by regulations prescribe the form and manner in which the tariffs required by this section shall be published, filed, and posted; and the Commission is authorized to reject any tariff filed with it which is not in accordance with this section and with such regulations. Any tariff so rejected by the Commission shall be void and its use shall be unlawful.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 13, after the word " water ", to strike out " and no wharfinger "; in line 19, after the word " carrier ", to strike out " or wharfinger "; and on page 20, line 1, after the word " apply ", to strike out " to interstate common carriers by water " and insert " in the administration of this part ", so as to read:

(c) No interstate common carrier by water shall charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for transportation subject to this part or for any service in connection therewith than the rates, fares, or charges specified for such transportation or such service in the tariffs lawfully in effect; and no such carrier shall refund or remit in any manner or by any device any portion of the rates, fares, or charges so specified, or extend to any person any privileges or facilities for transportation affecting the value thereof except such as are specified in its tariff: Provided, That the provisions of section 1 (7) and 22 (1) of part I shall apply in the administration of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 6, before the word " except ", to strike out " or wharfinger ", so as to read:

(d) No change shall be made in any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice specified in any effective tariff of an interstate common carrier by water, except after 30 days' notice of the proposed change filed and posted in accordance with this section. Such notice shall plainly state the change proposed to be made and the time when such change will take effect. The Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow changes upon notice less than that herein specified, or modify the requirements of this section with respect to posting and filing of tariffs either in particular instances or by general order applicable to special circumstances or conditions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 19, after the word "Commission", to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; in line 21, before the word "complete", to insert "schedules of minimum rates or charges or, in the discretion of the Commission"; on page 21, line 1, after the word "therewith", to strike out "except in strict accordance with" and insert "for a less compensation, either directly or by means of a change in"; in line 2, after the word "the", to strike out "charges"; in line 3, after the word "terms", to strike out the comma; in the same line, after the word "of", to strike out "such" and insert "any"; in line 4, after the word "undertaking", to insert "than the rates or charges so published and filed with the Commission"; in line 5, after the word "That", to insert "the Commission, in its discretion and for good cause shown, either upon application of"; in line 8, after the word "thereof" and the comma, to strike out "may apply to the Commission for" and insert "or upon its own initiative may, after hearing, grant"; in line 10, after the word "paragraph", to strike out the comma and "and the Commission may, after hearing, grant such relief", and in line 14, after the word "section", to strike out "202" and insert "302", so as to read:

(e) It shall be the duty of every interstate contract carrier by water to file with the Commission, post, and keep open for public inspection in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, schedules of minimum rates or charges or, in the discretion of the Commission, complete and exact copies of every contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking for interstate transportation to which it is a party; and it shall be unlawful for any such carrier to transport passengers or property or to furnish facilities or services in connection therewith for a less compensation, either directly or by means of a change in the terms and conditions of any contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking than the rates or charges so published and filed with the Commission: Provided, That the Commission, in its discretion and for good cause shown, either upon application of any such carrier or carriers, or any class or group thereof, or upon its own initiative may, after hearing, grant relief from the provisions of this paragraph to such extent, and for such time, and in such manner, as in its judgment, is consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 302 (a) of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 16, after "Sec.", to strike out "207" and insert "307"; in line 19, after the word "section", to strike out "206" and insert "306"; in line 20, after the word "common", to insert "carrier by water"; in the same line, after the word "or", to insert "any interstate"; in line 21, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or carriers"; in the same line, after the word "water", to strike out the comma and "or by any such common carrier or carriers in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicles, or by any wharfinger or wharfingers"; and on page 22, line 2, after the word "oath", to strike out "Whenever the Commission is of opinion that any complaint does not state reasonable grounds for investigation and action on its part, it may, in its discretion, dismiss such complaint", so as to read:

SEC. 307. (a) Any person may make complaint in writing to the Commission that any individual or joint rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, published and filed as provided in section 306 of this part by any interstate common carrier by water or any interstate contract carrier by water is or will be in violation of this part. Every complaint shall state fully the facts complained of and the reasons for such complaint and shall be made under oath.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 9, after the word "by", to strike out "water, or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicles, or by any wharfinger or wharfingers" and insert "water"; in line 13, after the word "or" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "carriers, or wharfinger or wharfingers," and insert "carriers"; and in line 17, after the word "it", to strike out "shall" and insert "may", so as to read:

(b) Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or in an investigation on its own initiative, the Commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge demanded, charged, or collected by any interstate common carrier or carriers by water for transportation subject to this part or any regulation or practice whatsoever of such carrier or carriers relating to such transportation, is or will be unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any provision of this part, it may determine and prescribe the lawful rate, fare, or charge or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rate, fare, or charge thereafter to be observed, or the lawful regulation or practice thereafter to be made effective.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 21, to strike out:

(c) The Commission shall, whenever deemed by it necessary or desirable in the public interest, after hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative without a complaint, establish just and reasonable through routes, joint classifications, and joint rates, fares, charges, regulations or practices, applicable to the interstate transportation of passengers or property by common carriers by water, or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle, or the maxima or minima, or maxima and minima, to be charged, and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 9, before the word "In", to strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)"; in line 11, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger" and insert "by water"; in line 13, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; in line 15, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; and in line 17, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

(c) In any proceeding to determine the justness or reasonableness of any rate, fare, or charge of any interstate common carrier by water there shall not be taken into consideration or allowed as evidence or elements of value of the property of such carrier either goodwill, earning power, or the certificate under which such carrier is operating; and in applying for and receiving a certificate under this part any such carrier shall be deemed to have agreed to the provisions of this paragraph on its own behalf and on behalf of all transferees of such certificate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 20, before the word "whenever", to strike out "(c)" and insert "(d)"; in line 23, before the word "transportation", to strike out "interstate"; in line 24, after the word "water" and the comma, to strike out "or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle,"; on page 24, line 3, after the word "carriers" to insert "parties"; in the same line, after the word "thereto", to strike out "(whether agreed upon by such carriers any of them, or otherwise established)"; in line 6, after the word "carriers", to strike out the comma and "and in cases where the joint rate, fare, or charge was established pursuant to a finding or order of the Commission and the divisions thereof are found by it to have been unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, the Commission may also by order determine what would have been the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers, and require adjustment to be made in accordance therewith"; and in line 19, after the word "justified", to strike out "and, in the case of joint rates prescribed by the Commission, the order as to divisions may be made effective as of the date of the original order", so as to read:

(d) Whenever, after hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative, the Commission is of opinion that the divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportation of passengers or property by interstate common carriers by water are or will be unjust, unreasonable, inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial as between the carriers parties thereto, the Commission shall by order prescribe the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers. The order of the Commission may require the adjustment of divisions between such carriers in accordance with the order, from the date of filing the complaint or entry of order of investigation or such other dates subsequent as the Commission finds justified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Montana, having the bill in charge, as to whether any of these amendments are controversial.

Mr. WHEELER. No; the amendments are not controversial. They are amendments which were adopted by the committee. I do not know of anything controversial about any of them. Some amendments were suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the committee did not act favorably on them. They were with reference to the regulation of contract carriers, and regarding the commodity clause. The committee came to the conclusion that it was best to pass the bill without those amendments, and then submit the law to the Commission so that they could make a study of it, and report back as to the necessity for any of these more drastic provisions.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows I am not a member of the committee, and some of us are constantly engaged in other committees, and I should like to ask the Senator whether he would object to a reconsideration if, upon an examination of the record, it was discovered that some of the amendments perhaps need further consideration?

Mr. WHEELER. I would have no objection whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 24, line 22, before the word "In", to strike out "(f)" and insert "(e)"; in line 24, after the word "the", to strike out "circumstances and conditions peculiar to" and insert "inherent advantages of"; on page 25, line 1, before the word "water", to strike out "interstate"; in the same line, after the word "carriers", to strike out "and to the operations of wharfingers"; in line 2, after the word "traffic", to insert "by such carriers"; in line 4, after the word "efficient", to strike out "interstate"; in the same line, after the word "transportation", to strike out "and wharfinger service"; and in line 7, after the word "such", to strike out "water carriers and wharfingers" and insert "carriers", so as to read:

(e) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the Commission shall give due consideration, among other factors to the inherent advantages of transportation by water carriers; to the effect of rates upon the movement of traffic by such carriers; to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water transportation at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable such carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Montana, in charge of the bill. I have a communication here in which I find the following:

We can understand why the regulation of common carriers by rail, by motor, and possibly by water is justified and necessary; but we cannot find justification for Federal regulation of public bodies and private persons and companies engaged in the operation of terminals, warehouses, wharves, etc.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, wharfingers have been eliminated from the bill. As the bill was originally introduced, it contained a provision regulating wharfingers. We took that provision out of the bill in the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I desired to ascertain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 25, line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 25, line 9, before the word "whenever", to strike out "(g)" and insert "(f)"; in line 13, after the word "water" and the comma, to strike out "or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle, or by any wharfinger or wharfingers"; in line 19, after the word "carriers" and the comma, to strike out "or such wharfinger or wharfingers"; in line 25, after the word "carriers", to strike out the comma and "or wharfinger or wharfingers"; on page 26, line 18, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; and in the same line, after the word "operation", to strike out "as provided in section 210 (a) of this part" and insert "when this section takes effect", so as to read:

(f) Whenever there shall be filed with the Commission any schedule stating a new rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice for the interstate transportation of passengers or property by an interstate common carrier or carriers by water, the Commission is hereby authorized and empowered upon protest of interested parties or upon its own initiative at once, and, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by such carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon an investigation concerning the lawfulness of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, and pending such hearing and the decision thereon, the Commission, by filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby, a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may from time to time suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than 7 months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the Commission may make such order with reference thereto, as would be proper in a proceeding instituted after such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice had become effective. If the proceeding shall not have been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period: Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not apply to the initial schedule or schedules filed with the Commission by any such carrier in operation when this section takes effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 20, before the word "Whenever", to strike out "(h)" and insert "(g)"; in line 25, after the word "section", to strike out "202" and insert "302"; on page 27, line 13, after the word "part", to strike out "except to the extent, if any, and in such manner, as" and insert "which"; in line 14, after the word "Commission", to strike out "may deem consistent" and insert "shall find to be undue or inconsistent"; in line 16, after the word "section", to insert a comma and "and the Commission shall give due consideration to the cost of the services rendered by such contract carriers and to the effect of such minimum charge or such rule, regulation, or practice on the movement of traffic by such carriers", so as to read:

(g) Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or its own initiative, the Commission finds that any rate, charge, rule, regulation, or practice of any interstate contract carrier or carriers by water, or the form or provisions of any charter, contract, agreement, or undertaking used by any such carrier, contravenes the policy declared in section 302 (a) of this part, the Commission may prescribe such minimum rate or charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, or such form or provisions of any such charter, contract, agreement, or undertaking as in its judgment may be necessary or desirable in the public interest and to promote the policy declared in said section. Such minimum rate or charge or such rate, regulation, or practice, or the form, terms, or conditions of any such contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking affecting such minimum charge or the value of the service rendered, so prescribed by the Commission, shall give no advantage or preference to any such contract carrier in competition with any interstate common carrier subject to this part, with the Commission shall find to be undue or inconsistent with the public interest and the policy declared in said section, and the Commission shall give due consideration to the cost of the services rendered by such contract carriers and to the effect of such minimum charge or such rule, regulation, or practice on the movement of traffic by such carriers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 20, to strike out:

(i) After a decision, order, or requirement has been made by the Commission in any proceeding under this part, any party thereto may make application to the Commission for reconsideration or rehearing of the same, or of any matter determined therein, and it shall be lawful for the Commission in its discretion to grant such reconsideration or a rehearing if sufficient reason therefor be made to appear. Applications for reconsideration or rehearing shall be governed by such general rules as the Commission may establish. No such application shall excuse any carrier or wharfinger from complying with or obeying any decision, order, or requirement of the Commission, or operate in any manner to stay or postpone the enforcement thereof, without the special order of the Commission. If, after such reconsideration or rehearing, it shall appear that the original decision, order, or requirement is in any respect unjust or unwarranted, the Commission may reverse, change, or modify the same accordingly. Any decision, order, or requirement made after such reconsideration or rehearing shall be subject to the same provisions as an original decision, order, or requirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, after "Sec.", to strike out "(208)" and insert "(308)"; in line 18, after the word "in", to strike out "section 207 (a) of"; in line 21, after the word "thereof", to insert "by any interstate common carrier by water"; and in line 23, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

SEC. 308. (a) If, after hearing on a complaint made as provided in this part, the Commission shall determine that any party complainant is entitled to an award of damages under the provisions of this part for a violation thereof by any interstate common carrier by water, the Commission shall make an order directing the carrier to pay to the complainant the sum to which he is entitled on or before a day named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 1, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; in line 7, after the word "carrier" to strike out "or wharfinger,"; and in the same line, after the word "any", to strike out "point" and insert "port", so as to read:

(b) If such carrier does not comply with an order for the payment of money within the time limit in such order, the complainant, or any person for whose benefit such order was made, may file in the district court of the United States for the district in which he or it resides or in which is located the principal operating office of such carrier, or in which is located any port of call on a route operated by such carrier, or in any State court of general jurisdiction having jurisdiction of the parties, a petition setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages, and the order of the Commission in the premises. Such suit in the District Court of the United States shall proceed in all respects like other civil suits for damages, except that on the trial of such suit the findings and order of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and except that the petitioner shall not be liable for costs in the district court nor for costs at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless they accrue upon his appeal. If the petitioner shall finally prevail he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as a part of the costs of the suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 22, after the word "interstate", to strike out "carriers or wharfingers subject to this part" and insert "common carriers by water", so as to read:

(c) (1) All actions at law by interstate common carriers by water for recovery of their lawful tariff charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 3, after the word "interstate", to strike out "carriers or wharfingers subject to this part" and insert "common carriers by water", so as to read:

(2) All complaints against interstate common carriers by water for the recovery of damages not based on overcharges shall be filed with the Commission within 90 days from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, subject to subparagraph (4).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 11, after the word "interstate", to strike out "carriers or wharfingers subject to this part", and insert "common carriers by water"; in line 16, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; and in line 18, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

(3) For recovery of overcharges action at law shall be begun or complaint filed with the Commission against interstate common carriers by water within 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, subject to subparagraph (4), except that if claim for the overcharge has been presented in writing to such carrier within the 1-year period of limitation said period shall be extended to include 1 year from the time notice in writing is given by such carrier to the claimant of disallowance of the claim, or any part or parts thereof, specified in the notice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 23, after the figure "(3)", to strike out "a carrier or wharfinger subject to this part" and insert "an interstate commerce carrier"; and on page 31, line 6, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

(4) If on or before expiration of the 90-day period of limitation in subparagraph (2) or of the 1-year period of limitation in subparagraph (3) an interstate commerce carrier begins action under subparagraph (1) for recovery of lawful tariff charges in respect of the same transportation service, or, without beginning action collects charges in respect of that service, said period of limitation shall be extended to include 90 days from the time such action is begun or such charges are collected by such carrier.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 10, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

(5) The cause of action in respect of a shipment of property shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemd to accrue upon delivery or tender of delivery thereof by the carrier, and not after.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 19, after the word "of", to insert "this"; in the same line after the word "shall", to insert "take effect 6 months after this section becomes effective and"; and in line 22, after the word "accrued", to strike out "as well as cases in which the cause of action may hereafter accrue, except that actions at law begun or complaints filed with the Commission against interstate carriers or wharfingers subject to this part for the recovery of overcharges where the cause of action accrued on or after this section takes effect, shall not be deemed to be barred under paragraph (c) if such actions shall have been begun or complaints filed prior to enactment of this paragraph or within 6 months thereafter", so as to read:

(8) The provisions of this paragraph (c) shall take effect 6 months after this section becomes effective and extend to and embrace cases in which the cause of action has heretofore accrued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 7, after the word "award", to strike out "for" and insert "of"; and in line 9, before the word "parties", to strike out "carriers or wharfingers" and insert "carriers", so as to read:

(d) In such suits all parties in whose favor the Commission may have made an award of damages by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all of the carriers parties to such order awarding such damages may be joined as defendants, and such suit may be maintained by such joint plaintiffs and against such joint defendants in any district where any one of such joint plaintiffs could maintain such suit against any one of such joint defendants; and service of process against any one of such defendants as may not be found in the district where the suit is brought may be made in any district where such defendant has his or its principal operating office. In case of such joint suit the recovery, if any, may be by judgment in favor of any one of such plaintiffs against the defendant found to be liable to such plaintiff.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 22, after "Sec.", to strike out "209" and insert "309"; on page 33, line 11, after the word "this", to strike out "part" and insert "section", and in line 14, after the word "this", to strike out "part" and insert "section", so as to read:

SEC. 309. It shall be lawful for any interstate common carrier by water to enter into or continue a contract, agreement, understanding, or arrangement with any other such carrier or carriers for pooling or apportioning earnings, losses, traffic, or service: Provided, That no such contract, agreement, understanding, or arrangement shall be lawful unless and until a true copy thereof is filed with the Commission: And provided further, That the Commission may by order disapprove, cancel, or modify any such contract, agreement, understanding, or arrangement, or any modification or cancelation thereof, whether or not previously approved by it, which it finds to be unjust or unreasonable or unduly preferential or prejudicial as between carriers, shippers, ports, or otherwise, and contrary to the public interest. Such agreements, understandings, or arrangements lawfully existing at the time when this section shall take effect shall be lawful until disapproved by the Commission, and thereafter shall be unlawful. All such agreements, understandings, or arrangements entered into after this section takes effect shall be unlawful unless and until the same have been approved by the Commission. Any such carrier or carriers shall be relieved from the operation of the 'antitrust laws', as designated in section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, and from all other restraints and prohibitions of Federal or State law, so far as may be necessary to enable such carrier or carriers to carry out such contracts, agreements, understandings, or arrangements to the extent that they are herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 3, after "Sec.", to strike out "210" and insert "310"; in line 4, after the word "water", to strike out "and no wharfinger"; in line 7, after the word "section", to strike out "212" and insert "311"; in line 10, after the word "routes", to insert "or in the trade or trades"; in line 11, after the word "operated", to strike out "continuously"; in line 13, after the words "bona fide", to strike out "and continuous"; in line 14, after the word "except", to insert "in either event"; in line 16, after the word "no", to strike out "control; and that, subject to section 212, if any wharfinger or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide continuous or seasonal operation, in 1934, as a wharfinger, owing, operating, managing, or controlling the services and facilities specified in its application, and has so operated continuously since that time" and insert "control"; on page 35, line 2, after the word "within", to strike out "sixty" and insert "one hundred and twenty"; and in the same line, after the word "this", to strike out "part shall take" and insert "section takes", so as to read:

SEC. 310. (a) No interstate common carrier by water shall engage in transportation subject to this part unless it holds a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Commission: Provided, however, That, subject to section 311, if any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a common carrier by water in 1934 over the route or routes or in the trade or trades for which application is made and has so operated since that time, or, if engaged in furnishing seasonal service, only, was in bona fide operation in 1934 during the season ordinarily covered by its operation, except in either event, as to interruptions of service over which the applicant or its predecessor in interest had no control, the Commission shall issue such certificate without requiring further proof that public convenience and necessity will be served by such operation, and without further proceedings, if application for such certificate is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (b) of this section and within 120 days after this section takes effect. Otherwise the application for such certificate shall be decided in accordance with the procedure provided for in paragraph (c) of this section and such certificate shall be issued or denied accordingly. Pending the determination of any such application the continuance of such operation shall be lawful.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 13, after the word "Commission", to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; and in line 14, after the word "require" and the period to insert "Any person, not included within the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, who or which is engaged in transportation as a common carrier by water in interstate commerce when this section takes effect, may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a certificate and, if application for such a certificate is made to the Commission within such period, such person may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission", so as to read:

(b) Application for a certificate shall be made in writing to the Commission, be vertified under oath, and shall be in such form and contain such information and be accompanied by proof of service upon such interested parties as the Commission shall, by regulations, require. Any person, not included within the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, who or which is engaged in transportation as a common carrier by water in interstate commerce when this section takes effect, may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a certificate and, if application for such a certificate is made to the Commission within such period, such person may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 25, after the word "section", to strike out "212" and insert "311", so as to read:

(c) Upon application as provided in this section, and subject to section 311, the Commission shall issue a certificate to any qualified applicant therefor, authorizing the whole or any part of the operations covered by the application, if the Commission finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that the proposed service, to the extent authorized by the certificate, is or will be required by the present or future public convenience and necessity; otherwise such application shall be denied.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 11, after the word "certificate", to strike out the comma and "when issued to an interstate common carrier,"; in line 13, after the word "which", to insert a comma and "or the trade or trades in which,"; in line 20, after the word "to", to strike out "the furnishing of additional vessels or other facilities, the frequency or sailings or other additional service over the specified route or routes between the specified ports, to"; and on page 37, line 2, after the word "pursuant", to strike out "thereto. Such certificate, when issued to a wharfinger, shall specify the services and facilities which such wharfinger is authorized to provide or operate, and at the time of issuance and from time to time thereafter, there shall be attached to the exercise of the privilege granted by such certificate such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations as the public convenience and necessity may from time to time require" and insert "thereto: Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to add to his or its equipment, facilities, or service within the scope of such certificate, as the development of the business and the demands of the public shall require", so as to read:

(d) Such certificate shall specify the route or routes over which, and the ports to and from which, or the trade or trades in which, such carrier is authorized to operate, and, at the time of issuance and from time to time thereafter, there shall be attached to the exercise of the privileges granted by such certificate such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations as the public convenience and necessity may from time to time require, including terms, conditions, and limitations as to the extension of the route or routes of the carrier, and such other terms, and conditions, and limitations as are necessary to carry out, with respect to the operations of the carrier, the requirements of this part or those established by the Commission pursuant thereto: Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to add to his or its equipment, facilities, or service within the scope of such certificate, as the development of the business and the demands of the public shall require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 14, to strike out:

(e) No interstate common carrier by water to which a certificate has been granted as provided in this part shall serve any other ports than those covered by its certificate and no wharfinger to which a certificate has been granted as provided in this part shall own, operate, control, or manage any warehouse, wharf, dock, yard, grounds, or other facility used in or in connection with transportation subject to this part other than those covered by its certificate; and no such carrier or wharfinger shall abandon all or any part of the service authorized in such certificate except upon application to and permission of the Commission based upon a finding that such extension will promote the public convenience and necessity or that such abandonment will not substantially impair the public interest: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall be construed to preclude temporary cessation or diminution of service by any such carrier or wharfinger upon application to and approval of the Commission or under such general or special regulations and conditions as the Commission may prescribe in the public interest: And provided further, That cessation or diminution of service by reason of force majeure shall not be deemed a forfeiture of such certificate if service is resumed within a reasonable time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 16, before the word "No", to strike out "(g)" and insert "(f)"; in the same line, before the word "shall", to strike out "interstate contract carrier by water" and insert "person"; in line 17, after the word "in", to insert "the business of an"; in the same line, after the word "interstate", to strike out "transportation" and insert "contract carrier by water"; in line 18, after the word "unless", to insert "he or"; in the same line, after the word "holds", to strike out the article "a" and insert the words "an effective"; in line 19, after the word "Commission", to strike out "and"; in line 20, after the word "section", to strike out "212" and insert "311"; in line 22, after the word "as", to strike out "a" and insert "an interstate"; in line 24, before the word "since", to strike out "continuously"; in line 25, after the words "bona fide", to strike out "and continuous"; on page 39, line 2, after the word "except", to insert "in either event"; in line 6, after the word "paragraph", to strike out "(h)" and insert "(g)"; in line 7, after the word "within", to strike out "60" and insert "120"; in line 8, after the word "this", to strike out "part" and insert "section"; in the same line, before the word "effect", to strike out "shall take" and insert "takes"; in line 10, after the word "paragraph", to strike out "(h)" and insert "(g)"; and in line 13, after the word "lawful" and the period, to insert "Any person, not included within the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, who or which is engaged in transportation as an interstate contract carrier by water when this section takes effect, may continue such operations for a period of 120 days thereafter without a permit and, if application for such permit is made within such period, the carrier may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission", so as to read:

(f) No person shall engage in the business of an interstate contract carrier by water unless he or it holds an effective permit issued by the Commission authorizing such operation: Provided, That, subject to section 311, if any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as an interstate contract carrier by water in 1934 in the trade or service for which application is made and has so operated since that time, or, if engaged in furnishing seasonal service only, was in bona fide operation in 1934 during the season ordinarily covered by its operations, except in either event, as to interruptions of service over which the applicant or its predecessor in interest had no control, the Commission shall issue such permit, without further proceedings, if application for such permit is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (g) of this section and within 120 days after this section takes effect. Otherwise the application for such permit shall be decided in accordance with the procedure provided for in paragraph (g) of this section and such permit shall be issued or denied accordingly. Pending determination of any such application the continuance of such operation shall be lawful. Any person, not included within the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, who or which is engaged in transportation as an interstate contract carrier by water when this section takes effect may continue such operations for a period of 120 days thereafter without a permit, and, if application for such permit is made within such period, the carrier may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 23, before the word "Application", to strike out "(h)" and insert "(g)"; on page 40, line 2, after the word "Commission", to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; in line 3, after the word "section", to strike out "212" and insert "311"; in line 10, after the word "section", to strike out "202" and insert "302"; in line 11, after the word "The", to strike out "operations authorized thereby" and insert "business of the carrier and the scope thereof"; in line 14, after the word "such", to insert "reasonable"; in line 15, after the word "limitations", to insert a comma and "consistent with the character of the holder as an interstate contract carrier by water"; and in line 19, after the word "thereto", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to substitute or add contracts within the scope of the permit, or to add to his equipment, facilities, or service, within the scope of the permit, as the development of the business and the demands of the carrier's patrons shall require", so as to read:

(g) Application for such permit shall be made to the Commission in writing, be verified under oath, and shall be in such form and contain such information and be accompanied by proof of service upon such interested parties as the Commission shall, by regulations, require. Upon application, and subject to section 311, the Commission shall issue such permit if it finds from the application or from any hearing held thereon that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that such operation will be consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 302 (a) of this part. The business of the carrier and the scope thereof shall be specified in such permit and there shall be attached thereto at the time of issuance and from time to time thereafter such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations, consistent with the character of the holder as an interstate contract carrier by water as are necessary to carry out the requirements of this part or those lawfully established by the Commission pursuant thereto: Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to substitute or add contracts within the scope of the permit, or to add to his equipment, facilities, or service, within the scope of the permit, as the development of the business and the demands of the carrier's patrons shall require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 41, to strike out:

REGISTRATION FOR PRIVATE CARRIERS BY WATER

SEC. 211. (a) No interstate private carrier by water shall engage in interstate transportation unless it holds a registration, issued by the Commission and authorizing such operation: Provided, That any such carrier in operation when this part shall take effect may continue in such operation if application for such registration is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (b) of this section and within 60 days thereafter.

(b) Application for such registration shall be made to the Commission in writing, verified under oath, and shall contain proof that the applicant is an interstate private carrier by water within the meaning of this part, and such other information as the Commission may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 16, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "212" and insert "311"; in line 17, after the word "to", to strike out "an interstate" and insert "a"; in the same line, after the word "carrier", to insert "in interstate commerce"; in line 19, after the word "in", to strike out "sections 210 and 211" and insert "section 310"; in line 22, after the word "section", to strike out "202" and insert "302 (a)"; in line 23, after the word "means", to strike out "a certificate" and insert "certificates"; and in line 24, after the word "necessity", to strike out the comma and "a permit, or a registration" and insert "or permits", so as to read:

DUAL OPERATION

SEC. 311. The Commission, upon application, may issue to a water carrier in interstate commerce more than one of the forms of operating authority specified in section 310 of this part if the Commission is of opinion that the granting of such application will be in the public interest and consistent with the policy declared in section 302 (a) of this part. The term 'forms of operating authority' means certificates of public convenience and necessity or permits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 3, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "213" and insert "312"; in the same line, after the word "Certificates", to strike out the comma and "permits, and registrations" and insert "and permits"; in line 6, before the word "hearing", to insert "notice and"; in line 7, after the word "part" and the comma, to strike out "because of financial irresponsibility or"; in line 8, after the word "any", to strike out "provisions" and insert "provision"; and in line 12, after the word "permit", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, however, That no such certificate or permit shall be revoked (except upon application of the holder) unless the holder thereof willfully fails to comply, within such reasonable time, not less than 90 days, as the Commission may prescribe with a lawful order of the Commission made as provided in section 304 (e), commanding obedience to the provision of this part, or to the rule or regulation of the Commission thereunder, or to the term, condition, or limitation of such certificate or permit, found by the Commission to have been violated by such holder"; and in line 23, after the word "certificate", to strike out "or", so as to read:

SUSPENSION, CHANGE, REVOCATION, AND TRANSFER OF CERTIFICATES, PERMITS, AND REGISTRATIONS

SEC. 312. (a) Certificates and permits shall be effective from the date specified therein. Any such certificate or permit may, after notice and hearing, be amended, suspended, or revoked, in whole or in part, for willful failure to comply with any provision of this part, or with any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the Commission promulgated thereunder, or with any term, condition, or limitation of the certificate or permit: Provided, however, That no such certificate or permit shall be revoked (except upon application of the holder) unless the holder thereof willfully fails to comply, within such reasonable time, not less than 90 days, as the Commission may prescribe with a lawful order of the Commission made as provided in section 304 (e), commanding obedience to the provision of this part, or to the rule or regulation of the Commission thereunder, or to the term, condition, or limitation of such certificate or permit, found by the Commission to have been violated by such holder.

(b) Except as provided in this part, any such certificate, permit may be transferred with the approval of the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 43, to strike out:

COMMODITIES CLAUSE

SEC. 211. From and after the 1st day of July 1936 it shall be unlawful for any interstate common carrier by water or interstate contract carrier by water to transport in interstate commerce any article or commodity manufactured, mined, made, or produced by or under authority of, or owned in whole or in part by such carrier or by any person directly or indirectly controlling, managing, or operating such carrier or in which such carrier or person may have any interest, direct or indirect, or with which it may be affiliated, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for the use of such carrier in the conduct of its business as a common or contract carrier by water: Provided, however, That if the Commission shall find after hearing upon the application of any such carrier or carriers, that such transportation is in the interest of the public and is of advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and that such extension will not contravene the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part, the Commission may, by order, extend the time during which such transportation may be continued beyond the 1st day of July 1936.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 3, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "215" and insert "313"; in line 7, after the word "any", to insert "major"; in the same line, after the word "thereof", to strike out the comma and "with each other or with those of one or more interstate contract carriers by water which are not also carriers by railroad,"; in line 12, after the word "such", to strike out "common"; in line 13, after the word "such", to strike out "common"; in line 14, after the word "any", to insert "major"; in line 15, after the word "such", to strike out "common or contract"; in line 16, after the word "carrier" and the semicolon, to strike out "or for any such contract carrier or two or more such contract carriers jointly to purchase, lease, or contract to operate the properties, or any part thereof, or any such common carrier;"; in line 19, after the word "such", to strike out "common"; in line 20, after the word "such", to strike out "common"; in line 21, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or of any such contract carrier"; in line 22, after the word "stock" and the semicolon, to strike out "or for any such contract carrier, or two or more such carriers jointly, to acquire control of any such common carrier through purchase of its stock"; in line 25, before the word "which", to strike out "corporation" and insert "person"; on page 45, line 1, after the word "water", to strike out "or an interstate contract carrier by water"; in line 3, before the word "carriers", to insert "interstate common"; in the same line, after the word "water", to strike out "of which one or more is an interstate common carrier"; in line 5, after the word "such", to strike out "corporation" and insert "person"; in line 6, after the word "such", to strike out "common"; in the same line, after the word "carriers", to strike out "by water"; and in line 7, after the word "such", to strike out "common or contract", so as to read:

CONSOLIDATION, MERGER, AND ACQUISITION OF CONTROL

SEC. 313. (a) It shall be lawful, under the conditions specified below, but under no other conditions, for two or more interstate common carriers by water which are not also carriers by railroad to consolidate or merge their properties, or any major part thereof into one corporation for the ownership, management, and/or operation of the properties theretofore in separate ownership; or for any such carrier or two or more such carriers jointly, to purchase, lease, or contract to operate the properties, or any major part thereof, of another such carrier; or for any such carrier or two or more such carriers jointly, to acquire control of another such carrier through purchase of its stock; or for a person which is not an interstate common carrier by water or a carrier by railroad to acquire control of two or more interstate common carriers by water through ownership of their stock; or for any such person which has control of one or more such carriers to acquire control of another such carrier through ownership of its stock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 11, after the word "the", to strike out "corporation" and insert "person"; in line 17, after the word "the", where it occurs the second time, to strike out "public interest will be promoted by the"; and in line 18, after the word "proposed", to insert "will be consistent with the public interest", so as to read:

(1) Whenever a consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control is proposed under this section, the carrier or carriers or the person seeking authority therefor shall present an application to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall notify the carriers involved in the proposed transaction and the applicant or applicants, and other parties in interest of the time and place for a public hearing. If after such hearing the Commission finds that the transaction proposed will be consistent with the public interest and that the conditions of this section have been or will be fulfilled, it may enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control, upon such terms and conditions as it shall find to be just and reasonable and with such modifications as it may prescribe; and

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 1, before the word "which", to strike out "corporation" and insert "person who or"; in line 6, after the word "such", to strike out "corporation" and insert "person"; and in line 7, after the word "section", to strike out "217" and insert "315", so as to read:

(2) Whenever a person who or which is not an interstate common carrier by water or an interstate contract carrier by water is authorized, by an order entered under paragraph (a) (1) of this section, to acquire control of any such carrier by water or of two or more such carriers, such person thereafter shall, to the extent provided by the Commission, for the purposes of section 315 relating to accounts, records, and reports, including the penalties applicable in the case of violations thereof, be subject to the provisions of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 16, after the word "railroad" and the comma, to strike out "or of one or more such carriers and any interstate contract carrier by water", and in line 21, before the word "manner", to strike out "other", so as to read:

(b) (1) It shall be unlawful for any person, except as provided in paragraph (a), to accomplish or effectuate, or to participate in accomplishing or effectuating, the control or management in a common interest of two or more interstate common carriers by water which are not also carriers by railroad, however such result is attained, whether directly or indirectly, by use of common directors, officers, or stockholders, a holding or investment company or companies, a voting trust or trusts, or in any manner whatsoever. It shall be unlawful to continue to maintain control or management accomplished or effectuated after the enactment of this part and in violation of this paragraph. As used in this paragraph, the words "control or management" shall be construed to include the power to exercise control or management.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 3, after the word "any", to strike out "corporation" and insert "person", so as to read:

(e) The carriers and any person affected by any order made under the foregoing provisions of this section shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the "antitrust laws", as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing law against unlawful restraints, and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints or prohibitions by or imposed under authority of law, State or Federal, insofar as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by such order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 15, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "216" and insert "314"; in the same line, after the word "by", to strike out "water or interstate contract carriers by"; in line 19, after the word "section", to strike out "215" and insert "313"; on page 49, line 4, after the word "the", to strike out "provisions" and insert "exemption in section 3 (a) (6)"; in line 5, after the figures "1933" and the single quotation, to strike out "are" and insert "is"; in the same line, after the word "hereby", to strike out "repealed insofar as they relate to security issues subject to this section." and insert "amended to read as follows:

"'(6) Any security issued by an interstate common carrier by water, the issuance of which is subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended: '.

So as to read:

ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES

SEC. 314. Interstate common carriers by water, corporations organized for the purpose of engaging in transportation as such carriers, and corporations authorized by order entered under section 313 (a) (1) to acquire control of any such carrier, or of two or more such carriers, shall be subject to the provisions of paragraphs 2 to 11, inclusive, of section 20a of part I: Provided, however, That said provisions shall not apply to such carriers or corporations where the par value of the securities to be issued, together with the par value of the securities then outstanding, does not exceed $500,000. In the case of securities having no par value, the par value for the purpose of this section shall be the fair market value as of the date of their issue: Provided further, That the exemption in section 3 (a) (6) of the "Securities Act of 1933" is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(6) Any security issued by an interstate common carrier by water, the issuance of which is subject to the provisions of section 20a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; ".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 13, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "217" and insert "315"; in line 15, after the word "from", to strike out "all interstate"; in the same line, after the word "carriers", to insert "engaged in interstate transportation"; in line 16, before the word "to", to strike out "wharfingers,"; in line 18, after the word "such", to strike out "carriers" and insert "carriers,"; in the same line, before the word "specific", to strike out "and wharfingers"; in line 22, after the word "any", to strike out "intrastate common carrier by water or any contract carrier by water, or any wharfinger," and insert "such carrier"; and on page 50, line 1, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND REPORTS

SEC. 315. (a) The Commission is hereby authorized to require annual, periodical, or special reports from water carriers engaged in interstate transportation, and to prescribe the manner and form in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such carriers specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may deem information to be necessary. Such reports shall be under oath whenever the Commission so requires. The Commission may also require any such carrier to file with it a true copy of any contract, charter, or agreement between such carrier and any other carrier or person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 5, after the word "by", to strike out "interstate common carriers by water or interstate contract carriers by water, or wharfingers" and insert "water carriers engaged in interstate transportation,"; in line 15, after the word "carriers", to strike out "or wharfingers"; in line 20, after the word "carriers", to strike out "or wharfingers"; in line 22, after the word "carriers", to strike out "or wharfingers"; and in line 25, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

(b) The Commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by water carriers engaged in interstate transportation, and the length of time such accounts, records, and memoranda shall be preserved, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic, as well as of the receipts and expenditures of money. The Commission or its duly authorized agents shall at all times have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept, or required to be kept by such carriers. The special agents or examiners of the Commission shall have authority under its order to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers. This provision shall apply to receivers of carriers and to operating trustees thereof and, to the extent deemed necessary by the Commission, to persons having control, direct or indirect, over or affiliated with any such carrier.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 2, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "218" and insert "316"; and in line 4, after the word "for", to strike out "transport of" and insert "transportation by", so as to read:

RECEIPTS, BILLS OF LADING, MANIFESTS, ETC.

SEC. 316. The provisions of section 20 (11) of part I shall apply with like force and effect to receipts, bills of lading, manifests, or other contracts for transportation by interstate common carriers by water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 7, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "219" and insert "317"; in the same line, after the word "every", to strike out "interstate"; in line 8, after the word "carrier", to strike out "and every wharfinger" and insert "engaged in interstate transportation"; and in line 15, after the word "such", to strike out "water carrier or wharfinger" and insert "carrier", so as to read:

NOTICES, ORDERS, AND SERVICE OF PROCESS

SEC. 317. (a) It shall be the duty of every water carrier engaged in interstate transportation to file with the Commission a designation in writing of the name and post-office address of an agent upon whom or which service of notices or orders may be made under this part. Such designation may from time to time be changed by like writing similarly filed. Service of notices or orders in proceedings under this part may be made upon such carrier by personal service upon it or upon an agent so designated by it, or by registered mail addressed to it or to such person or corporation at the address filed. In default of such designation, service of any notice or order may be made by posting in the office of the secretary of the Commission. Whenever notice is given by mail, as provided herein, the date of mailing shall be considered as the time when notice is served.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 25, after the word "any", to strike out "interstate"; in the same line, after the words "carrier or" to insert "water", and in the same line, after the word "carriers", to strike out "or by any wharfinger" and insert "engaged in interstate transportation", so as to read:

(b) No order relating to a violation of this part by any water carrier or water carriers engaged in interstate transportation shall be made by the Commission, except after hearing upon complaint or after an investigation upon its own initiative.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 14, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "220" and insert "318"; in line 15, before the numerals "16", to insert "section"; in line 16, before the word "of", to insert "and section 17"; in the same line, before the word "the", to insert "and"; in line 17, before the word "the", to insert "and"; and in line 20, after the word "part", to insert "so far as concerns interstate transportation", so as to read:

ENFORCEMENT AND PROCEDURE

SEC. 318. (a) The provisions of section 12, section 16, (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (12), and (13), and section 17 of part I, and the "Compulsory Testimony Act" (27 Stat. 443), and the "Immunity of Witnesses Act" (34 Stat. 798; 32 Stat. 904, ch. 755, sec. 1), shall apply with full force and effect in the administration of this part so far as concerns interstate transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 21, after the word "any", to strike out "interstate"; in the same line, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger" and insert "engaged in interstate transportation"; and on page 53, line 8, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger, and/or the officers, agents, employees, and representatives of any such carrier or wharfinger", and insert "and/or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof", so as to read:

(b) If any water carrier engaged in interstate transportation fails to comply with or operates in violation of any provision of this part, or any rule, regulation, requirement, or order thereunder, or of any term or condition of any certificate or permit, or registration, the Commission or the Attorney General of the United States may apply to any District Court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties for the enforcement of such provision of this part or of such rule, regulation, requirement, order, term, or condition; and such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce obedience thereto by a writ or writs of injunction or other process, mandatory or otherwise, restraining such carrier and/or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof from further violation of such provision of this part or of such rule, regulation, requirement, order, term, or condition and enjoining upon it or them obedience thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 2, after "Sec.", to strike out "221" and insert "319"; and in line 6, after the word "permit", to strike out "or registration", so as to read:

UNLAWFUL ACTS AND PENALTIES

SEC. 319. (a) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision of the preceding sections of this part, or any rule, regulation, requirement, or order thereunder, or any term or condition of any certificate or permit, for which no penalty is otherwise provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed shall be subject for the first offense to a fine not exceeding $500, and for any subsequent offense to a fine of not exceeding $2,000. Each day of such violation shall constitute a separate offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 14, after the word "Any", to strike out "interstate common carrier by water or any interstate contract carrier by water, or any wharfinger" and insert "water carrier engaged in interstate transportation"; and in line 23, after the word "obtain", to strike out "interstate transportation, or wharfinger service, for persons or property" and insert "transportation subject to this part", so as to read:

(b) Any water carrier engaged in interstate transportation or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall knowingly and willfully offer, grant, or give, or cause to be offered, granted, or given any rebate, deferred rebate, or other concession, in violation of the provisions of this part, or who, by any device or means, shall knowingly and willfully assist, or shall willingly suffer or permit, any person to obtain transportation subject to this part at less than the rates, fares, or charges lawfully in effect, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was wholly or in part committed shall be subject for each offense to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 8, after the word "receive", to strike out "and" and insert "any"; in line 12, after the word "any", to strike out "interstate" and insert "water"; in the same line, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; in line 14, after the word "obtain", to strike out "interstate transportation, or wharfinger service" and insert "transportation subject to this part"; in line 22, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; and in line 24, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

(c) Any person or persons who shall knowingly and willfully solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, deferred rebate, or other concession in violation of the provisions of the preceding sections of this part, or who shall by any device or means, whether with or without the consent or connivance of any water carrier or his or its officer, agent, employee, or representative, knowingly, and willfully obtain transportation subject to this part at less than the rates, fares, or charges lawfully in effect, or shall knowingly and willfully, directly or indirectly, by false claim, false billing, false representation, or other device or means, obtain any allowance, refund, or repayment in connection with or growing out of such transportation or service, whether with or without the consent or connivance of such carrier, or his or its officer, agent, employee, or representative, whereby the compensation of such carrier for such transportation or service, either before or after payment, shall be less than the rates, fares, or charges lawfully in effect, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 8, after the word "Any", to strike out "interstate common carrier by water, or any interstate contract carrier by water, or any wharfinger" and insert "water carrier engaged in interstate transportation"; in line 15, after the word "the", to strike out "Commission" and insert "Commission,"; and in line 24, after the figures "$5,000" and the period, to strike out "The provisions of this paragraph which concern a 'report' shall apply with like force and effect to any private carrier by water and any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof", so as to read:

(d) Any water carrier engaged in interstate transportation or any officer, agent, employee, or representative thereof, who shall willfully fail or refuse to make a report to the Commission as required by this part, or to keep accounts, records, and memoranda in the form and manner prescribed or approved by the Commission, or shall knowingly and willfully falsify, destroy, mutilate, or alter any such report, account, record, or memorandum, or shall knowingly and willfully file any false report, account, record, or memorandum, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction within the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed, be subject for each offense to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 3, after the word "who", to insert "knowingly and willfully"; in line 6, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "an interstate water carrier, or wharfinger" and insert "any water carrier engaged in interstate transportation"; and in line 8, after the word "section", to strike out "217" and insert "315", so as to read:

(e) Any special agent or examiner who knowingly and willfully divulges any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of the examination of the accounts, records, and memoranda of any water carrier engaged in interstate transportation, as provided in section 315 of this part, except as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction or judge thereof, shall be subject, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 16, after the word "water" and the comma, to strike out "or any wharfinger,"; in line 18, before the word "for", to strike out "wharfinger, or"; in line 19, before the word "to", to strike out "wharfinger or person," and insert "person"; in line 20, after the word "knowingly", to insert "and willfully"; in line 25, after the word "such", to strike out "common carrier for interstate transportation or to such wharfinger" and insert "carrier for transportation in interstate commerce"; on page 58, line 6, after the word "knowingly", to insert "and willfully"; in line 7, before the word "Nothing", to strike out the quotation mark and "(g)"; and in line 14, after the word "of", to strike out "crimes" and insert "crimes,", so as to read:

(f) It shall be unlawful for any interstate common carrier by water, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee of such carrier or for any other person authorized by such carrier or person to receive information knowingly and willfully to disclose to or permit to be acquired by any person other than the shipper or consignee, without the consent of such shipper or consignee, any information concerning the nature, kind, quantity, destination, consignee, or routing of any property tendered or delivered to such carrier for transportation in interstate commerce, which information may be used to the detriment or prejudice of such shipper or consignee, or which may improperly disclose his business transactions to a competitor; and it shall also be unlawful for any person to solicit or knowingly and willfully receive any such information which may be so used. Nothing in this part shall be construed to prevent the giving of such information in response to any legal process issued under the authority of any court, or to any officer or agent of the Government of the United States or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, in the exercise of his powers, or to any officer or other duly authorized person seeking such information for the prosecution of persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or to another carrier, or its duly authorized agent, for the purpose of adjusting mutual traffic accounts in the ordinary course of business of such carriers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 19, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "222" and insert "320"; on page 59, line 3, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; in line 8, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; in line 10, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or handled by such wharfinger"; in line 19, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; in line 23, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger"; on page 60, line 5, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", and in line 10, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger", so as to read:

COLLECTION OF RATES AND CHARGES

SEC. 320. No interstate common carrier by water shall deliver or relinquish possession at destination of any freight transported or handled by him or it until all tariff rates and charges thereon have been paid, except under such rules and regulations as the Commission may from time to time prescribe to govern the settlement of all such rates and charges and to prevent unjust discrimination or undue preference or prejudice: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not be construed to prohibit any such carrier from extending credit in connection with rates and charges on freight transported or handled for the United States, for any department, bureau, or agency thereof, or for any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof, or for the District of Columbia. Where such carrier is instructed by a shipper or consignor to deliver property transported by such carrier, to a consignee other than the shipper or consignor, such consignee shall not be legally liable for transportation or handling charges in respect of the transportation or handling of such property (beyond those billed against him at the time of delivery for which he is otherwise liable) which may be found to be due after the property has been delivered to him, if the consignee (a) is an agent only and had no beneficial title in the property, and (b) prior to delivery of the property has notified the delivering carrier in writing of the fact of such agency and absence of beneficial title, and, in the case of a shipment reconsigned or diverted to a point other than that specified in the original bill of lading, has notified the delivering carrier in writing of the name and address of the beneficial owner of the property. In such cases the shipper or consignor, or in the case of a shipment so reconsigned or diverted, the beneficial owner shall be liable for such additional charges, irrespective of any provisions to the contrary in the bill of lading or in the contract under which the shipment was made or handled. If the consignee has given to the carrier erroneous information as to who is the beneficial owner, such consignee shall himself be liable for such additional charges, notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph. On shipments reconsigned or diverted by an agent who has furnished the carrier with a notice of agency and the proper name and address of the beneficial owner, and where such shipments are refused or abandoned at ultimate destination, the said beneficial owner shall be liable for all legally applicable charges in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 14, to strike out:

TRANSPORTATION BY COMMON CARRIERS IN FOREIGN-COMMERCE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 223. (a) Every common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall file immediately with the Commission a true copy, or if oral, a true and complete memorandum, of every agreement with another such carrier, or with an interstate common carrier by water or railroad or with a wharfinger, or any modification or cancelation thereof, to which such carrier may be a party or conform in whole or in part, fixing or regulating transportation rates or fares; giving or receiving special rates, accommodations, or other special privileges or advantages; controlling or regulating competition; pooling or apportioning earnings, losses, or traffic; allotting ports or restricting or otherwise regulating the number and character of sailings between ports; limiting or regulating in any way the volume or character of freight or passenger traffic to be carried; or in any manner providing for an exclusive, preferential, or cooperative working arrangement. The term "agreement" in this section includes understandings, conferences, transshipment, and other arrangements: Provided, however, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any such agreement filed with the Department of Commerce when this part shall take effect.

(b) The Commission may by order disapprove, cancel, or modify any agreement, or any modification or cancelation thereof, whether or not previously approved by the Department of Commerce or by it, that it finds to be unjustly discriminatory or unfair as between carriers, shippers, exporters, importers, or ports, or between exporters from the United States and their foreign competitors, or to operate to the detriment of the commerce of the United States, or to be in violation of this part, and shall approve all other agreements, modifications, or cancelations. If shall be unlawful to carry out any agreement or any portion thereof disapproved by the Commission.

(c) All agreements, modifications, or cancelations made after this part takes effect shall be lawful only when and as long as approved by the Commission, and before approval or after disapproval it shall be unlawful to carry out in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, any such agreement, modification, or cancelation.

(d) Every such agreement and every such modification or cancelation thereof affected by an any order made under the provisions of this section shall be excepted from the operation of the "antitrust laws", as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, and from an other restraints or prohibitions by or imposed under authority of law, State or Federal, insofar as may be necessary to the carrying out of anything authorized or required by such order.

(e) Whoever violates any provision of this section shall be liable to a penalty of $1,000 for each day such violation continues, to be recovered by the United States in a civil action.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 21, to strike out:

RATES, FARES, AND CHARGES

SEC. 224. (a) No common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall demand, charge, or collect any rate, fare, or charge which is unjust and unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory between shippers or ports, or unjustly prejudicial to exporters of the United States as compared with their foreign competitors. Whenever the Commission finds after hearing upon complaint or its own initiative that any rate, fare, or charge demanded, charged, or collected by any such carrier contravenes the provisions of this paragraph, it may prescribe a reasonable maximum rate, fare, or charge, or alter the rate, fare, or charge so demanded, charged, or collected to the extent necessary to correct such unjust discrimination or prejudice and make an order that the carrier shall discontinue demanding, charging, or collecting any such unjustly discriminatory or prejudicial rate, fare, or charge.

(b) Every such carrier shall establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable charges, regulations, and practices relating to or connected with the receiving, transporting, handling, storing, or delivering of property. Whenever the Commission finds that any such charge, regulation, or practice is unjust or unreasonable it may determine, prescribe, and order enforced a just and reasonable charge, regulation, or practice.

(c) Upon complaint by any carrier who or which is a party to any conference agreement approved under authority of section 223 of this part alleging the charging of any unreasonably low rate, fare, or charge, by any carrier or carriers subject to this part with whom or which such carrier is in competition, the Commission may investigate such complaint and, after hearing, determine and prescribe such minimum rate, fare, or charge, to be observed by such other carrier or carriers, and by the complaining carrier and other carriers parties to such agreements, who or which are also parties to such investigation, as in the Commission's judgment the competitive situation and other surrounding circumstances and conditions may require: Provided, however, That such order shall be made only after a finding by the Commission that the rate, fare, or charge of such competing carrier or carriers is so unreasonably low as to contravene the policy declared in section 202 of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 13, to strike out:

REPARATION

SEC. 225. (a) Any person may file with the Commission a sworn complaint setting forth any violation of this part by a common carrier by water in foreign commerce, and asking reparation for the injury, if any, caused thereby. The Commission shall furnish a copy of the complaint to such carrier, who shall within a reasonable time specified by the Commission satisfy the complaint or answer it in writing. If the complaint is not satisfied the Commission shall, except as otherwise provided in this part, investigate it in such manner and by such means, and make such order, as it deems proper. The Commission, if the complaint is filed within 1 year after the cause of action accrued, may direct the payment, on or before a day named, of full reparation to the complainant for the injury caused by such violation.

(b) The Commission, upon its own motion, may in like manner and, except as to orders for the payment of money, with the same powers, investigate any violation of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 8, to strike out:

REBATES, UNFAIR PRACTICES, DISCRIMINATION

SEC. 226. (a) No common carrier by water in foreign commerce shall, directly or indirectly, in respect to the transportation by water of passengers or property between a port of a State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States and a port of a foreign country:

(1) Pay, or allow, or enter into any combination, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, to pay or allow, a deferred rebate to any shipper. The term "deferred rebate" as used in this part means a return of any portion of the freight money by a carrier to any shipper as a consideration for the giving of all or any portion of his shipments to the same or any other carrier, or for any other purpose, the payment of which is deferred beyond the completion of the service for which it is paid, and is made only if, during the period for which computed and the period of deferment, the shipper has complied with the terms of the rebate agreement or arrangement.

(2) Use a fighting ship either separately or in conjunction with any other carrier, through agreement or otherwise. The term "fighting ship" as used in this part means a vessel used in a particular trade by a carrier or group of carriers for the purpose of excluding, preventing, or reducing competition by driving another carrier out of said trade.

(3) Retaliate against any shipper by refusing, or threatening to refuse, space accommodations when such are available, or resort to other discriminating or unfair methods, because such shipper has patronized any other carrier or has filed a complaint charging unfair treatment, or for any other reason.

(4) Make any unfair or unjustly discriminatory contract with any shipper based on the volume of freight offered or unfairly treat or unjustly discriminate against any shipper in the matter or cargo space accommodations or other facilities, due regard being had for the proper loading of the vessel and the available tonnage, the loading and landing of freight in proper condition, or the adjustment and settlement of claims.

(b) Any carrier who violates any provision of paragraph (a) of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $25,000 for each offense.

(c) The Commission upon its own initiative may, or upon complaint shall, after due notice to all parties in interest, and hearing, determine whether any person, not a citizen of the United States and engaged in transportation by water of passengers or property—

(1) Has violated any provision of paragraph (a) of this section, or

(2) Is a party to any combination, agreement, or understanding, express or implied, that involves in respect to transportation of passengers or property between foreign ports, deferred rebates or any other unfair practice designated in said paragraph (a), and that excludes from admission upon equal terms with all other parties thereto, a common carrier by water in foreign commerce which is a citizen of the United States and which has applied for such admission.

(d) If the Commission determines that any such person has violated any such provision or is a party to any such combination, agreement, or understanding, the Commission shall thereupon certify such fact to the Secretary of Commerce. The Secretary shall thereafter refuse such person the right of entry for any ship owned or operated by him or by any carrier directly or indirectly controlled by him, into any port of the United States, or any Territory, District, or possession thereof, until the Commission certifies that the violation has ceased or such combination, agreement, or understanding has been terminated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 227. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier by water in foreign commerce either alone or in conjunction with any other person, directly or indirectly—

(1) To make, cause, or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, port, locality, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, port, locality, or description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

(2) To allow any person to obtain transportation for property at less than the regular rates or charges then established and enforced on the line of such carrier, by means of false billing, false classification, false weighing, false report of weight, or by any other unjust or unfair device or means.

(3) To induce, persuade, or otherwise influence any marine insurance company or underwriter, or agent thereof, not to give a competing carrier by water as favorable a rate of insurance on vessel or cargo, having due regard to the class of vessel or cargo, as is granted to such carrier or other person subject to this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 69, to strike out:

ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND REPORTS

SEC. 228. The Commission may require any common carrier by water in foreign commerce, or any officer, receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or employee thereof, to file with it any periodical or special report, or any account, record, rate, or charge, or any memorandum of any facts and transactions appertaining to the business of such carrier. Such report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum shall be under oath whenever the Commission so requires, and shall be furnished in the form and within the time prescribed by the Commission. Whoever fails to file any report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum, or willfully falsifies, destroys, mutilates, or alters any such report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum, or willfully files a false report, account, record, rate, charge, or memorandum, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject upon conviction to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 18, to strike out:

NOTICE, ORDERS, SERVICE OF PROCESSES, REHEARINGS

SEC. 229. The provisions of section 207 (i) and of section 219 shall apply to proceedings under section 223 and the following.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 22, to strike out:

ENFORCEMENT AND PROCEDURE

SEC. 230. (a) For the purpose of investigating alleged violations of section 223, and the following, of this part, the Commission may by subpena compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. Subpenas may be signed by any Commissioner, and oaths or affirmations may be administered, witnesses examined, and evidence received by any Commissioner or examiner, or, under the direction of the Commission, by any person authorized under the laws of the United States or any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof to administer oaths. Persons so acting under the direction of the Commission and witnesses shall, unless employees of the Commission, be entitled to the same fees and mileage as in the courts of the United States. Obedience to any such subpena shall, on application by the Commission, be enforced as are orders of the Commission other than for the payment of money.

(b) No person shall be excused on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, from attending and testifying, or producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or of any court in any proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this part; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpena and under oath, he may so testify or produce evidence, except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

(c) In case of violation of any order of the Commission, other than an order for the payment of money, the Commission, or any party injured by such violation, or the Attorney General, may apply to a district court having jurisdiction of the parties; and if, after hearing, the court determines that the order was regularly made and duly issued, it shall enforce obedience thereto by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise.

(d) (1) In case of violation of any order of the Commission for the payment of money the person to whom such award was made may file in the district court for the district in which such person resides, or in which is located any office of the carrier or other person to whom the order was directed, or in which is located any point of call on a regular route operated by the carrier, or in any court of general jurisdiction of a State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, a petition or suit setting forth briefly the causes for which he claims damages and the order of the Commission in the premises.

(2) In the district court the findings and order of the Commission shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and the petitioner shall not be liable for costs, nor shall he be liable for costs at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless they accrue upon his appeal. If a petitioner in a district court finally prevails, he shall be allowed a reasonable attorney's fee, to be taxed and collected as part of the costs of the suit.

(3) All parties in whose favor the Commission has made an award of reparation by a single order may be joined as plaintiffs, and all other parties to such order may be joined as defendants, in a single suit in any district in which any one such plaintiff could maintain a suit against any one such defendant. Service of process against any such defendant not found in that district may be made in any district in which is located any office of, or point of call on a regular route operated by, such defendant. Judgment may be entered in favor of any plaintiff against the defendant liable to that plaintiff.

(4) No petition or suit for the enforcement of an order for the payment of moneys shall be maintained unless filed within 1 year from the date of the order.

(e) The venue and procedure in the courts of the United States in suits brought to enforce, suspend, or set aside, in whole or in part, any order of the Commission shall, except as herein otherwise provided, be the same as in similar suits in regard to orders of the Commission entered pursuant to part I of this act, but such suits may also be maintained in any district court having jurisdiction of the parties.

(f) The Commission shall enter of record a written report of every investigation made under sections 223, and the following of this part, in which a hearing has been held, stating its conclusions, decision, and order, and, if reparation is awarded, the findings of fact on which the award is made, and shall furnish a copy of such report to all parties to the investigation. The Commission may publish such reports in the form best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publications shall, without further proof or authentication, be competent evidence of such reports in all courts of the United States and of the States, Territories, Districts, and possessions thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 17, to strike out:

UNLAWFUL ACTS AND PENALTIES

SEC. 231. (a) The provisions of section 221 (a), (c), (e), (f), and (g) shall apply in the administration of sections 223 and following:

(b) Whoever violates any provision of sections 223 and following, except where a different penalty is provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not to exceed $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 74, to insert:

COMMON CARRIERS BY WATER IN FOREIGN COMMERCE

SEC. 321. The power and duties vested in the United States Shipping Board by sections 14, 14 (a), 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32 of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended by the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, and the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, and the powers and duties vested in the United States Shipping Board by the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, and section 19 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended herein, or transferred to the Department of Commerce by the Executive order signed the 10th day of June 1933, pursuant to the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March 1933, with respect to common carriers by water in foreign commerce and persons included in the term "other person subject to this act" as defined in section 1 of the Shipping Act, 1916, are hereby transferred to and vested in and shall be exercised by the Commission. Any order issued by the Commission pursuant to such powers and duties shall be enforced in the same manner as heretofore provided for enforcement of the orders of the United States Shipping Board and violations of any such order shall subject the person guilty thereof to the same penalties or punishment as heretofore provided for such violation of the orders of the United States Shipping Board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 3, to change the section number from 232 to 322.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 9, after the word "member", to insert "or examiner", and in line 12, after the word "carrier", to strike out "or wharfinger" and insert "or in any carrier by railroad, motor vehicle, or other form of transporation", so as to read:

GENERAL PROVISIONS

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 322. (a) The Commission is authorized to employ, and to fix the compensation of, such experts, assistants, special agents, examiners, attorneys, and other employees as in its judgment may be necessary or advisable for the convenience of the public and for the efficient administration of this part.

(b) No member or examiner of the Commission shall hold any official relation to, or own any securities of, or be in any manner pecuniarily interested in any water carrier, or in any carrier by railroad, motor vehicle, or other form of transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 14, in the heading, before the word "transfer", to insert the word "repeals" and a comma, so as to read:

Repeals, transfer of employees, records, property, and appropriations, and effect of transfer of jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 17, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "233" and insert "323."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 16, to insert:

(a) The Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, sections 18 and 19 of the Shipping Act, 1916, and any other provisions of said Act, and any provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, which are inconsistent with this part are hereby repealed so far as they apply to matters within the jurisdiction vested in the Commission by the provisions of this part.

(b) Nothing in this part shall be construed to diminish any power or duty of the Commission under part I of this act with respect to water carriers, and no part of said part I applicable to water carriers shall be construed as repealed or modified by anything in this part, except when and to the extent inconsistent herewith.

(c) Nothing in this part shall be construed to alter or diminish other powers now vested in the Department of Commerce.

(d) Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect any law of navigation, the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, liabilities of vessels and their owners for loss or damage, or laws respecting seamen, or any other statute or maritime law, regulation, or custom not in conflict with the provisions of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 14, before the word "All", to strike out "Sec. 233. (a)" and insert "(e)", so as to read:

(e) All officers and employees of the Division of Regulation of the Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce are hereby transferred to the Commission, without change in classification or compensation; except that the Commission may provide for the adjustment of such classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such officers and employees may be assigned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 22, before the word "There", to strike out "(b)" and insert "(f)", so as to read:

(f) There are hereby transferred to the jurisdiction and control of the Commission all files, reports, records, tariff schedules, and all property (including office furniture and equipment), contracts, agreements, documents, or papers under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce relating to the duties, powers, and functions imposed upon and vested in the Commission by this part. All appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Department of Commerce for the said Division of Regulation shall be available for expenditure by the Commission for any and all objects of expenditure authorized by this part in the discretion of the Commission, without regard to the requirement of apportionment under the Antideficiency Act of February 27, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 12, before the word "All", to strike out "(e)" and insert "(g)"; and in line 14, after the word "by", to insert "the United States Shipping Board or", so as to read:

(g) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, or agreements which have been issued or authorized by the United States Shipping Board or the Department of Commerce under any provision of law repealed or amended by this part or in the exercise of duties, powers, or functions transferred to the Commission by this part and which are in effect at the time this part takes effect shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by the Commission or by operation of law. Any proceeding, hearing, or investigation commenced or pending before the Department of Commerce at the time this part takes effect shall be continued by the Commission in the same manner as though originally commenced before the Commission if such proceeding, hearing, or investigation (1) involves the administration of duties, powers, and functions transferred to the Commission by this part, or (2) involves the exercise of jurisdiction similar to that granted to the Commission under the provisions of this part. All records, reports, tariff schedules, contracts, or agreements transferred to the Commission under this part shall be available for use by the Commission to the same extent and be of the same effect as if such records were originally records of the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 10, before the word "The", to strike out "(d)" and insert "(h)"; in line 24, after the word "questions", to strike out "allowed" and insert "involved"; and on page 79, line 1, after the word "Commission" and the period, to strike out "Nothing in this part shall be construed to alter or diminish other powers vested in the Department of Commerce", so as to read:

(h) The provisions of this part shall not affect suits commenced prior to the time this part takes effect; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered in the same manner and with the same effect as if this part had not been passed. No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against any agency or officer of the United States in relation to the discharge of official duties shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, power, and duties from such agency or officer to the Commission under the provisions of this part, but the court, upon motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer showing the necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 4, to change the section number from 234 to 324, so as to read:

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 324. If any provision of this part or the application thereof to any person, or commerce, or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the part and the application of such provision to other persons, or commerce, or circumstances shall not be effected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 10, before the word "This", to strike out "235 (a)" and insert "325"; in line 13, after the word "of", to strike out "July" and insert "October"; in line 17, after the word "of" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "July" and insert "October"; and in line 18, before the numerals "1936", to strike out "January" and insert "April", so as to read:

TIME EFFECTIVE

SEC. 325. This part, except this section, which shall become effective immediately upon approval, shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of October 1935: Provided, however, That the Commission shall, if found by it necessary or desirable in the public interest, by general or special order, postpone the taking effect of any provision of this part to such time after the 1st day of October 1935 but not beyond the 1st day of April 1936, as the Commission shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, on page 9, line 25, after the word "Zone", to insert a proviso, as follows:

Provided, That the transportation of passengers or property to or from a place in the Philippine Islands or to or from a place in the Canal Zone shall be deemed transportation in foreign commerce and subject to the provisions of this part applicable to common carriers by water in foreign commerce: Provided further, however, That transfer or transshipment of passengers or property at the Canal Zone shall not affect the character as interstate commerce, within the meaning of this part, of transportation of such passengers or property between places in the United States or its territories or possessions.

Let me say that this amendment was suggested to me by the Coordinator, Mr. Eastman, who says:

As now worded, transportation to or from the Philippine Islands and Canal Zone would be left wholly without regulation. This result was not intended. The conditions affecting such transportation warrant treatment as foreign commerce, except as to traffic transferred or transshipped in interstate commerce at points in the Canal Zone. There is a considerable volume of this class of traffic.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, if we are going to have this bill, I do not care how many amendments we put on it; we could not possibly make it any worse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 42, line 2, I offer an amendment to strike out the first comma, insert the word " and ", and to strike out the words " and registrations."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 42, line 23, I move to restore the word " or " and to strike out the comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 45, line 2, I move to insert the word " such " after the word " more."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 46, lines 2 and 3, I move to strike out " or an interstate contract carrier by water."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. In the committee amendment on page 49, line 9, I move to strike out the words " by water."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to is reconsidered; the amendment to the amendment is agreed to and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 52, line 25, I move to strike out the words " or registration."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 54, line 3, I move to strike out the words " the preceding sections of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 54, line 4, I move to insert after the word " part " the words " relating to interstate transportation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 55, in lines 20 and 21, I move to strike out the words " or service ", and the same amendment in line 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 58, line 21, I move to strike out the words " or handled."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 59, line 5, I move to strike out the words " or handled."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 59, line 12, I move to strike out the words " or handling ", and the same amendment in line 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. In the committee amendment on page 74, lines 6 to 9, I move to strike out " and the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, and the powers and duties vested in the United States Shipping Board by the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933 "; and after the word " and ", in line 9, to insert " those vested in such Board by."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 20, line 17, after the word " water ", I move to insert the words " not excluded from all the provisions of this part pursuant to section 302 (b)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 30, line 6, I move to strike out " 90 days " and insert " 1 year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 30, lines 21 and 23, I move to strike out the words " 90-day period of limitation in subparagraph (2) or of the "; to strike out " subparagraph " in line 22 and insert " subparagraphs " and insert "(2) and " before "(3)."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

GOVERNMENT STATISTICAL SERVICES

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7590.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7590) to create a Central Statistical Committee and a Central Statistical Board, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce without amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this is a bill, as its title indicates, to create a central statistical committee and a central statistical board. We have had in operation since 1931 a Federal Statistics Board. With the coming of the depression, it was found necessary to enlarge that work of gathering statistical material. I should like to suggest four brief amendments.

On page 2, line 1, after the word " of ", I move to insert the words " the Secretary of the Treasury ", so that it will read:

The committee shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. In section 3, line 5, after the word " President ", I move to insert the words " with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. In section 5, on page 5, at the end of line 10, I move to strike out the period and insert the words " and to the President for transmittal to the Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. On line 18, page 5, I move to strike out the word " competitive."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I hope the bill may be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand there are some Senators who do not wish to have the unfinished business disposed of today. I understand from the Senator from Oregon that he prefers that the further consideration of the bill be deferred until Monday.

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Therefore, Mr. President, I shall move an executive session after the brief statement I am about to make.

It is my intention to move a recess until tomorrow, and it is not expected that any business will be transacted tomorrow, but when the Senate meets tomorrow a recess will be taken until next Monday, the meeting tomorrow being necessary for the reason that the Constitution limits the length of time that the Senate may recess or adjourn without the consent of the other body.

SENATOR GIBSON'S REPORT ON PHILIPPINES—EDITORIAL FROM MANILA BULLETIN

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me to present a request?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Manila Bulletin referring to the work of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] as a member of the committee who visited the Philippine Islands. It is an interesting and informative editorial, and I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Manila (P. I.) Bulletin]

THE GIBSON OF THE REPORT

One needs to know the political character that is ERNEST W. GIBSON to understand the report on the Philippines written by the Vermont Republican, who came to the islands as a member of a Democratic administration's congressional investigating commission.

The report, just made public, reflects the political independence of the 64-year-old Senator; the independence which characterized his method of conducting his own investigation while here and weighing facts for his own independent conclusions. To be understood the Gibson report should be studied against the background of the quiet, friendly, and independent survey the Senator made here; the survey which took him on the trip which he planned and which was made absolutely independently of what his fellow investigators were doing.

The independent character of his investigation and report is not mentioned here in any attempt to draw party lines or to create the impression that he was at outs with the other members of the mission. In fact, his findings so thoroughly harmonize with the views expressed by Senator TYDINGS and the other Senators that we hardly could understand why he wrote an independent report, if we did not take into consideration his independent line of thought and his policy of refusing to have his hands and his tongue tied by what somebody else says or some party dictates. He is a Republican, but he refuses to be governed in his thoughts and in his acts by machine politics. That is the explanation to the tone in his voice when he tells that he has been read out of his party on one or more occasions. It is the explanation of the independent attitude he took in making his Philippine investigation and writing his report thereon.

Probably it also plays a part in explaining the frankness with which he points to the dangers to the United States, to the Philippines, and to the peace of the world from the Tydings-McDuffie Act and tenders his regrets that he voted for that measure. There certainly is an independence of political thought as an appealing ring of sincerity in this paragraph from the Gibson report:

"It must be observed that so far as the political situation is concerned, we have enacted the independence law. In my opinion, it should not have received the sanction of the Congress in its present form. I voted for it, and now tender my regrets for having done so. But it has been approved by the Philippine Legislature and constitutes an obligation which we cannot ignore. The economic provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act can be changed and the imperfections and inequalities adjusted. Even the political set-up can be changed, but this must be done on the initiative of the Philippine people."

The conclusions reached by Senator GIBSON as result of his independent study are too clearly stated by him to require comment or repetition. His warnings ring too sincerely to need emphasizing. His whole report reads with far too much calm friendliness to call for magnifying paragraphs and underscoring lines. No one can help be impressed with the openness of his expression of pride at the progress that has been made here and the equally frank expression of regret that he lent his vote to the sanction of that which "will make America, once the hope of Christendom, the leader in the retreat of the white man" and "will put us in a position of leaving a people we have promised to help at the mercy of grasping imperialistic nations, unless and until a neutralization treaty can be negotiated—an idle dream."

Any person—Filipino, American, or foreigner—reading the Gibson report must consider the independent conservatism of the author of that report to appreciate the weight of the warnings contained in it. Senator GIBSON wrote his report in the same friendly but frank tones he used in making the inquiry which produced the report. Through the report he makes official the conclusions he expressed to local leaders after he had come and had seen and had been convinced.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting a treaty and a convention, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of the following officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey:

Carl Ingman Aslakson, of Minnesota, to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant in the Navy) by promotion from junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy), vice Carl A. Egner, promoted;

John Crawford Ellerbe, Jr., of South Carolina, to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant, junior grade, in the Navy) by promotion from aide (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy), vice Carl Ingman Aslakson, promoted; and Harold John Seaborg, of Indiana, to be air officer (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy) by promotion from deck officer, vice John C. Ellerbe, Jr., promoted.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Harold M. Stephens, of Utah, to be assistant to the Attorney General, vice William Stanley, resigned.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

MARINE CORPS NOMINATIONS

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, from the Committee on Naval Affairs I report favorably certain nominations for appointment in the Marine Corps. They are temporary appointments for 2 years, and the desire is that the appointees, numbering about 25, be commissioned on the 5th of July, at the time when a number of others whose nominations have been confirmed will be commissioned. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc, without reference to the calendar, and that the President be immediately notified of the confirmations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations reported by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION—HARRY L. HOPKINS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Harry L. Hopkins, of New York, to be Administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hopkins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ASSISTANT TO ATTORNEY GENERAL—HAROLD M. STEPHENS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the leader on the other side.

Hon. Harold M. Stephens was nominated 2 years ago for a position in the Department of Justice. During the intervening time he has had charge of the activities in connection with the enforcement of the antitrust laws. He is a lawyer of ability and eminence. Mr. William Stanley, who has been the Assistant to the Attorney General, resigned for the purpose of resuming private practice and Judge Stephens has been nominated to succeed him.

The Judiciary Committee has approved the nomination. It is very important that it be confirmed as soon as possible, because the duties of the position made vacant by the resignation of Mr. Stanley are imperative and need immediate attention. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. In view of the statement of the Senator from Utah, I have no objection.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. KING. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, July 4, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 3 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY

MARINE CORPS

To be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 1st day of July 1935

Wilmer E. Barnes
George H. Brockway
Custis Burton, Jr.
Kenyth A. Damke
Willard C. Fiske
Dixon Goen
Frank P. Hager, Jr.
Bruno A. Hochmuth
Joe C. McHaney
Hoyt McMillan
Albert F. Metze
Raymond L. Murray
Herman Nickerson, Jr.
John S. Oldfield
Wesley M. Platt
William E. Profitt, Jr.
Thomas F. Riley
George A. Roll
Robert E. Stannah
Leo F. Sulkosky
Harold G. Walker
Julian F. Walters
Chevey S. White

ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Harold M. Stephens to be Assistant to the Attorney General.

ADMINISTRATOR OF THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Harry L. Hopkins to be Administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

POSTMASTERS

CONNECTICUT

Mary W. Pinney, Bloomfield.
Nellie U. Schumey, Warehouse Point.

INDIANA

Cary A. Davis, Albion.
Gerald L. Knox, Converse.
Raymond McClain, Greenwood.
Harry R. Groat, Lagrange.
Dallas L. Mygrant, Markle.
John Isenbarger, North Manchester.
Dora Hungerford (Mr.), St. Paul.

MASSACHUSETTS

Dora E. Gagnon, Byfield.
John P. Connolly, Hopedale.
Sylvester D. Conley, Ipswich.
Annie E. Cronin, North Wilmington.
John Enneguess, South Acton.
David R. Kinsley, West Acton.

MONTANA

Richard E. Morris, Baker.
Frank R. Murray, Townsend.

NEBRASKA

John L. Withers, Elwood.
Irene H. Roberts, Paxton.

NORTH CAROLINA

Thomas B. Miller, Sr., Apex.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Adolph P. Koevenig, Hill City.
Herald A. Krebs, Quinn.

VERMONT

Louis F. Martin, Manchester Center.
Donald L. Mattison, Manchester Depot.
Carroll E. Jenkins, Orleans.
Clinton M. Hall, Wilmington.

WYOMING

Franklin P. Nelson, Evanston.
Alfred B. Mills, Lusk.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN AN ENROLLED BILL

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment or recess of the Senate following today's session, the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to sign the enrolled bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 8, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 5, 1935

The House met at 12 o'cock noon.

Rev. Charles H. Corkran, pastor Douglas Memorial Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and ever-living God, Father of us all and giver of every good and perfect gift, we bow reverently in Thy presence, knowing that Thou art good, just, and holy, and that Thou art the same yesterday, today, and forever. Thou art constant in all Thy benefits and mercies toward the children of men. Gracious Father, accept our sincere thanks and gratitude for Thy continued watchful care over us. Let Thy directing influence be in all our doings and grant us Thy continual help, so that in all things begun, continued, and ended we may glorify Thy name. Through Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 2, 1935, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8021) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate no. 9 to the foregoing bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6732. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. MCNARY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1633. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7590. An act to create a Central Statistical Committee and a Central Statistical Board, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 29. Concurrent resolution to authorize and direct the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of H. R. 8021, the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1936, to add an additional section making the appropriations therein effective as of July 1, 1935.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Speaker, may the RECORD show that my colleague from Iowa [Mr. EICHER] is excused indefinitely on account of illness?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OUR POST-OFFICE SYSTEM

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say something in behalf of my bill, H. R. 5273, the purpose of which is to take the post office out of politics and place its operation on a common-sense and businesslike basis.

From the inception of this Government by the adoption of the Constitution in 1789 we have had the post-office system operated by the United States Government. The only other affairs which have been operated by the United States for an equal length of time is the maintenance of the Army and the maintenance of the Navy.

The operation of the post office was deemed so essential by the founders of this Nation that it was specifically set forth in the Constitution itself that this power should belong to the Federal Government. No one has dared to attempt to make of the Army a political machine. Neither has any hardy soul ventured to set forth political affiliations as a basis of sailing on the high seas in behalf of the United States. Contemplating these basic truisms, how can any reasonable person do other than marvel that the third great original branch of governmental service should from its very inception be seized upon as the basis for partisan reward?

Is it because this man is a Democrat that he is better able to operate a certain post office than another man who may have better education, better training, better temperament than him? Perish the thought. Was our present Postmaster General Farley selected because of unusual predilections along the line of the conduct of the mails? I think I am reasonably safe in saying he probably did not even know where the post office was located in his home city. Republicans have been equally guilty when they have been in power. All too frequently this important post goes to the chairman of the national committee of the party which has been successful in the last election. It is then placed right in the middle of the spoils system in its worst form. Political obligations exist that must be paid off. Efficiency is sacrificed in order that someone may be rewarded for work he has done at the past elections.

What has been the inevitable result? One of the principal results has been that the Post Office Department has during a large percentage of the years been operated at a large deficit. This deficit then in turn has to be made up out of taxes. Taxes come from none but the ultimate consumer. Everything we eat, everything we wear, the property we live in must pay from day to day for this additional burden. Let no one be misled by soak-the-rich slogans. You may put the burden of taxation anywhere you please but in the final analysis it will be passed right on down to the consumer, and when it comes to the real necessities of life such as food, clothing, and shelter we all use those things in approximately equal amounts. You may hide them as you will but they are still there to be paid and the consumer pays the bill. Someone will probably say that the post-office deficits constitute a small part of our national tax bill. Granted that that may be true the facts are not to be disputed that it is the pennies that make up the dollar. No governmental magic has yet been devised nor is any in prospect that will enable the reduction of the total tax bill of the Nation without making the reductions in the component parts that go to make up the whole of governmental needs. Start cutting off this postal deficit and you will start in on the matter of reducing taxes.

Out in my State of Nebraska we are justly proud of our record in the matter of taxes levied by the State against its people. We have no income tax, no sales tax, no one of those new forms of taxation that undertake to shift the tax burden. Nebraska has no bonded indebtedness. Yet only a few short years ago we completed the construction of a new State capitol building at an approximate cost of $12,000,000, which is one of the most beautiful structures of its kind in the entire world. I mention these matters merely to illustrate my point that in spite of these things taxes can be kept low. We have kept them low by simply following that homely old adage, that may now seem in disrepute but is as true and applicable now as it was the day it was first uttered, that if we watch the pennies the dollars will look out for themselves.

But the matter of the cost is not the only consideration. There are other matters of equal or greater importance. One of the prime factors with the framers of the Constitution in placing the establishment of post offices and post roads with the Federal Government was to secure and keep secure reasonably rapid communication between the various sections of the country. It is so elemental that no one will rise to dispute me when I say that in postal work the longer a person works in this branch of service the more proficient he becomes. He is able to do his work faster, better, and more of it the more familiar he becomes with the various angles of the work. It is of little moment whether he be engaged in one branch of the work or another. Whether he be sorting mail or delivering it, whether he be engaged in any one of the many branches of the work, experience shows that in almost every instance he becomes more adept as he learns these various angles and the Government gets more for its dollar of pay and the patrons get a much improved service.

Since this service was set up in the Constitution almost a hundred and fifty years have elapsed. Our population has increased from 3,000,000 to 125,000,000 of people. Our borders have been extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It requires business sense and business ability to transport the mails quickly and expeditiously over that far-flung empire. The immortal Lincoln, in his first inaugural address, delivered amid the gathering tumult of clashing arms, found time to mention this in these words:

The mails, unless repelled, will be sent to all parts of the Union.

Mr. Speaker, I am not alone in my support of this measure. No less a person than Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS, who has so ably represented my State in both this body and in the Senate of the United States, is staunchly advocating this measure. No one can question his ability and patriotism. No one can honestly question his desire to do what is best for the greatest number of people. He has stated in the Senate of the United States that the politics played by the gentleman in charge of the Post Office Department was doing grave harm to the President of the United States. If that be true and we who know Senator NORRIS know that he did not make this charge lightly, then how much damage is politics doing to the transportation of the mails? However, you need not confine this solely to this administration. They will not always be in charge. They assure us that their intentions are the best. Their intentions may be good but their performance is tragic. I believe it was old John Calvin who declared, "Hell is paved with good intentions"—and then with perfectly good intentions he burned Servetus at the stake—the foremost scientist of the time. Marcus Aurelius, universally credited with being a man of the most excellent intentions, roasted St. Cecilia before a slow fire and murdered myriads of Christians.

It is not enough that a public officer have good intentions. He must have the ability to properly perform his job, and his performance of that job in the important handling of the mails must not be impeded by the knowledge that the holding of his job is dependent on how he performs politically. Whence comes this money that is being squandered and wasted? The Government of the United States is itself a pauper save for a few public buildings and things of that kind it can be said to own.

The money used to pay postal deficits is the money forced from the people of the United States by taxation—the bonds issued are a first mortgage upon all the property of all the people of the United States. They are likewise a first mortgage on the energies of all who live—nay, more, they are a first mortgage upon the shadowy hosts that yet shall pass across this "bank of time."

What is the remedy? There is no single remedy. But take the Post Office out of politics and you will have accomplished much.

MAJ. PATRICK H. WINSTON

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5203) for the relief of Maj. Patrick H. Winston may be re-referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the futility of wasting as much as $150,000 of the people's tax money to find out something that every one of us already knows all about.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, of course, the gentleman has reference to the Senate investigation of the utility lobby against the holding company bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not mention the Senate. Neither my request nor my remarks will in any way violate our parliamentary rules.

Mr. RANKIN. I know; but that is what the gentleman refers to, and that investigation ought to be made, by all means. It will likely reveal the most outrageous saturnalia of propaganda, pressure, and corruption that has ever been revealed around this Capitol. I hope the gentleman will not obstruct the Senate or the Senate committee in making a thorough investigation of that powerful lobby.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not against a proper investigation. On the contrary, I am for a thorough investigation. We are going to have one in the House, conducted by our Rules Committee. It is not going to cost any money. We can conduct one without any money. We already know that every big utility company in the United States had lobbyists here trying to keep the bill from passing which we passed the other day. No new facts will be developed that will be worth 5 cents to the people. All money that may be spent on an investigation will be wasted.

I am tired of seeing public money wasted. No good whatever will be accomplished by spending a lot of money on an investigation. For a few thousand dollars any competent committee ought to be able to make a thorough investigation. They cannot find out a thing that every single Member of this House does not already know. My remarks are going to cover the futility of wasting a tremendous amount of money in any legislative body on investigations that bring about nothing of value to the people.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANKIN. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Texas that in the first place it is none of our business what the Senate does.

Mr. BLANTON. I have not in any way referred to the Senate. It is some of our business if we can stop $150,000 of the people's tax money from being wasted. I am considering the advisability of registering a vigorous protest against anybody wasting money out of the Public Treasury to the amount of $150,000, which is a large sum.

Mr. RANKIN. It is imperative that they go to the bottom of this corruption. Besides, the Senate has a right to summon witnesses and put them under oath, and the House committee has not.

It may not be necessary to spend the entire amount asked for, but whether it is or not, this investigation by the Senate committee ought not to be interfered with.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in no way interfering with the Senate. I have not mentioned the Senate. The Senate has not authorized any sum to be wasted. I hope that the Senate will provide that no money shall be wasted. But as a citizen of the United States, and as a Representative of the people in the Congress of the United States, I have the right, and it is my duty, to register a protest against anybody wasting $150,000 that will produce not one thing of value to the people, and will uncover no facts other than those which are already known to every posted Member of this Congress.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman is going to jump on the Senate, I will have to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to jump on the Senate. My remarks shall be within our rules.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATMAN. Will there be a RECORD of the proceedings printed today or will it be printed next Monday?

The SPEAKER. That is controlled by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. PATMAN. I understand there will not be a RECORD printed until Monday now.

The SPEAKER. That is under the control of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANKIN. But it will contain the proceedings of today?

The SPEAKER. When it is printed the Chair assumes, of course, it will contain the proceedings of today.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 8021. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its order heretofore entered, adjourned until Monday, July 8, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

405. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting a report showing the special assistants employed under the appropriation "Pay of special assistant attorneys", contained in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1935, approved April 7, 1934, the rates of compensation of such assistants, and the amounts paid; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

406. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to withhold the pay of officers, warrant officers, enlisted men, and nurses of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to cover indebtedness to the United States under certain conditions; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WALLGREN: Committee on Roads. S. 1374. An act authorizing the survey, location, and construction of a highway to connect the northwestern part of continental United States with British Columbia, Yukon Territory, and the Territory of Alaska; with amendment (Rept. No. 1429). Referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. H. R. 7814. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to grant to the State of California an easement over certain land of the United States in Tehama County, Calif., for highway purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1430). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. HOEPPEL: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 1618. A bill for the relief of Anna McDonald; with amendment (Rept. No. 1431). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HOEPPEL: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 4059. A bill for the relief of Ella B. Kimball, daughter and only heir of Jeremiah Simonson; without amendment (Rept. No. 1432). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HOEPPEL: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 6356. A bill to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Joseph G. Grissom; with amendment (Rept. No. 1433). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BEITER: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 7821. A bill for the relief of the estate of Benjamin A. Pillsbury (William J. Pillsbury, executor); without amendment (Rept. No. 1434). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BEITER: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 8220. A bill for the relief of Helen Mahar Johnson; without amendment (Rept. No. 1435). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BEITER: Committee on War Claims. House Joint Resolution 223. Joint resolution conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction of the claim of the Rodman Chemical Co. against the United States; with amendment (Rept. No. 1436). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McCORMACK: A bill (H. R. 8753) to amend certain sections of title IV of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, relating to the taxes on gasoline and lubricating oils; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H. R. 8754) to amend chapter 9 of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WERNER: A bill (H. R. 8755) to provide additional funds for the completion of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, in the State of South Dakota, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HEALEY: Resolution (H. Res. 286) favoring use of the good offices of United States Government for the reestablishment of places of worship and opportunity for unrestricted exercise of their religious beliefs to American citizens resident in or visiting the Republic of Mexico; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUNNER: A bill (H. R. 8756) to restore Joseph Theodore Kingsley to the emergency officers' retirement list; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOEPPEL: A bill (H. R. 8757) granting a pension to Della Means; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 8758) for the relief of Doris Allen; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9076. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, urging the granting of funds by the Federal Government for the immediate removal of elevated railway structures in the city of Boston and the construction of subways in substitution therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9077. By Mr. BOYLAN: Resolutions adopted at the quarterly meeting of the National Board of Officers of the Catholic War Veterans, at their headquarters in New York City, regarding stamping out of communism in the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9078. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of citizens and residents of Gardiner, N. Y., protesting against the condition of affairs in Mexico, and urging that Congress take some steps to rectify this un-American and un-Christian government of the Mexican people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9079. By Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts: Resolutions favoring the granting of funds by the Federal Government for the immediate removal of elevated railway structures in the city of Boston and the construction of subways in substitution therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9080. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of Hon. Beauford H. Jester, Corsicana, Tex., favoring adequate regulation of trucks and busses; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9081. By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Petition of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring the granting of funds by the Federal Government for the immediate removal of elevated railway structures in the city of Boston and the construction of subways in substitution therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9082. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the city of San Juan, P. R.; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days Wednesday, July 3, and Thursday, July 4, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On July 2, 1935:

S. 2738. An act to authorize the use of park property in the District of Columbia and its environs by the Boy Scouts of America at their national jamboree.

On July 5, 1935:

S. 1958. An act to diminish the causes of labor disputes burdening or obstructing interstate and foreign commerce, to create a National Labor Relations Board, and for other purposes; and

S. 2642. An act to incorporate The American National Theater and Academy.

CONDOLENCES ON DEATH OF THE LATE SENATOR CUTTING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a resolution adopted by the Provincial Board of Iloilo, P. I., expressing condolences on the death of Hon. Bronson Cutting, late a Senator from the State of New Mexico, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson	Pittman
Ashurst	Connally	Keyes	Pope
Austin	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Bachman	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Lewis	Robinson
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Russell
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Schall
Barkley	Donahey	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bilbo	Duffy	McGill	Shipstead
Black	Fletcher	McKeller	Smith
Bone	George	McNary	Steiwer
Borah	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gibson	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Minton	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Holt	Overton	White

Mr. VANDENBERG. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is absent because of illness.

Mr. NYE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] are absent on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SIGNING OF AN ENROLLED BILL

The VICE PRESIDENT announced that, under authority granted by the Senate on the 4th instant, he signed on Friday, July 5, 1935, the enrolled bill (H. R. 8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, said bill having been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and previously reported by the Committee on Enrolled Bills as having been examined and found truly enrolled, and that it was delivered to the committee to be presented to the President of the United States.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATE, JUDICIAL EXPENSES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 111)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia in the amount of $617, fiscal year 1935, for the payment of judicial expenses, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE—OIL LANDS IN FORMER NAVAL RESERVES (S. DOC. NO. 109)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1936, for protection of the interests of the United States in matters affecting oil lands in former naval reserves, as directed by law, amounting to $40,000, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE—DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 110)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1935, amounting to $9,000,000, for the Department of Agriculture, to carry into effect those provisions of the act approved June 29, 1935, providing for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ELECTRIC RATE SURVEY IN NORTH DAKOTA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a compilation completed through the electric rate survey of the domestic and residential rates in effect in the State of North Dakota on January 1, 1935, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a memorial of several citizens of the United States, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Wheeler-Rayburn public utilities bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by a convention of the Massachusetts State Council, Knights of Columbus, favoring a senatorial investigation of alleged religious persecutions in the Republic of Mexico as provided by the so-called "Borah resolution", and protesting against alleged antireligious conditions and policies pursued in that country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a meeting of the board of directors of the Independent Oil Men's Association of New England, protesting against the enactment of the so-called "Thomas Federal petroleum act" and the substitute offered in lieu thereof, which was ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. WALSH presented a letter from Russell T. Fisher, secretary of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, Boston, Mass., enclosing copy of resolutions adopted by the Northern Cotton Mills Policy Committee and the board of government of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COTTON MANUFACTURERS,
Boston, Mass., June 28, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: We are enclosing copy of a resolution unanimously passed by the Northern Cotton Mills Policy Committee, representing all of the northern cotton mills, and in addition approved by the board of government of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, a trade association representing this same group of mills.

The situation which would be created by the passage of the amendments as now drafted is so serious that we respectfully urge you to give this matter your careful attention.

Yours very truly,

RUSSELL T. FISHER.

Whereas there has been passed by the House of Representatives and is now pending before the Senate a bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act; and

Whereas section 29 of said bill seeks (1) to prevent any suit or proceeding by a taxpayer in any court to secure a refund of processing taxes previously assessed or paid; (2) to prevent, in advance of payment, any judicial determination of the constitutionality of any tax subsequently imposed; and (3) to impose conditions upon obtaining a refund of any such tax subsequently imposed which are impossible of fulfillment, thereby in effect depriving the taxpayer of all remedies; and

Whereas the Policy Committee of the Northern Cotton Mills and the board of government of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers view with alarm this obvious effort on the part of the administration to collect from the citizens of the country in the guise of taxes money which it may have no lawful right to collect, and to retain such money as its own without remedy on the part of the taxpayer: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Policy Committee of the Northern Cotton Mills and the board of government of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers hereby declare themselves as opposed to the passage of such bill in its present form or in any form which has the effect of depriving taxpayers of the right to have the constitutionality of such taxes judicially determined, or which imposes unreasonable conditions and restrictions upon the exercise of such right, and condemn the present attempt of the administration to circumvent the Constitution of the United States through the denial of such right; and further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be urged to strike section 29 from the proposed bill, and, in the event of a denial of this request, that Congress be urged at least to modify the provisions of section 29 so as to give to taxpayers a right to secure as speedily as possible a determination by the United States Supreme Court of the constitutionality of the processing tax.

HOURS AND WAGES OF LABOR—RESOLUTION OF GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE

Mr. GUFFEY presented a resolution unanimously adopted by the Conference of Governors at Biloxi, Miss., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas business has been greatly benefited and working conditions vastly improved in the last 2 years under the wise leadership of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt; and

Whereas it is essential to our national economic security that a Nation-wide program providing for minimum wages of pay and maximum hours of employment be maintained in the interest of the preservation of amicable relationships between capital and labor, and the enhancement of the purchasing power of the people in this country to the end that unemployment be reduced: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this Governors' Conference that these ideals should be encouraged and furthered throughout this Nation.

STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ON SIGNING LABOR-DISPUTES BILL

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD the text of a statement issued by President Roosevelt upon signing the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill", as printed in the Washington Post of the 6th instant.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF WAGNER BILL STATEMENT

(Public Law 198)

President Roosevelt issued the following statement when he signed the Wagner labor disputes bill yesterday:

"This act defines, as a part of our substantive law, the right of self-organization of employees in industry for the purpose of collective bargaining, and provides methods by which the Government can safeguard that legal right. It establishes a National Labor Relations Board to hear and determine cases in which it is charged that this legal right is abridged or denied, and to hold fair elections to ascertain who are the chosen representatives of employees.

"A better relationship between labor and management is the high purpose of this act. By assuring the employees the right of collective bargaining it fosters the development of the employment contract on a sound and equitable basis. By providing an orderly procedure for determining who is entitled to represent the employees, it aims to remove one of the chief causes of wasteful economic strife. By preventing practices which tend to destroy the independence of labor, it seeks, for every worker within its scope, that freedom of choice and action which is justly his.

"The National Labor Relations Board will be an independent quasi-judicial body. It should be clearly understood that it will not act as mediator or conciliator in labor disputes. The function of mediation remains, under this act, the duty of the Secretary of Labor and of the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor. It is important that the judicial function and the mediation function should not be confused. Compromise, the essence of mediation, has no place in the interpretation and enforcement of the law.

"This act, defining rights, the enforcement of which is recognized by the Congress to be necessary as both an act of common justice and economic advance, must not be misinterpreted. It may eventually eliminate one major cause of labor disputes, but it will not stop all labor disputes. It does not cover all industry and labor, but is applicable only when violation of the legal right of independent self-organization would burden or obstruct interstate commerce. Accepted by management, labor, and the public with a sense of sober responsibility and of willing cooperation, however, it should serve as an important step toward the achievement of justice and peaceful labor relations in industry."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) authorizing Brig. Gen. C. E. Nathorst, Philippine Constabulary, retired, to accept such decorations, orders, medals, or presents as have been tendered him by foreign governments, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1018) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2833) for the relief of Mrs. Jack J. O'Connell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1019) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2834) to provide for the appointment of Ira E. Porter as a second lieutenant, United States Army, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1020) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2657) for the relief of Harold Dukelow, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1022) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3430) to amend the act approved May 14, 1930, entitled "An act to reorganize the administration of Federal prisons; to authorize the Attorney General to contract for the care of United States prisoners; to establish Federal jails, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1021) thereon.

Mr. DIETERICH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 478. A bill to amend a part of section 1 of the act of May 27, 1908, chapter 200, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 592) (Rept. No. 1023); and

S. 479. A bill to amend section 126 of the Judicial Code, as amended (Rept. No. 1024).

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2340. A bill to authorize the Attorney General to determine the fees to be paid in connection with the taking of depositions on behalf of the United States (Rept. No. 1025); and

S. 2603. A bill to authorize the Attorney General to determine and pay certain claims against the Government for damage to person or property in sum not exceeding $500 in any one case (Rept. No. 1026).

Mr. GUFFEY, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 1567) for the relief of certain claimants in cases of contracts connected with prosecution of the World War, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1027) thereon.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 2577) to repeal the provisions of the homestead laws requiring the cultivation of homestead entries, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1028) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 3206) for the relief of Col. Richard M. Cutts, United States Marine Corps; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3207) for the relief of Miriam Grant; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LONERGAN:

A bill (S. 3208) to provide protection by registration of designs for textiles and other materials; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3209) for the relief of Frank E. O'Rourke; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 3210) to refer the claim of the Menominee Tribe of Indians to the Court of Claims with the absolute right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3211) to provide for direct review by the Supreme Court in cases involving the constitutionality of the statutes of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 3212) granting a pension to George T. Hodges; and

A bill (S. 3213) granting a pension to Clark Huggins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE:

A bill (S. 3214) granting a pension to John Wesley Heal; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) approving the construction and establishment of buildings and facilities for, and the production and operation of, a Pan American Exposition and International Merchandising Mart, at Miami, Fla., and authorizing the Director of the Public Works Administration to cooperate in making available certain funds therefor; providing for the participation by the United States therein; and to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at such exposition to be admitted without payment of tariff; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills, and they were referred as indicated below:

S. 2955. A bill for the relief of Emil Zumbrunn; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 2963. A bill to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. 1109), relating to the restoration of Fort McHenry, in the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES MEMORIAL FUND

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 237, being Calendar No. 980, be taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on the Library. I have conferred with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and it is agreeable to him that such action be taken. The joint resolution relates to the establishment of the Oliver Wendell Holmes trust fund or gift to the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment, Mr. BORAH submitted two amendments, and Mr. BYRD submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE—AMENDMENT

Mr. BONE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2582) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. KING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8554, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Under the heading "Health Department" (District of Columbia), on page 13, after line 10, to insert the following:

"Salaries: For an additional amount for personal services, including the same objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936, $61,240."

Mr. KING subsequently, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which the foregoing amendment was referred, reported it favorably, and the amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NORBECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8554, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 46, line 16, after the word "band", to insert "which have not been tried or submitted."

On page 46, line 19, after the word "the" where it occurs the first time, to insert "direct."

On page 46, line 24, at the beginning of the line, to insert the word "direct."

On page 47, at the end of line 6, to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

"Provided, That expenditures in fulfillment or in partial fulfillment of any treaty or contractual obligation with any Indian tribe or band; or expenditures in discharge of any obligation assumed by the United States, or in the furtherance of any governmental policy; or any expenditure made prior to the date of any settlement, accord, or satisfaction by treaty, act, or contract with any Indian tribe or band shall not be held to be expended gratuitously; and expenditures for the salary, expenses, housing, and subsistence of officers or employees of the United States, and expenditures for relief or for public works or for any public benefit, shall not be held to be expenditures for the benefit of any Indian tribe or band; and in any and all cases referred to in this section the United States shall be required to prove the actual direct benefit accruing to each such tribe or band of Indians, and the Court of Claims shall fix the amount of the offset in accordance with principles of law and equity established in Indian cases."

LYDA BEERY

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 166), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1935, to Lyda Beery, sister of Lutie M. Hart, late an assistant clerk to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate she was receiving by law at the time of her death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

FEDERAL TAXES—ADDRESS BY SENATOR VANDENBERG

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, last evening the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] delivered a very able address on Federal taxation, which was broadcast over the Columbia network. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My fellow countrymen, the United States suddenly confronts a new Federal tax problem. It has been unexpectedly precipitated upon our people from a volatile White House. It involves considerations vital to all, because no tax was ever yet devised which did not ultimately involve mass citizenship. Let us put first things first, and face the facts.

Fact no. 1: Although the President's annual address to the Congress last January asserted no new taxes would be necessary in 1936 and although his congressional spokesmen were saying this same comforting thing as recently as 3 weeks ago, he suddenly switched his thinking on June 19 and demanded new and punitive levies on a few high incomes, a few high inheritances, and on large corporations.

Fact no. 2: The President evidently originally intended his vague homily to be an ultimate rather than an immediate mandate. Apparently he had no thought of present action. Indeed, he specifically said the questions were "too complicated and difficult" to be adequately answered prior to this session's adjournment. For the moment he was wholly right in this latter aspect. Evidently he figured he was simply launching an adroit political flank movement to surround and confound his own restless and vocal left-wingers. But the left-wingers promptly and gleefully put him on the spot. They demanded immediate action as proof of good faith. They were in no mood for pale promises which might never mature.

Fact no. 3: The President was caught on the horns of his own dilemma. He immediately dumped his own original purpose and deserted his party spokesmen. He, too, demanded immediate action. By not being too specific, he left open certain lines of retreat. But his insistent mandate was imperious and immediate. It was one of those summary moments for which the new deal is famous. Dictators often are that way.

Fact no. 4: His loyal party servants, dazed but dogged, faithfully responded, with vigor and vertigo, and at once set themselves to the mad task of rewriting the basic tax laws of the Republic in 72 hours. Thereupon a miracle occurred. They faced severe revolt. It was more than a punch-drunk Congress and a pump-primed country could stand. It was the last straw. It seems that there are limits to American patience. The explosion rattled the White House rafters and produced a salutary pause which communicated itself to Capitol Hill.

Fact no. 5: The President hastily shifted back again—or that was the way it seemed to most innocent bystanders. Blandly, but not too successfully, he blamed the news hawks for misrepresenting him. His House and Senate leaders—as agile as the man on the flying trapeze—just as hastily reverted to their own original sanities. They were groggy but glad. The process of somewhat orderly and relatively deliberative legislation was resumed. A new tax bill will now be written with some semblance of rational consideration for the realities, and with at least a limited permit to affected citizens—who are about to be separated from their money—to speak their piece.

Thus it is that new tax laws are now in process of more orderly development, although there is yet no evidence of the pious purpose asserted in the original Presidential message, as follows: "If a government is to be prudent, its taxes must produce ample revenues without discouraging enterprise." I applaud the sentiment; but I deplore its total absence in the program up to date. This leads to another set of facts:

Fact no. 1: The Federal Treasury is racing merrily toward potential insolvency. During the past 12 months it has paid out $13,812 every passing minute of the day and night. In 2 years we have spent more than fourteen billions, while we have taken in less than seven billions. This takes no account of other billions we have guaranteed. This spending spree still continues at break-neck speed. We charge the bills to posterity. We pillage our grandchildren. We still spend $2 for every dollar we take in. It is only a question of time when such a crazy process ends like the career of any other wastrel.

Fact no. 2: In the face of such arithmetic, there are but two possible results. Either we go to deliberate monetary inflation to cheat our debts and debtors—and, simultaneously, to ruin ourselves as all other people, similarly tainted, have ruined themselves; or we balance our Budget, pay as we go, and restabilize the public credit by heavily increased taxation. I digress to say that no amount of taxes could be as burdensome and as confiscatory as uncontrolled monetary inflation, which would cruelly crucify us all. This is not a matter of argument. It is an historic axiom. There are a few natural laws which no regime, no matter how infatuated with its own benevolence and power, can repeal or evade.

Fact no. 3: We cannot escape the need for new taxes. This need is already here. Paying out has been a happy holiday. Paying back in is something else. To the extent he asserts the need for revenue, the President is right. But his own proposals and those of his administration thus far are inadequate, incomplete, and pathetically superficial. They strain at a gnat and swallow the camel. It is politics rather than economics. To this extent the President is ominously wrong.

Thus we now collide with another set of very hard and very cold facts which we shall ignore at our peril.

Fact no. 1: The administration's new tax program, as thus far disclosed, will raise far less than $400,000,000 annually. Even at this promised maximum—which few realists remotely concede—this is only about 10 percent of 1 year's deficit at the present rate of spending. It curries popular favor by pretending to "soak the rich." It may thus produce votes. But it will not produce revenue. The total income of all the multimillionaires thus marked for slaughter would not pay the President's bills for 60 days. Furthermore, such a program cannot possibly satisfy our real "wealth redistributors" whom the President apparently hopes to placate. It is not a tax program. It is not even a good soapbox formula.

Fact no. 2: The formula contains no suggestion of recurrent economy. It does not even flirt with a balanced Budget. There is no longer even the familiar promise—often made, always broken—that we are in sight of a purpose to start to get ready to commence to begin living within our means. There continues to be total forgetfulness in respect to the President's own solemn warning of 2 years ago: "Most liberal governments are wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy." Indeed, this rapidly is becoming an administration's epitaph instead of its aspiration. The present tax formula proposes simply to pour more public money down a bottomless well. It would pretend to refill a barrel with the spigot and the bunghole open.

No wonder the country gets jittery in such a presence—a country which would literally leap into a recovery stride if its Government would give it a convalescent chance. No wonder there are prayers for more lucid intervals.

It is time to set our house in order and to quit these hectic detours from the straight road. A passion for reform should not ignore the simple truth that we must have recovery first in order to have anything worth reforming.

What does this mean in respect to the taxes which we discuss this evening? The answer is in another and final set of facts.

Fact no. 1: Rational economy again must hunt a balanced Budget as speedily as possible. It is far more important not to spend needlessly than it is to tax for extravagances, experiments, and wastes. At best, the burden will be heavy for some time to come. The more the reason to husband our resources lest we exhaust the only reliance upon which the victims of this depression can depend.

Fact no. 2: With rational economy in practice, and fewer brainstorms to salvage, a new tax program should raise enough money to do the job. Of course, "the rich" must pay—and pay up to the hilt. But let us not delude ourselves. The income-tax base must be broadened and all the brackets must accept a heavier load. There is no other way to get the money. Inevitably millions of our citizens must contribute, each according to his ability to pay. Nor will they unduly complain if they may be assured that they are buying national solvency. Otherwise they will have a right to complain, and bitterly. Incidentally, when this broad tax program arrives—and citizens realize there is no Santa Claus—the popularity of loose spending will suffer a wholesome set-back.

Fact no. 3: The tax program must be practical or it is worse than useless. It is simple folly to try to cheat the law of diminishing returns. Instead of distributing wealth we may destroy it. I am frank to say I believe in using inheritance taxes to achieve social objectives. But there is a point beyond which the break-up of a large fortune may ruin the industry which sustains it and thus, in turn, ruin thousands of its related employees. I should not relish, for example, the spectacle of a great motor industry which the Government takes over for inheritance taxes and delivers, let us say, to Dr. Tugwell or Jim Farley or Harry Hopkins and his "boondogglers" to operate. There are some calamities which the country could not survive.

Fact no. 4: Corporation taxes are business taxes. Recuperated private business is our hope for the future. It must carry its full share of the tax load; but it must not be driven to discouragement or despair. It must not be nominated for punitive slaughter. At the moment it may be better to emphasize taxation upon the individual, after the earnings of business have been distributed to him.

Fact no. 5: Any such program must include the elimination of tax-exempt bonds. Otherwise, these "rich", instead of being "soaked" (to use the favorite language of the demagogue), will continue to slip through the back door to enjoy relative immunity. Thus they may laugh at their would-be executions. Yet the administration formula does not appear thus far to include this little item, although the President spoke bravely of it in his first pronouncement. Without it any program is a snare and a transparent delusion.

This is in conclusion: It were better for this weary and benumbed Congress to recess for a few recuperative months while a real program is developed to fit our whole necessity. None of these new taxes will be collected until next year anyway. There is no gain in haste. There may be tragic loss. It were better that seasoned judgments should reach a sustained and healthy conclusion. There are some things too desperately important to all America to be settled on the vagrant basis of an off-hand hunch. Pell-mell statesmanship is always hazardous—never more so than now. In any event it is past time for prodigal Uncle Sam to return to the fiscal sanity of his fathers.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CLARK BEFORE JEWISH VETERANS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on July 4, 1935, at the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, before the Jewish Veterans of the United States.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Commander, distinguished guests, ladies, and gentlemen, I feel deeply honored to be invited here on this patriotic occasion to this great national shrine to participate in the celebration of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States. Within these sacred grounds where are gathered the remains of veterans of all our wars, where "on Fame's eternal camping grounds their silent tents are spread, and glory guards with solemn round the bivouac of the dead", within these hallowed precincts where the unknown hero who sleeps in yonder tomb after giving his life for his country may be Jew or gentile, Catholic or Protestant, of German, English, French, or any other descent, while or black, rich or poor, we cannot fail to be impressed with the universality and uniformity of patriotism which have gone to make up the American people. Here in the presence of so many splendid Jewish veterans of the World War, representatives of a great multitude throughout the land, whose heroic services were commended by every commander under whom they served and gladly recognized by the comrades who shared their sacrifice, I desire to speak to you of the bitter aftermath of war, of the saturnalia of brutal persecution, of the jealousies, the ugly suspicions, the rancorous hates which seem to inevitably follow in the train of war.

To you, sprung from the loins of that great race which for ages has suffered persecution and risen above it, which has preserved its racial integrity and its intellectual and moral greatness through hardship and cruelty unparalleled in the world's history, it is unnecessary to expatiate upon the horrors of war, its brutality, its innate inhumanity. Yet in the largest and most tragic sense the aftermath of war is more dreadful than the war itself. The victims of starvation in the present world-wide depression, the sufferers under persecution and oppression so hideous that it would have disgraced the Dark Ages, are as truly the victims of war as those who were torn by shell or slashed by bayonet in the war itself.

Today, 17 years after the close of the war which was to make the "world safe for democracy", the "war to end war", we find democracy prostrate throughout most of the world, most of the countries in the world under the iron heel of brutal dictatorship, and in one country at least a deliberate effort being made to stamp out every vestige not only of liberty and democracy but culture and religion as well. Twenty years ago republicanism was marching eastward in Europe. Today democracy and liberalism throughout the world fight with their back to the wall and all as the inevitable consequence of war.

No one who is familiar with history, no one who is even moderately conversant with the events of our own times, no thinking man or woman who knows the vast contributions in peace times and the heroic sacrifices in war times of Jewish citizens in every country which they have made their home, can fail to recognize that the assertion in some quarters in Europe that Jewish citizens lacked patriotism is a lie, and that the prescription and persecution which that great people are now undergoing is an abomination in the sight of the Lord. Who can tell but that as the unknown hero who sleeps here may have been a Jew, so may the German hero who lies in a similar tomb in Berlin have been of the same blood. The fact that a great people of the highest cultural attainments inhabiting a land which was the very cradle of liberty, as we understand it, can be dragooned into engaging in such a campaign of hate and savagery is the best example of the frightful results of war.

It is a fact, ugly, tragic, lamentable, but true nevertheless, that the prospect for war abroad is far more ominous and imminent today than it appeared at this season in 1914. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, justly denominated as a statesman in uniform, the American member of the Supreme War Council, once said that all of the causes of the World War could be summed up in one: "Too many men wandering around Europe with guns in their hands." And yet today, more than 2 decades after the outbreak of that dreadful struggle, there are a million and a half more men under arms in Europe than there were in 1914. Expenditures in preparation for war exceed those of 1914 by billions of dollars. At any moment a spark may set off a conflagration more deadly and more devastating than the World War, of which the present world-wide depression is only the logical and inevitable aftermath.

No competent economist who studies the calamitous events of the last two decades can fail to realize that we are today still paying the bill for the Great War in the starvation, misery, and death which the present awful depression has imposed upon the nations of the earth. We are still paying the bill in innocent suffering for the madness which engulfed the world.

Too few of us have realized that the doctrine of "peace on earth, good will toward men" represents not only the greatest moral declaration of all times but the greatest economic necessity ever expressed.

The nations of the world must finally subscribe either to the doctrine of war and want or they must subscribe to the doctrine of peace and plenty. So long as the world expects and prepares for wars, it will have them. But even if it were true that preparation for war would end war—a proposition denied by the whole history of the world—the present rate of expenditure for armament will soon absolutely bankrupt the world, even without the aid of another war.

Yet men are so filled with fear by the propaganda of armament makers that it is commonly said that peace is an idealistic conception of which there is yet no hope of attainment. When men say that the time is not yet come for stopping armament expenditures, they are saying that the time has not yet come for economic recovery. Nations can and will insist on saving expenditures on armament when their peoples realize that the profits of munition makers are the chief cause of their poverty.

The last war was the most horrible in all history. That the next will be still more terrible and destructive no one who has even casually observed the advance of modern science and listened for even a moment to the predictions of military experts can doubt. In terms of the war system the era of coal is past; the World War was fought in the petroleum age; the next combat will be waged amid the unpredictable horrors of the electrical era. For the statesmen of the world to permit the present insane competition in armaments to continue with the certainty that it will precipitate in this generation or the next, another cataclysm of unimaginable horrors, is stupendous and incredible folly. For the statesmanship of our own country to fail to guard against a repetition of our tragic experience of the World War when we literally drifted into a war between other nations is inexcusable and criminal negligence.

In the past year the Senate Munitions Committee, of which I have been privileged to be a member, has conducted the most comprehensive investigation and study of the activities of our arms merchants and other propagandists for war which has ever been attempted.

We have had occasion to examine the tortuous record of our diplomatic correspondence during the last war, and have had access to files still held to be confidential by Government departments, and which I am not now privileged to discuss, but which I hope to be able to devise means to make public to the people of the United States at an early date.

In the course of that investigation we learned how certain munition manufacturers made hundreds of millions of dollars out of a war which cost the taxpayers of the United States scores of billions. We listened to the testimony of a munitions magnate who admitted personally drawing down something over three millions in bonuses during the 2 years of war for conducting his ordinary business, and yet who protested in terms of outrage against paying the soldiers of the war a pitiful bonus of a dollar to a dollar and a quarter a day for actual service.

We learned that after the sailing of the first munitions ship in 1914 we were irrevocably committed to the path which led to war, since any change in our laws as to permitting sales of munitions or loans to belligerents would itself have been a violation of our policy of neutrality.

As a result of this investigation the Munitions Committee prepared and reported a bill providing for the payment of a war as the war is fought, the most drastic limitation of profits during the period of the war, and the drafting of the facilities and personnel of industry. This measure has received the approval of the Munitions and Military Affairs Committees and is now awaiting action by the Finance Committee. Its passage will go far to prevent our embroilment in another war and, if war should come, would to a large extent wipe out the outrageous iniquities of sacrifice in the last war.

As a further result of this investigation Senator NYE and myself have introduced three resolutions which, taken together, are designed and believed to afford a structure of neutrality laws which will permit the United States to remain free from embroilment in future wars between other nations. Two of these resolutions have been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and action is expected on the third at an early date. Time does not permit more than the briefest outline of the policy embodied in these resolutions, but in short they embody four vital provisions:

1. A complete embargo on the shipment of all arms and ammunition and other war materials or other contraband.

2. A similar automatic embargo on all loans and credits to the warring nations for the purchase of war materials or other contraband.

3. A law forbidding the granting of passports to American citizens traveling in war zones or on belligerent ships.

4. A law requiring that anyone who exports any article declared to be contraband of war by any belligerent country shall do so at his own risk or at the risk of the foreign government or foreign purchaser.

Let us look the situation in the face. Let us keep our country out of future foreign wars. Let us take the American flag off munitions ships. Every man on profit bent or impelled by idle curiosity in the war-torn areas of the world carries in his body the death of a hundred thousand American boys. He can be made a cause of war. His profits from the warring countries are his own business; let his risk be his own business, too.

If there be those so brave as to risk getting us into war by traveling in the war zone—if there be those so valiant that they do not care how many people are killed as a result of their own adventures—let us tell them and let us tell the world that from now on their deaths will be a misfortune to their own families alone—not to the whole Nation.

The time for action is now. If Congress should adjourn without acting on this legislation and war should break out in Europe before the assembling of the next session in January, our country would be as helplessly committed to the shambles as we were in the last war. For the creation of a militant public sentiment which will take steps to insure against our again being dragged into ruinous participation in foreign fights, I can conceive of nobody to whom I can appeal with greater confidence than the Jewish Veterans of the United States, who know from experience of the horrors of war and who see throughout the world the dread lessons of the aftermath of war. So can we best keep faith with those that died. So can we best pay tribute to the memories of our fallen comrades by doing our uttermost to insure that their unnecessary sacrifices will never have to be repeated.

CALVIN COOLIDGE—ADDRESS BY REPRESENTATIVE PLUMLEY

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, during my school days I had the good fortune to attend Black River Academy at Ludlow, Vt., with former President Calvin Coolidge. July 4, 1935, marked his sixty-third birthday.

When history makes a true appraisal of his services as a legislator, as chief executive of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and as President of the United States, it will record that he was one of the great men of our Republic, and it will also record that he was an outstanding leader of progressive thought and action.

On Sunday, July 7, Representative CHARLES A. PLUMLEY, of Vermont, delivered an address in observance of the birthday anniversary before the Calvin Coolidge class of the First Congregational Church in Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

All over this land which commemorated the Independence of the Republic with enthusiasm and with genuine and tender sentiment, you will find that many Americans did not forget that it was also the anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest of all Americans.

President Roosevelt, in sending a wreath to be placed upon the grave in Plymouth, Vt., on July 4, not only evidenced the gratitude and reverence of the living for the dead but testified to the genuine respect and affection with which all the people pay homage to the memory of that distinguished but modest gentleman, great in his simplicity—a typical son of Vermont, Calvin Coolidge.

In paying my tribute to him today I think I can do no better than to repeat in substance what it was my privilege to say at Plymouth, Vt., in the cemetery, near his grave on July 4, 1934.

Calvin Coolidge above and beyond the temptation of power, with him authority meant only added responsibility and the use, not the abuse, of his prerogative. His calm, steady judgment won men's support. He commanded confidence, not alone because he deserved it, but he appealed to the qualities that are best and noblest in us. Now, today, in retrospect, in these hours of stress and the turmoil of the times, men wonder at the breadth of his comprehension and are astonished at the sweep of his vision. True, it is difficult for some to understand the man, for they do not comprehend his conception, his philosophy of government.

But as years go on, distances and time will but add to and increase his fame, and the appreciation of the scope and force of his achievements, with the glory and grandeur that is his, will grow through the years.

He lives and will continue to live in the hearts of the common people of America, as do Washington and Lincoln, because of the fact that what each and all of them did was in an unselfish expenditure of themselves for the exaltation of the men and women whom they served, the enthronement of conscience, and the perpetuation of government which recognizes the rights of all the governed.

"Sovereignty, it is our belief, is vested in the individual, and we are going to protect the right of the individual." A few days ago my attention was called to a book entitled "Pen Pictures of the Presidents", and I was asked by the author to read and comment upon the sketch devoted to Calvin Coolidge. This is what I said: I have read with very great interest and pleasure your "Pen Pictures of the Presidents." While in the main, that which you have to say concerning Calvin Coolidge is fair and covers the situation authentically, I do take exception to the statement that:

"Calvin Coolidge was an enigma during his term as President and later * * * in April 1932, debate still goes on, as to whether Calvin Coolidge was an inconceivably lucky nonentity or a superlatively astute political analyst."

You are wrong! Calvin Coolidge was neither an "inconceivably lucky nonentity nor a superlatively astute political analyst." He was a shrewd, thrifty, calculating, wise, and honest Yankee. Those who cannot comprehend what this means and are not able to understand Calvin Coolidge cannot, of course, appreciate him, more's the pity for them! His type is not unusual in the State that gave him birth. He is no enigma to the people of Vermont. Neither do they feel he was a wonder man. He did the day's work and could do it because he was wondering what tomorrow would have for him to do, and was getting ready for it.

He possessed more than average ability along many lines, as many so-called "experts" learned to their embarrassment if and when he took the pains to confute them. His sagacity was demonstrated too many times to need enumeration or reiteration. A child of fate was he? So was Lincoln. The homeliness of the two men makes a picture that will survive the ages. They were of and for and by the people.

Calvin Coolidge—the inscrutable man of just discernment; canny jester; conserved every resource to its last scintilla, was frugal of time, money, and breath. He did the thinking while others did the talking. He did the saving while others wasted and spent. His people's, his country's interests were those he conserved selfishly.

In his ability to minimize and to efface himself he was great. He used others to accomplish his purposes and attain his ends, many times without their being aware they were being used. He did not seek personal aggrandizement, and the satisfaction he felt at accomplishment was his reward. He gained office after office with almost ridiculous ease because he discharged the duties of each office with scrupulous care and a little better than it had ever been done before.

If politics is the science of government, as it is, he certainly was a politician, for none was ever more or better versed in politics, governmentally defined, than he. He was humble, broad-minded, and a zealous patriot, with no inferiority complex, willing to let the future find for him his place, which will be in that group which shall contain the really great of all ages.

This is the lesson which I would leave with you today, for Calvin Coolidge, son of Vermont, lover of its hills, valleys, and mountains, should he stand here and speak to us today, I think, would be heard to say:

"'All roads lead down from the summit,'
The plodding and worldly say;
'Down from the stars and glaciers
To the roofs and walls of day.'

"'All roads lead down from the summit!'
Oh, not for him who knows
Those mightier peaks ascending
Above the unmelting snows.

"Not for the climber spellbound
On twilight's purple crest,
When darkening golden ranges
Loom in the cloudy west!

"He, with fierce wings aspiring,
Where the last sunbeam dies,
Soars bodiless to pathways
Where never an eagle flies;

"And in a passionate worship,
With vision freshly born,
Perceives that from man's summits
All roads lead up and on!"

THE CONSTITUTION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR METCALF

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an effective radio address delivered by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] on Thursday night, July 4. This address was broadcast over a Nation-wide network on the program of the National Radio Forum, arranged by the Washington Evening Star.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As the full truth about the present administration begins to crystallize in the minds of the American people they realize a definite change in our form of government. It is a change from a republican government, based upon a constitution, to one of a strictly socialistic character. The change is taking place behind a cloak of public emergency, and in a confusion set up by the most bureaucratic propaganda machine in the history of the United States. As the import of the new deal becomes understood, our citizens should resolve that the Constitution of the United States shall not be abandoned through the subversive efforts of a group of radical advisers, who, by political chance, happen to be in control of our public affairs.

What is the basis for all this alarm about the Constitution? What is the reason for the charges that our Government is undergoing a radical change?

It has become quite apparent that the whole program of this new deal is one foreign to democracy and beyond our Constitution. Laws have been enacted under the cry of "Speed! Speed! Speed!" There is a constant demand on the part of the administration for more power. Power is asked to destroy utility-holding companies, to levy taxes by an administration officer, to spend huge amounts of money without proper accounting, to enter into business, to destroy corporations, to reduce tariffs, to make treaties, and in fact, to ignore the legislative branch of the Government in favor of the executive. Out of such a program may come communism or a dictatorship.

The fundamental patriotism of the American people is being used as the instrument with which to whittle away the rights of our citizens and establish a form of government which lurks in the minds of the advisers of our President. Those who oppose the administration are subjected to abuse and violent criticism. They are called unpatriotic, and freedom of speech is no longer their inalienable right. Almost as soon as the Democratic Party came into power its promises and platform were discarded, and a movement was started to coerce the people of the United States and the Congress into supporting a radical and experimental program.

Lawyers were employed on devious schemes for avoiding the constitutional limitations placed upon the Executive. Publicity men were hired to mold the opinion of the American people Congress up to this time has been driven into submission. Happy events of this week indicate that the domineering, tyrannical attitude of the Executive toward the legislative arm of Government has brought a natural but delayed reaction, almost in the nature of a rebellion. In the face of a $4,000,000,000 fund in the hands of the Executive, no one can say how long the spirit of independence now being manifested in Congress will last. It is a hopeful sign, however, that Congress moves toward a resumption of its proper place in the scheme of our Government. Three powerful forces are silently—almost secretly—at work to prevent this. They are, first, the clever propaganda machine which has the single purpose of selling the American people ideas engendered in the minds of political officeholders; second, the illegal interpretations of the Constitution by attorneys hired by the various Federal departments; and third, by the assessment of overwhelming taxes, the building up of an enormous public debt, and the destruction of confidence in our business future.

To my mind the administration has no right, either moral or legal, to establish a propaganda machine at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. They turn out hundreds of adroit news stories for printing in the press of the country. When you read these stories in the daily papers you cannot know what facts have been suppressed.

The Government press agents, some of them paid as much as $10,000 per year, are employed outside the law. The Federal statutes expressly prohibit the Government from hiring any publicity agent unless specifically authorized by the Congress. This law appears in title 5 of the United States Code. I shall read it:

"No money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for the compensation of any publicity expert unless specifically appropriated for that purpose."

Has this administration violated this law by appointing press agents as administrative assistants, or information agents, or clerks, or by some other title? Call them what you will, they are the paid publicity agents of the present Government, and their purpose is to turn the tide of public opinion in favor of the radical experiments fostered by the "brain trusters."

The taxpayers are paying salaries to men whose sole purpose is to make you believe, through propaganda, that the administration is right in everything it undertakes and that its critics are wrong in everything they contend. When we find evidence that some private organization is distributing propaganda aimed at any sort of change in our public institutions we are up in arms against it. We create investigating committees and hold public meetings for the purpose of exposing propagandists. At the same moment we are forced to endure propaganda agents within our own Government—men who are supported by the very taxpayers toward whom their efforts are directed. Nothing could be more un-American.

The law which I have quoted was adopted by the Congress after mature consideration. At the time of its passage the statements of Representative Gillette, later Speaker of the House, and Congressman Fitzgerald, Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, well expressed the feeling of the Congress. The former stated:

"* * * It does not seem to me that it is proper for any Department of the Government to employ a person simply as a press agent to advertise the work and doings of that Department. In the ordinary work of the Department, anything which requires the knowledge of the public certainly finds its way into the press at this time, and I am surprised to find that there is existing some such position as this."

He was referring to what was then considered a disgraceful fact—that the Government had hired one press agent! This was during the administration of Woodrow Wilson. What change a short time brings in the philosophy of government!

Thus do we find those responsible for the fair administering of the public laws using devious and disgraceful methods for avoiding the very laws they are supposed to administer. Do you believe it is just for the Federal Government to set up a powerful lobby at the expense of the taxpayers? Do you think it is right for us to criticize those lobbyists who seek to protect the interests of their clients and at the same time smile upon a lobby established by the Government?

Only a few days ago the administration vigorously attacked the lobby of the utility-holding companies. This lobby was declared to be the most dangerous and powerful in history. I know little about the propaganda of the holding companies. I imagine few Members of Congress pay much attention to it, but it is my conviction the most powerful and dangerous lobby in this country has been set up within the Government. Pamphlets are even being printed which instruct school teachers how to sell the new-deal idea of public ownership of utilities to our school children. Has my radio audience heard as much from the propaganda of the utilities as from the high-pressure speechmakers and propagandists of this administration? I will venture more propaganda has been distributed in favor of the destruction of holding companies than has been employed by the companies in an effort to save their institutions. The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has approved a resolution to investigate the utilities' lobby. Why shouldn't we investigate it both ways?

During its program toward socializing our Government it was necessary for the administration to go beyond the intent of the law in setting up a legal organization in most of the newly created departments. I understand the N. R. A., the A. A. A., and other bureaus have engaged lawyers, a number of whom have been employed in drafting laws for submission to the Congress. It is a moot question whether they are devoted to writing laws within the limitations of the Constitution. It is appalling that the corps of lawyers maintained by the Government could not have drafted an N. R. A. Act which would have been constitutional. It is a momentous thing when laws proposed by the administration are passed by the Congress and afterward found to be so badly written and so radical in nature that the Supreme Court by unanimous decision can declare them beyond the pale of the Constitution.

The Department of Justice was created in 1870 for the purpose of centralizing the Federal legal department of the United States Government. It was the hope of those persons who brought about its establishment that just such things as are occurring at this time might be avoided. Consequently, a law was passed forbidding the head of any department to employ a lawyer or counsel at the expense of the taxpayers.

All legal services were to be under the Attorney General of the United States, and he alone was to be responsible for legal advice given to the various departments of the Government. This is still the law, but the administration has supplied most departments with attorneys whose sole apparent duty is to aid the bureau chiefs in carrying out, through legislation and otherwise, their radical intentions.

This administration has avoided the purposes of the act creating the Department of Justice and has taken from the Attorney General the responsibility for much legal advice. If this is not true the Attorney General of the United States is responsible for causing the President to sponsor, approve, and put into effect radical and unconstitutional pieces of legislation.

The Congress should inquire more thoroughly into the source of legislation which comes to the Capitol. Some may be written in one department and some in another. The Attorney General may think one piece of legislation to be constitutional and the lawyers hired by a department may advise to the contrary. Somehow we should seek to defend the Constitution from a bureaucracy such as this.

The Supreme Court has recently checked the headlong plunge of our Government into fascism or nazi-ism. Whether it can continue as the one unshaken bulwark of our traditional Government must be determined by the people and the Congress. Now that the Supreme Court has spoken in defense of the Constitution the administration seeks to get around that document by devious methods. A bill now pending in Congress will give to the Secretary of Agriculture almost the power of a dictator over the food supplies of the Nation. He may impose taxes upon basic commodities and regulate the prices of the necessities of life. The bill provides that if the A. A. A. is declared to be unconstitutional, an American citizen shall have no right to ask for a refund of taxes which are illegally collected from him. Protection of the courts is being taken from the taxpayer and he will have no redress from destructive acts of the Secretary of Agriculture. Citizens must pay taxes whether they are right or wrong, legal or illegal.

Furthermore, the legislation demanded by the administration seeks to deprive the Supreme Court of an opportunity to pass on the basic constitutionality of law. Legislation demanded by the President is now pending to deny to citizens who have been damaged by repudiation of the gold clause access to the Court of Claims. This is the first time since the court was established in 1855 that a citizen has been deprived of the right of a hearing before a judicial body on his claim against the Government. This reverts to the autocratic philosophy of the divine right of kings.

If that is democracy, then Joseph Stalin, of Russia, was most certainly the outstanding Democrat of his time.

I cannot believe that the administration has made any progress toward industrial recovery. More people are now on the relief rolls than when the President had been a year in office. People are being taught to glorify charity and many are refusing to work because of the ease with which they can obtain relief. The Democratic Party came into power with the solemn promise to bring about public economy. For a short time this program was carried out. Suddenly, with no more explanation than a magician gives his audience, the administration indulged in mental acrobatics and inaugurated a spending campaign which has never been equaled in the history of the country.

While he was running for office the Democratic candidate said of the Hoover government:

"I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peace times in all our history—one which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs of reduced earning power of the people."

A month later he solemnly made the following statement:

"I regard reduction in Federal spending as one of the most important issues of this campaign. In my opinion, it is the most direct and effective contribution that Government can make to business."

The facts are that the cost of government from George Washington to Woodrow Wilson, a period of 124 years, was $24,500,000,000. During the first 3 years of the present administration $24,200,000,000 will have been spent. These 3 years will cost the people of the United States almost as much as every President from George Washington to Woodrow Wilson.

The extreme heights to which this hypocrisy has gone may well be realized when we refer to the words of the Democratic candidate for President in September 1932. He said:

"* * * Remember well that attitude and method—the way we do things, not the way we say things, is nearly always the measure of our sincerity."

To pay the tremendous deficit the American people are being mortgaged for generations to come. Children born today will be paying for the Democratic orgy when their grandchildren are governing the country. In order to replenish the Government's borrowing power, and as a sop to certain political forces opposing the administration we are asked to rush through the Congress a drastic tax program designed to confiscate the funds of our citizens and to punish our corporations for successful operation. A man may have spent his lifetime building up a business that his children may carry on, and find that by virtue of the new-deal tax laws the Government will have destroyed all hope of that business remaining the heritage of his sons or daughters. The people should register a powerful objection to the levying of confiscatory taxes in order to gain the political support of Socialists and radicals of every stripe. Since the inception of our Government, private property has had three attributes. One is the right to possession and enjoyment of property honestly accumulated. The second is the right to the income it yields. The third is the right to disposition. The administration proposes to materially curb, and in some cases destroy, these fundamental attributes of property. The rights of the States to jurisdiction over private property within the States will be transferred to the Federal Government. It cannot be long, should such actions continue, before the States of the Union have disappeared and all authority of government will have been vested in a dictator.

If the proposed inheritance taxes become law, we will have invited the destruction of every life-insurance company in the country.

Who would be foolish enough to continue paying premiums on large life-insurance policies with the knowledge that the Government is going to confiscate as much as 75 per cent of the face value of this policy? What insurance company could possibly live if the large policyholders voluntarily canceled their contracts? The collapse of our insurance companies would constitute a national catastrophe. Why should we invite it at a time like this?

If by taxation the administration succeeds in destroying the property rights of individuals, it will reduce the volume of capital which otherwise would be at the service of industry, and thus reduce capital available for the employment of labor. The common interest of capital and labor requires the largest possible investment in industry and the minimum of Government expenditure. This administration seeks to accomplish exactly the reverse. While tearing down the Nation's capital structure it is building up the cost of Government and will load the people with a tax burden that cannot be dissipated for generations. Inflation and total collapse are the only alternatives.

Extremely high taxes are also proposed on the profits of corporations. These profits must come from the small holders of securities. Badly managed business will not have to pay. Well-managed ventures are to be penalized for being successful. It is proposed to punish thrift and good management and to place a premium on poor management and unwise financing.

The motive behind these new taxes reeks of politics. Any high-school boy, by examining the facts, can recognize the master stroke of Democratic politicians, who, by proposing a tax on wealth, hope to extend their political dominance over the followers of those who preach for a redistribution of wealth.

As a means of raising revenue the tax program demanded by the new deal is disgracefully inadequate. It seeks to decentralize industry and to break down capital, rather than to provide revenue for the expenses of the Government. The wasteful expenditure of public funds can never produce prosperity, but if we are to squander billions in borrowed money, we should proceed with something resembling good business practice. What right does this administration have to build up an enormous public debt which succeeding administrations will be forced to pay?

The taxes proposed will yield only $340,000,000 per year. At the present time the Government is spending in excess of $20,000,000 every day. These taxes would run the Government for only 17 days, and they actually constitute less than one-half of the interest on the public debt. If we are going to undertake a tax program, we should do so with a view to balancing the Budget. Taxes should be equally distributed among all groups of people in direct proportion to their ability to pay. To strike at capital for a doubtful purpose is neither good business nor conducive to the permanence of our Government.

The last Democratic President sent 3,000,000 young Americans into a bloody war. The slogan of that war was, "Make the world safe for democracy." Thousands of our fine young citizens gave their lives for this ideal. Today we are faced with the same perplexing problem. Our democracy is not endangered by any foreign power, but by a more destructive force which works silently from within. It is being whittled away before our very eyes. Somehow this movement must be stopped, and on the youth of the country rests this responsibility. Let us hope they will rise to the occasion.

There is more interest in politics today than ever before, and on almost every street corner we hear discussions of whether this administration will be returned. We hear the universal comment, "No man with $4,000,000,000 can be defeated." Have you heard that statement? "No man with $4,000,000,000 can be defeated".

The American people should bear these things in mind. Billions of dollars of your money are being squandered. Where will we be when the Federal credit is exhausted? The votes of the men who represent you in Congress are being demanded by the executive department of the Government. Where will we be when they are driven into complete submission?

Those persons responsible for the executive branch of the Government say they are undertaking a broad and long-range program of reform. To my mind, little good and much harm will come from these socialistic experiments.

A TRIBUTE TO AMERICA—SPEECH BY THE NORWEGIAN MINISTER

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the Fourth of July is just past. On this occasion, as in other years, tribute was paid to the Declaration of Independence and American institutions.

Sixteen years ago, on the 4th of July, a young man then in the Diplomatic Service of his country delivered a beautiful tribute to America and American institutions. After having served his country in various capacities for a number of years, this man now has been advanced to the high position of Minister of Norway to the Government of the United States.

Since he first came to the legation of his country at Washington 25 years ago he has traveled extensively in America, and has acquired a remarkable knowledge and understanding of our people, our system of government, and institutions.

I ask unanimous consent that the Fourth of July oration which he delivered 16 years ago be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY HIS EXCELLENCY WILHELM MUNTHE DE MORGENSTIERNE, NOW MINISTER OF NORWAY TO THE UNITED STATES, AT A FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION IN 1919 ON BOARD THE STEAMSHIP "HELLIG OLAV"

Many of us present here tonight—probably a considerable majority—are not American citizens. But we are all, I believe, warm friends of America. And it seems that we all united in a desire not to let this day, the Day of Independence of the United States of America, go by unnoticed, but to take the opportunity to render our sincere homage to the great country which we have just left.

It was 143 years ago today that the famous Declaration of Independence was proclaimed at Philadelphia, severing the relations between the American Colonies and England, the mother country. However, the authors of the Declaration of Independence and the leaders of America in those days had a further and more ambitious aim: Theirs was a serious and enthusiastic desire to establish in the new world a really new and better order of things. A society unhampered by the traditions and prejudices of old Europe, a Nation dedicated to the great ideals of equality and liberty.

We know in the main what has taken place since that 4th of July 1776. We are all familiar with the astounding growth and development of the United States of America during the century and a half which has passed since then.

And we know, too, that all during that tremendous expansion and material development American public opinion and American statesmanship have endeavored to uphold the great fundamental principles upon which the Republic was founded. How far have they succeeded? Not fully, if we measure the success by a true and fearless interpretation of those principles—an interpretation which for a long time came from only a few and scattered voices, but which is now fast becoming everywhere the prevailing interpretation of human liberty and equality.

But nevertheless, it is a wonderful fact—and a historic fact—that all during these years the name of America has been to oppressed humanity all over the world the symbol of freedom and opportunity. And we have seen that from all countries of the world—and not the least from our own northern countries—a constant stream of people have crossed the great waters and in American found a hospitable welcome, a new home, and in many cases opportunities which their homeland—for all its love—could not offer them.

And now we see thousands and thousands of our former countrymen scattered all over the United States as useful, and loyal, and enthusiastic citizens of the great Republic.

What is it, this subtle influence which seems to take hold of everybody, regardless of former nationality, as soon as he has spent some little time on American soil and under American institutions?

What is the essence of this American spirit?

We see it, no, we feel the presence of this spirit everywhere we go in the States—even we who are perhaps only visitors of a short time.

I shall not here try to undertake any analysis; but is it not so that we all have a feeling of the promise of American life? Is not this American spirit a spirit of optimism, of confident faith in the ultimate destinies of the human race, and of the American people in particular? I think that perhaps we will realize this more clearly when we consider the future.

America—does it not stand in our imagination intimately bound up with the future of the world? Can we conceive of that future without America?

We have gone through a terrible experience. The foundations of civilization have been shattered and we are groping in the dark. It seems hard to find our bearings. But we all feel this, that if the nations of the world are to endure the near future must see a radical and far-reaching extension of the principles of equality and liberty. The social organization of the world as it was 5 years ago will no longer do. For some time there has been a whisper down the lands of the world—and it is now rising to an irresistible storm—that the equality and the liberty of the new day must rest on solid economic and social foundations. The way in which this world problem is met and solved will be the acid test of the reality and sincerity of all pronouncements of freedom and equality.

The world is waiting breathlessly for leadership. And millions in all lands look west, to the Nation dedicated to the high principles of the Declaration of Independence, to take the lead. Will she do it? Many, many are those who fondly hope that she will; that she will show the way in carrying to their just and necessary—and tremendously difficult—conclusion the great, living ideals of equality and liberty.

And so we all turn our eyes westward, and we get the vision of a vast and wonderful country, stretching in tremendous expanse from ocean to ocean, with the intense, hustling life of its great cities, the vastness and the desolation of its prairies, the towering beauty of its mountains, and the majesty of its forests. We have seen it, or some of it, and it has become part of us, and we love it.

And so we citizens of foreign countries make it our privilege on this day of Independence of the United States, and of inspiration to all liberty-loving nations of the world, to render homage to that great country.

May the spirit of the Fourth of July inspire the coming days of reconstruction and may justice and happiness be the lot of the great and generous American people.

DELAWARE'S BALANCED BUDGET

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in this year of our Lord, when it is the usual thing for municipalities and States to become bankrupt, when huge debts are being piled up for future generations to pay, it is with no little pride that I point to the financial status of my own State, as outlined in an excellent editorial in the Wilmington (Del.) Journal-Every Evening of July 6, 1935, which I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wilmington (Del.) Journal-Every Evening, July 6, 1935]

DELAWARE'S ENVIABLE RECORD

Delaware is one of the few States of the Federal Union that not only start the new fiscal year with a balanced budget without resort to an artificial boost, but that also have weathered the depression storm successfully up to this time.

When all bills for the last fiscal year have been paid, and cash receipts for the year have been recorded, we learn from the fiscal officers in Dover, there will be a surplus of more than $100,000 in the general fund with which to start the new year. Besides that there will be substantial balances in the educational and highway funds.

Our State has met every obligation as it fell due, including pay rolls. The same is true with respect to Wilmington and other corporate communities, and also the counties.

In some other States there have been defaults on pay rolls and other obligations. Resort was had in some instances to fantastic financial boosting projects, some of which seriously jeopardized the future, and that certainly are not in keeping with good business principles.

Delaware has followed a sane course. It has regarded its obligations as sacred. It has kept its spending within its means. It is true that money has been borrowed within the period of the depression. But that borrowing, which was necessary, if the fiscal structure of the State was to be kept in balance, has been held within reasonable bounds and has not gone beyond the extent of actual needs.

It has also been found possible to shift the road and bridge expenses from the counties to the State, and to so limit the taxing authority in the counties as to materially ease the tax burden on real estate.

And so, the governing authorities of our State have done well. They have gotten the financial ship on an even keel. What the legislature did last winter assures continuance of this situation for 2 years.

This latter point, however, is something to think about. During the current biennium we must plan for the next one. We must conserve our resources. We are not quite certain what some heretofore dependable sources of revenue are going to produce. And so it is incumbent upon the people of the State to look ahead, with a view to choosing a legislature next year that can be depended upon to handle our financial problems in the same sensible manner as did the legislature of 1935.

It may be the present sources of revenue are not sufficient to carry on after the current biennium ends. Governor Buck has appointed a commission that will endeavor to determine whether or not new sources of revenue must be found. Whatever this commission's survey may show, the public must face the issue and meet it squarely.

It may be that within the next few months some of the uncertain sources of revenue may become more stable and productive than they seem to be now. In that event, it may be possible to carry on after 1936 without adding to the tax levy. Otherwise, more money will have to be forthcoming.

CONDITION OF LUMBER INDUSTRY IN THE NORTHWEST

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an open letter from C. C. Crow, editor of Crow's Pacific Coast Lumber Digest, to President Roosevelt, which was printed in the Pacific Coast Lumber Digest on May 13, 1935.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN OPEN LETTER TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Northwest's major industry lies prostrate, paralyzed with a strike for which you are responsible.

You have systematically nursed and encouraged into destructive flame every smoldering ember of radicalism on the Pacific coast.

You have bound and gagged the capable leaders of industry and set the enemies of law and order upon them to exercise their despotic insolence.

You have conducted a travesty on justice by sending from governmental departments alleged arbiters to settle disputes, when as a matter of fact you know they are but the master minds of this great revolutionary movement whom you have clothed with official authority, and their mission is not to arbitrate but to bludgeon.

While the crying need is for more employment and more pay rolls, you have openly invited men to give up their work and go on relief.

When you have completed the job of making beggars out of the many thousands of employees of the lumber industry in the Northwest, when you have completed the job of bankrupting those who have their money invested in mills and camps, when you have completed the job of turning the Pacific coast over to the American Federation of Labor racketeers, what next may we expect, Mr. President?

Respectfully yours,

C. C. CROW,
Editor Crow's Pacific Coast Lumber Digest.

REGULATION OF TRANSPORTATION BY WATER

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1632) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire, Mr. President, this morning to discuss the pending bill and to point out the purposes of it. The chief opposition to the bill seems to grow out of the fear which some people entertain that the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded and should not have the regulation of water carriers nor should it have the regulation of busses and trucks.

At the outset let me say, with reference to the regulation of water carriers, of trucks and busses, and of the railroads, that the idea of the President, the idea of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the idea of various other bodies is substantially that the regulation of all forms of interstate transportation should be placed under one jurisdiction; that that jurisdiction should be a reorganized Interstate Commerce Commission, and that, as reorganized, the Interstate Commerce Commission should have a division which should have charge of the regulation of water carriers, a division which should have charge of the regulation of motor carriers, and a division which should have charge of the regulation of railroads.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator takes that position, why did he not bring in a proposal for the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission before he sought to put water carriers under the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. I will answer that question by saying that, as I have previously announced upon the floor, Coordinator Eastman—and these are not my bills; I introduced them only at the request of the Coordinator—suggested that 3 bills should be introduced, 1 for the regulation of water carriers, 1 for the regulation of busses and trucks, and 1 for the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission along the lines which I have suggested to the Senate. I introduced the three bills at the request of the Coordinator and at the request of the administration.

The committee held hearings upon all three bills. From the committee I reported first the bill providing for the regulation of motor carriers, which passed the Senate and is now pending in the House. Secondly, I reported from the committee, after hearings, the pending bill, and hearings have also been held upon the third bill. I can say to the Senator that, in the event this bill shall pass, immediately thereafter we will recommend the passage of a bill for the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission along the lines which I have suggested.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator began his remarks by saying that there was objection to this measure because it would turn over the regulation of water carriers to a railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission. How can anybody question that? If the Senator had proceeded in an orderly fashion—I am not criticising him; I am criticising the sponsors of the plan—and the reorganization had been provided for so that there would be a place in the new and enlarged Interstate Commerce Commission for a section devoted to water carriers, that would be one thing; but that is not the plan at all. That bill is still in the discard. It is not on the "must" list. Instead, we have the bill which is now before us. The Senator from Montana is doing a very good job with the bill which he presented by request, because it takes a personal heart interest ordinarily to do a good job, and I know he has no such personal interest in this bill. He cannot have because, as a good American citizen, he is interested in ships as well as railroads. But this bill would turn over to a railroad-minded, unenlarged, and unchanged Interstate Commerce Commission the regulation of water carriers. Every Senator has had in his mail today letters from railroads urging that the bill be passed. I had a letter this morning even from the station agent in the little town in Michigan where I was born, pointing out how necessary it is to the particular railroad that this water-carrier bill should be passed. The bill which is before us will stifle and kill the American merchant marine and will turn over to a railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission the regulation of water carriers in America. That is my judgment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire if the bill now pending before the Senate is substantially the bill prepared for the committee by the Coordinator of Transportation?

Mr. WHEELER. No. The bill as finally reported is a committee bill. The bill as recommended by the coordinator contained a commodity clause which prevented a contract carrier from carrying goods in which it was interested. That provision has been eliminated from the bill. It likewise had several other stringent provisions which have been eliminated.

Mr. WALSH. The bill has been moderated and is less drastic than the bill which was originally introduced?

Mr. WHEELER. Very substantially moderated.

Mr. WALSH. Does the bill propose an increase in the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. So that the nine members who now constitute the Commission would be divided into three groups, and one group would have charge of the regulation of water transportation, another of motor transportation, and the third of railroad transportation?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. The bill for the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission, S. 1635, which was suggested by Coordinator Eastman and which is now pending before the committee, provides for the enlargement of the Commission and for permanent divisions of the Commission.

Mr. WALSH. That bill has not as yet been reported?

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. WALSH. It is still in the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and I propose to press that bill just as soon as the bill now before the Senate shall have been disposed of.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from New York asked me why I do not take up these measures in an orderly way. I submit that I am taking up this bill in an orderly way, because if we should not pass the water-carrier bill and the motor-carrier bill, then there would be no excuse for enlarging the Interstate Commerce Commission at the present time or dividing it into divisions.

Answering the charge that the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded, that charge is based entirely upon mere suspicion. The facts do not bear it out, as I propose to show before I get through with my explanation of the bill now before us.

The question before the Senate at the present time is whether we want to have regulation of railroads and whether we want to let their competitors go entirely ungoverned. In my humble judgment we will be doing a national disservice to the shipping interests of the country, looking at it from that standpoint, and we will be doing a disservice to the shippers themselves if we do not have some form of regulation of these various types of transportation. The one way to do it is to coordinate them and not have one organization regulating water carriers, another bureau regulating motor carriers, and a third organization regulating the railroads, because if we do that we are bound to have jealousies creeping in between the various bureaus, and we are bound to have disorganized and disconcerted regulation of the transportation system of the United States.

A former member of the Shipping Bureau, which regulated water carriers, testified that in his opinion if we are going to have a bureau to control subsidies and if we are going to have a bureau to control these other matters we should not have that same bureau controlling the regulation of rates, but that the regulation of rates ought to be in a disinterested commission, free and separate from an executive body, and that the proper place for that regulation is in the Interstate Commerce Commision. So far as he was concerned, he said he preferred to have it in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator's bill propose regulation of foreign shipping rates on American ships—not simply coastal rates, but rates from the United States to foreign ports?

Mr. WHEELER. No; only to the extent that they are regulated now by the Shipping Board. All the bill proposes to do with foreign commerce is to transfer from the Shipping Bureau of the Commerce Department to the Interstate Commerce Commission the same powers which exist in the Shipping Bureau at the present time.

Mr. CONNALLY. It does not add any new powers?

Mr. WHEELER. It adds nothing new whatsoever in respect of rates on American ships engaged in foreign commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] indicated that it was his view, if the bill were enacted into law, it would give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to so regulate rates as to cripple shipping on American vessels to foreign ports.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad the Senator brought up that point. Let me say further that the Senator from New York is in error in drawing such a conclusion.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it does not have that effect, I do not see how it can affect foreign shipping. The point I have in mind is that I would not want to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to fix rates on American ships to foreign ports at such a figure as to make it impossible for our own ships to compete with the foreign lines which are not controlled as to rates.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is correct. As the bill originally came to the committee it did contain some provisions with reference to the regulating of foreign rates. The committee eliminated those provisions after hearings because we felt that neither the Interstate Commerce Commission nor the Shipping Board Bureau, which now regulates them, was sufficiently advised and had sufficient information upon which to base such regulation. While the bill with that recommendation came from Coordinator Eastman, as a matter of fact, the only reason that such provisions were put in the bill was because the Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce recommended to Coordinator Eastman that the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce should not be separated and that the foreign-commerce regulation needed strengthening. Such provisions were inserted in the bill as received from Coordinator Eastman, but the committee eliminated these provisions before reporting the bill to the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND, Mr. KING, and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield first to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Perhaps this is not along the line of the Senator's observations, but how far does the Senator's bill go? Would it, for instance, take jurisdiction over the boats which carry passengers from Jersey City to New York City in the morning and back in the evening, or of boats which in California carry passengers from San Francisco to Oakland?

Mr. WHEELER. No; the bill specifically provides exemption in respect of such local intraharbor operations, and it is intended that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have no power over such rates.

Mr. KING. Would the Commission have jurisdiction over the boats upon the Great Lakes?

Mr. WHEELER. It would have jurisdiction over the common carriers by water upon the Great Lakes and the contract carriers insofar as they compete with the common carriers by water; that is all.

Mr. KING. It would have jurisdiction over the boats that ply up and down the Mississippi River, I suppose?

Mr. WHEELER. The common carriers upon the Mississippi River.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to know if I have a correct understanding. As I understand, this bill is only part of a program, and another bill is to follow.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. If the other bill shall follow and be enacted, will it remedy the evils pointed out by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]?

Mr. WHEELER. I think so. Let me say to the Senator that when the truck and bus people came before the committee, many of them objected to being placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission because some of them said, "The Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded." If the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded, it is only because of the fact that in the law of 1920, which was passed by the Congress of the United States, the Congress said that the Commission must try to preserve the railroad structure of the United States. Practically all of the bus and truck people said, "We favor regulation but we are opposed to this bill unless you reorganize the Commission and set up a department for the purpose of regulating buses and trucks." We propose to do that in Coordinator Eastman's bill (S. 1635) which is to follow this bill.

The same thing took place with reference to the regulation of water carriers. Many of the water carriers said, "We object to the bill unless you pass another bill which will set up a separate water-carrier division in the Commission."

While I am on that subject, and before I proceed to an explanation of the bill, I wish to call attention to some errors which were made in the statements the other day by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

The Senator from Minnesota, at page 10695 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, said:

The common carriers on those rivers—

Speaking of the Mississippi and the Ohio—carry only 3 percent, or less than 3 percent, of the total freight carried on those rivers. The remainder is carried by private carriers.

Senate Document No. 152, Seventy-third Congress, second session, at page 7, indicates, on the basis of a special count made by the Army engineers, the following percentage distribution for 1932:

Mississippi River: Common carriers, 31 percent; contract carriers, 39 percent; private carriers, 30 percent.

So that instead of only 3 percent being carried by common carriers on the Mississippi River, 31 percent was carried by common carriers, 39 percent by contract carriers, and 30 percent by private carriers, according to the figures furnished me by Coordinator Eastman in this statement.

On the Ohio River, the common carriers carried 3.6 percent, the contract carriers carried 8.4 percent, and the private carriers carried 88 percent.

On the Monongahela the common carriers' percentage was practically nil. It was three-tenths of 1 percent. The amount carried by the contract carriers was 2.7 percent, and the amount carried by the private carriers was 97 percent.

The statement has been repeatedly made here that we did not regulate the privately owned carriers because of their being so powerful. Then, on the other hand, it was said that the reason why we should not attempt to regulate them was that the Interstate Commerce Commission was railroad-minded. The people with whom the private and contract carriers chiefly compete are the railroads. The only people who could complain because of the fact that we amended the bill so as not to regulate the private carriers would be the railroads, because the business which the private and contract carriers carry on the Monongahela River and on the Ohio River and on the Great Lakes is bulk cargo, which does not at all compete with the common carriers by water, according to all the testimony given by the coordinator and others who testified before the committee.

Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] said, at page 10698:

On the Mississippi River last year there were carried 57,700,000 tons, while the common carriers carried only 1,350,000 tons.

Coordinator Eastman comments on this statement as follows:

"Last year" refers to 1933. The figure cited represents gross tonnage on the Mississippi River system; eliminating all known duplications, the net tonnage carried was 44,302,000. The ton-mileage aggregated 5,131,343,000. The three principal companies classed as common carriers, the Federal Barge Line, American Barge Line, and Mississippi Valley Barge Line, report 2,092,184 tons of traffic in 1933. Using the lower figure cited by Senator SHIPSTEAD on the assumption that the difference represents contract tonnage, and using the 883-mile average haul shown by the Federal Barge Line as typical of the group, the ton mileage of the three companies is found to have aggregated 1,192,000,000. Therefore, in terms of actual transportation service rendered, the three companies did 23 percent of the 1933 business on the Mississippi River system. The explanation of the difference between this figure and the 3 percent cited by Senator SHIPSTEAD is found in the much longer average haul of the common carriers. The great bulk of the tonnage on the rivers consists of nonmetallic minerals, principally coal, stone, and sand gravel, most of which move short distances and often only within a local area.

The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] said on page 10699:

I know from the testimony, and from private conversations with them, that outside of those shipping lines which are largely railroad-controlled there is opposition, and bitter opposition, to this bill.

The comment upon that statement is as follows:

This statement is in error. Returns to a detailed questionnaire sent to water lines indicated that 67 out of 220 respondents wanted effective regulation, 5 favored it with certain qualifications, 52 were opposed, and 96 took no position, apparently from lack of interest. (See S. Doc. 152, p. 169.)

Most of the opposition came from contract and private carriers, although a few of the former favored regulation. These answers were made prior to the preparation of last year's water carrier bill.

Contract and private carriers have been eliminated from this bill, except that contract carriers are regulated when they compete with common carriers on the rivers and in the intercoastal traffic.

The hearings held on the original S. 1632, a more far-reaching bill than the one now under consideration, indicated that it had the support of the following groups, among others:

Intercoastal, coastwise, and nearby foreign common carriers, relatively few of whom are under railroad control. Opposition of certain carriers (Nelson Steamship Co., Shepard Steamship Co., Weyerhaeuser Steamship Co., Calmar Line, etc.) has been largely met by elimination of commodities clause and other changes.

Great Lakes common carriers; none are railroad controlled. No appearances were made before committee, but of the 19 who responded to Coordinator's inquiry 10 favored effective Federal regulation, 1 with qualifications, 2 opposed it, and 6 did not answer this question. Many are now subject to considerable Interstate Commerce Commission control.

Canal Carriers' Association (New York Barge Canal): "This trade * * * has taken a position in favor of the principle of legislation insofar as it would be a stabilizing factor in our own trade and in our competition with other forms of transportation. The operators generally consider their operations to be of the nature of contract carriage." Suggestions for changes have in some cases been met.

Mississippi Valley: The two principal common carriers favored the bill.

Since the close of the hearings two groups of operators on Pacific coast rivers have recorded their favoring the principle of regulation.

There is attached a list of steamship companies, port officials, wharfinger operators, shippers, and others who supported the bill. A summary appears at page 3.

Alabama State Docks Commission.
American-Hawaiian Steamship Co.
American Short Line Railroad Association.
Association of American Railroads.
Association Marine Terminal Operators, Atlantic ports.
Atlanta Freight Bureau.
Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines.
Bay Cities Transportation Co. (Oakland).
Bell, Hon. Thomas M.
Binghamton (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce.
Braden, David S. (Philadelphia).
Brotherhood Locomotive Engineers.
Brotherhood Railway Trainmen.
Carolina Shipping Co. (Charleston, S. C.).
East Baltimore Business Men's Association.
Eastern Steamship Lines.
Galveston Wharf Co. (Galveston).
Gamble, John B. (Athens, Ga.).
Grace Line.
Greenwood (Miss.) Chamber of Commerce.
Hansen Storage Co. (Milwaukee).
Haslett Warehouse Co. (Oakland).
Hoboken (N. J.) Chamber of Commerce.
Howard Terminal Co. (Oakland).
Inland Waterways Corporation.
Interior Grain & Milling Conference.
International Mercantile Marine Co.
Lawrence Warehouse Co. (Oakland).
Luckenbach Steamship Co., Inc.
Manufacturers Association of Washington (State).
Marine Terminals Association (Jacksonville, Fla.).
Mays, H. F. (Roanoke, Va.).
Merchants & Miners Transportation Co.
Merchants Exchange (St. Louis).
Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co.
Missouri River Navigation Association.
Munson Steamship Co.
Nash Hardware Co. (Fort Worth).
National Association of Transportation Security Owners.
National Enameling & Stamping Co. (Milwaukee).
National League of Wholesale Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Distributors.
New Jersey Industrial Traffic League.
New Jersey Traffic Advisory Committee.
North Carolina Line, Inc., (Wilmington).
Northeastern States Feed Manufacturers Association (Linfield, Pa.).
Oakland (Calif.) Chamber of Commerce.
Ocean Steamship Co. of Savannah.
Oklahoma Cottonseed Crushers Association (Oklahoma City).
Oneonta (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce—

And so forth.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator include, in his long list of those who approved the bill, the Mississippi Valley Association?

Mr. WHEELER. No; not the Mississippi Valley Association; the Missouri River Navigation Association.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator also quote General Ashburn in favor of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. I have a letter from him.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. Now, I desire to comment for just a minute on that, if I may.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not wish to yield for a comment. If the Senator desires to ask a question, I have not any objection; but I do not like to have my speech interrupted by a comment.

Mr. COPELAND. What I wish to say is that General Ashburn modified his endorsement very materially by saying he was in favor of this bill provided the reorganization bill also should pass. He is not in favor of this bill in and of itself.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course. As I have said before, many of the truck and bus people were opposed to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission unless the Interstate Commerce Commission should be reorganized. I have said to the Senator, and I say upon the floor of the Senate, that if this bill passes, the next bill that will be reported out of the Interstate Commerce Committee will be a bill to reorganize the Interstate Commerce Commission, in accordance with the views of the Coordinator, so that three departments of the Commission will be set up for the purpose of regulating these different modes of interstate transportation.

It is all part of one scheme, and every member of the Interstate Commerce Committee knows it.

A few moments ago the Senator said that the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission was not a part of the "must" program. Let me repeat, the administration is in favor of these two bills, S. 1629 and S. 1632, and it is also in favor of the reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission; so that the one is just as much a "must" bill as any of the rest of them. All three of them are a part of a program for the regulation of the carriers of interstate commerce of the United States. Among others are the Philadelphia & Norfolk Steamship Co.

Shippers Corporation of Greater New York.
J. Allen Smith & Co., Knoxville, Tenn.
M. Thierry, Roanoke, Va.
Trans-Atlantic Association Trade Conference.
Transporation Conference, 1932–35.
Virginia Bridge & Iron Co., Roanoke, Va.
H. Wade, Vinton, Va.
Warehousemen's Association, Port of New York.
S. Zorn & Co., Louisville, Ky.

The statement has been made that if this bill shall pass it will destroy the shipping interests of the United States. If it would destroy the shipping interests of the United States, is it not passing strange that out of all the shipping interests in the intercoastal traffic this long list of many of the leading shippers of the United States, both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as well as on the Mississippi River, should favor the bill and urge its enactment?

It has been stated that they fear it because the Commission is railroad-minded. As a matter of fact, practically each and every one of them favors the bill and wants to see the Commission reorganized as a part of the program to which I have already called attention.

This morning I received the following telegram:

> Beg to remind you that on March 14 we appeared before Committee on Interstate Commerce representing 57 organizations, comprising chambers of commerce, service clubs, local unions, in favor of bill to provide regulations of water carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission. We respectfully ask you to favor this bill.
>
> ONEONTA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. President, I have here a letter from the Luckenbach Steamship Co. I do not know the Luckenbach Steamship Co., but I assume it is one of the large steamship companies located in New York. I note they state in the letter that it is a personal communication to me and that they do not desire to have any publicity.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does the Senator mind stating the point of the communication?

Mr. WHEELER. The letter states there ought to be an amendment to the bill providing a jail sentence for violation of any of the rules or regulations.

Mr. FLETCHER. They want it to provide penalties?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. They are a very responsible shipping concern.

Mr. WHEELER. So I have understood.

I have here also a letter from the Chamber of Commerce of Sierra Madre, Calif., as follows:

SIERRE MADRE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Sierra Madre, Calif., May 15, 1935.

Mr. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of the board of directors of the Sierra Madre Chamber of Commerce held on May 13, 1935, the following action was taken:

"Resolved, That this body urges its representatives in Congress to support Senate bill no. 1632 and House bill no. 5379 on water-carrier regulation, and Senate bill no. 1629 and House bill no. 5262 on motor-carrier regulation, as these bills embody the views of this chamber as expressed in a referendum of the National Chamber of Commerce, endorsed by this chamber a year ago."

Yours truly,

SIERRA MADRE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By R. C. COPENHAVER, Secretary.

I have a letter from the Chamber of Commerce of Denver, Colo., which reads as follows:

DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Denver, Colo., May 3, 1935.

To the HONORABLE THE MEMBERS OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

GENTLEMEN: The Denver Chamber of Commerce requests your support in the passage of transportation legislation proposed in Senate bill 1632 and House bill 5379. These bills are identical in language and are entitled:

"To amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

This proposed legislation has had the extended consideration of the transporation committee and the board of directors of the Denver Chamber of Commerce. Shipping interests represented in the chamber recognize the urgent need for adequate regulation of water carriers in interstate commerce. Such regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission is provided for in Senate bill 1632 and House bill 5379.

Shipping interests as well as the railroads are now and will continue to be at a great disadvantage in meeting competitive situations unless adequate control and regulation of water carriers is provided. The enactment of the proposed legislation will give stabilization to the rate situation. It will insure to the carriers of water-borne commerce just and reasonable rates for the services performed. It will eliminate cutthroat competition and furnish dependable service to patrons of water transporation.

The establishment of fixed and known charges for water transportation will be of very great benefit to interior shippers (who cannot on account of their location avail themselves of water transporation) in attempting to meet the competition of shippers who have access to water transporation.

Very truly yours,

DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
By HARRY S. DICKINSON,
Commissioner, Transporation Department.

I have here also a letter from the Maritime Association setting forth their views with reference to the bill.

I hold in my hand a letter dated in 1935 from the Warehousemen's Association of the Port of New York, but regarding the water-carrier bill of last session, in which they state:

WATER CARRIER ACT—S. 3172

The warehousemen of the port of New York favor the passage of the above bill, since it will prevent discriminations that are now practiced by some of the lines. We trust you will shortly be able to have this bill brought up for consideration. If a public hearing is to be held, we would appreciate your notifying us.

S. 3172, Seventy-third Congress, was very similar to the present bill, S. 1632; it was introduced by Senator Dill, but, like S. 1632, it was prepared by Coordinator Eastman.

I have here a copy of a letter to Chairman BLAND, of the House Committee on Merchant Marine, from the Merchants & Miners Transportation Co., of Baltimore. I am reading some of these letters because the statement has been made that the bill would destroy the shipping interests of this country. This communication reads:

MERCHANTS & MINERS TRANSPORTATION CO.,
Baltimore, Md., June 27, 1935.

Hon. SCHUYLER OTIS BLAND,
Chairman Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In reading the committee report on House bill H. R. 8555, my attention has been attracted particularly to the second paragraph on page 2, wherein the report says that:

"The other point of departure from the President's message is the proposed transfer of certain powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The committee seriously doubts the advisability of transferring such powers at any time to a body whose entire study and work has been devoted to railroad matters, which is not informed on the problems existing in the most highly competitive international trade in the world, which is not acquainted with transportation on the seas with foreign countries, and whose jurisdiction over all forms of transportation on land is still the subject of legislative study and probable action in some form."

Doubtless you have noticed that the President, in his transportation message of June 7, 1935, did not refer to the regulation of rates and practices in the foreign trades of the United States but did recommend the centralization of rate regulation dealing with interstate commerce in the Interstate Commerce Commission. The paragraph of your report quoted above gives one the impression that your objections to the exercise of this authority by the Interstate Commerce Commission relate solely to the exercise of such powers in our foreign trade. Notwithstanding this, the bill which you have reported transfers these powers with respect to both foreign and domestic trades to the proposed maritime authority. This treatment of the subject seems to me both confusing and misleading.

Your report speaks of the Commission as "a body whose entire study and work has been devoted to railroad matters." This statement would indicate that it is not fully realized that the Commission has had a great deal more experience in the regulation of water carriers than has the United States Shipping Board Bureau or its predecessor agency, the United States Shipping Board. The scope of the Commission's jurisdiction over water carriers was outlined to your committee by Federal Coordinator Eastman in the recent hearings on H. R. 5379, whereas the regulatory control exercised by the United States Shipping Board Bureau over domestic carriers has been of such limited character that its experience in these matters cannot be compared with that of the Commission, either in breadth or thoroughness. To illustrate, I understand it was necessary for the Shipping Board Bureau to obtain trained personnel from the Commission in order to carry out the powers delegated to it under the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, and the only thorough investigation of rates and practices in the intercoastal trade ever made by the Bureau has been conducted by an examiner obtained from the Commission for that purpose.

There is no reason to believe that the members of the authority would be intimately acquainted with water transportation or with rate regulation. In fact, one gets the impression from section 201 (b) of the bill that the members of this authority probably would not be selected from the shipping industry. In contrast with this, the provisions of H. R. 5379 (Water Carrier Act) make it mandatory that all officers and employees of the Division of Regulation be transferred to the Commission, thus making certain that the Commission would have the benefit of the services of those in the Bureau who are familiar with, and have been handling, these matters.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that particular significance should be attached to the fact that the coastwise and intercoastal steamship lines, representing most of the common-carrier investment in these trades (as distinguished from those carriers with industrial affiliations, and who, therefore, are opposed to the so-called "Water Carrier Act" for other reasons), have endorsed the provisions of this bill and strongly advocate the centralization of regulatory authority over domestic carriers in the Interstate Commerce Commission. It seems to me there can be no more striking evidence of the competency of the Commission, or of its fair dealing, than the advocacy of this bill by those steamship lines, the majority of whose rates have been subject to its regulation.

Moreover, the report does not deal with the vital question of competition between the various modes of transportation in interstate commerce. Unless rate regulation for competing forms of transportation can be centralized in a single Federal agency, and unless this agency is mandated by Congress "to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages" of each such form of transportation in the public interest, there will be no protection against competition that may destroy the water-carrier services which, I am sure, you and your committee are most anxious to maintain and develop.

Yours very truly,

A. D. STEBBINS, President.

Senate bill 1632 expressly provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in determining rates by water, must recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of water transportation over railroad transportation. There are persons who seem to be fearful that the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded; that it is going to wipe out the merchant marine; yet we have a letter from the Merchants & Miners Transportation Co.—a company with which I am not familiar, but which, I understand, is one of the substantial transportation lines of the United States—in which they ask that the pending bill be passed, and say that if it is not passed they fear that there will be rate cutting indulged in between the railroads and the water shipping interests which will prove fatal to the water shipping interests, and they desire that the regulation of both interests to be in the hands of one commission, and they also say they have faith in the fairness of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I am interested in the Senator's statement as to what the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have authority to do, but I will state that from my reading of the bill I am not so much disturbed about the question of its destroying the shipping interests as I am that the provisions of the bill may not properly protect the public. I find on page 23 that in considering rates the Commission cannot under any circumstances consider the earning powers of the particular business. I find in the provisions with reference to penalties that the only penalties are for carrying goods too cheaply. I do not find any penalty provided for carrying goods at too high rates or for charging too much.

Mr. WHEELER. "In any proceeding to determine the justness or reasonableness of any rate"—that is the provision to which the Senator has reference on page 23 of the bill?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; on page 23 of the bill; and the other point I had in mind is with reference to the provisions on page 54.

Mr. WHEELER. On page 23 it is provided:

> In any proceeding to determine the justness or reasonableness of any rate, fare, or charge of any interstate common carrier by water there shall not be taken into consideration or allowed as evidence or elements of value of the property of such carrier either goodwill, earning power—

And so forth. In other words, the Commission shall not take into consideration goodwill and similar intangibles in determining rates.

Mr. BLACK. I agree to that.

Mr. WHEELER. And the Commission shall not take into consideration the earning power.

Mr. BLACK. Suppose a company is earning 300 percent?

Mr. WHEELER. Let us suppose that one company does earn 300 percent and should come before the Interstate Commerce Commission and say, "Because we earned 300 percent last year our property should be valued not according to what we have actually put into it, but should be valued based upon the earning power." The reason that provision was put into the bill was to provide a basis for the Interstate Commerce Commission upon which to fix minimum rates, so that no company could say that the value of its property for rate-making purposes is, let us say, $5,000,000, because the company earned during the past year 8 percent, or 10 percent, or 6 percent upon $5,000,000; but that the rate should be based upon the actual investment, insofar as Congress can prescribe what shall be considered as determining fair value for rate-making purposes; the fair-value rule is a rule established by the Supreme Court in the nineties in Smyth against Ames.

Mr. BLACK. If it is clear that the bill is limited to the purposes indicated by the Senator from Montana, that is all right; but I have looked in vain for anything which gives real authority to fix rates, so that it shall be unlawful to charge more than the rate fixed. In many places I find that it is unlawful to carry for less than a certain rate.

Mr. WHEELER. There is a provision in the bill, to which I cannot turn at the moment, but I shall have the expert find it for me, which provides that interstate common carriers by water must file their rates with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which may order them changed if unreasonable. At the present time there are no minimum water-carrier rates fixed at all. The water carriers simply file maximum rates at the present time, and they can cut them below them or change them by filing new ones upon 10 days' notice. Under the provisions of this bill the common carriers by water in interstate commerce must file rates within a certain time, and thereafter adhere to them until changed upon proper notice to the public. The rate provisions are similar to those at the present time applying with reference to the railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. BLACK. I do not think the present law with relation to interstate commerce goes far enough.

Mr. WHEELER. It may not go far enough, and in that I agree with the Senator. However, in my humble judgment we could not get anything through Congress which went further than to provide for water carrier's rate provisions similar to those governing the railroads as to the prudent investment. It is a question whether the Supreme Court of the United States would sustain anything which went further than what has been provided in this bill.

Mr. BLACK. Let me tell the Senator what I have in mind. The antitrust law is suspended. Competition is abandoned.

Mr. WHEELER. It is now.

Mr. BLACK. I am not sure that competition is completely abandoned with reference to rates, because one of the things intended to be covered by this bill is to give added guaranties that there will not be any cut rates. The antitrust law is suspended. I find no provision in the bill which gives the Interstate Commerce Commission authority to investigate anything except the original company. I find nothing to protect the people from the same holding-company system which has been used to rob the public in various lines of business activities. I find nothing in the bill which gives the right to investigate the books of the subsidiaries, the associates and affiliates, which, in connection with shipping, as in connection with other lines of business, are used to drain the profits of the operating companies and bleed the public.

In other words, it seems to me that this bill certainly needs to have in it some provision protecting the consumers. I am not saying this as being antagonistic to the bill, for I have an idea that it would be wise to coordinate all methods of transportation under one regulating unit, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission, but I think if we are going to bring these business activities under the Interstate Commerce Act it would be wise to bear in mind that since the old law was enacted we have discovered the evils of the holding company system, and we ought to place a provision in this particular bill protecting the public from such evils, because I know that the same practices are used in connection with shipping. I know that intercoastal shipping has a monopoly and that no foreign company can come in and compete with our intercoastal shipping. With reference to the intercoastal shipping we waive the antitrust law.

What I am interested in—and I should like to have the Senator explain this feature, for I have not studied the bill as thoroughly as I might have done—is this: What protection is offered by the bill against unfair rates? What provision is there as to ascertaining the percentage the companies are making on their investments? What limitation is made as to their profits? What protection is given under the provisions of the bill against draining the company's profits by means of inordinate salaries and bonuses, against which we should provide regulation when we abandon competition? In other words, when we abandon competition in any field, I take it we can regulate against selling any commodity too cheaply, and we must attempt to prevent the dissipation of the accumulations from unfair, unjust, and exorbitant profits, which can be brought about through various channels, holding companies, subsidiaries, salaries, bonuses, and all the methods which have been used.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the Senator that I am in thorough accord with his views. Instead of this bill going too far, as some people think it does, I am of the opinion that in its regulatory provisions with reference to rates it probably does not go far enough. However, the bill does provide and it does give the Commission the power, if properly exercised, to go into many of the things which are specified here, because when the Commission goes into the question of rate making, I think it has a right to figure the basis upon which the Commission can fix a reasonable rate under all the circumstances. If the Commission finds that companies are charging exorbitant rates, and paying inordinate salaries, and doing certain other things, then it has a right to take them into consideration.

Mr. BLACK. It has never done so.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator that it has not gone so far with reference to the railroads. I think the Commission should have gone further with reference to the railroads. I think the Commission has taken the position with reference to the railroads that perhaps it did not have the power to go as far as some of the members of the Commission thought they should go.

Mr. BLACK. Why not impose that duty upon the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not have any objection to such a provision.

Mr. BLACK. On page 50, for instance, I find that the Commission would have authority to investigate the books, papers, accounts, and so forth. In my judgment, that would not give the Commission the right to investigate the books and accounts of associates and affiliates. Associates and affiliates are not outlawed by the bill. Therefore, we must carry our authority further; either to outlaw associates, affiliates, subsidiaries, and so forth, or the Interstate Commerce Commission must be given authority to go into their books and papers, and their profits must be considered as a part of the profits of the entire system.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator from Alabama will offer an amendment to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority and power to investigate such matters, I shall be perfectly willing to support it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask the Senator, in view of the question asked by the Senator from Alabama, whether this bill if enacted into law would give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the same power with reference to the matters mentioned by the Senator from Alabama as it has with reference to the railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; my understanding is that the Commission would have the same power over the rates and amounts of interstate commerce carriers by water as they have at the present time over the railroads.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Alabama mentioned several provisions which I think ought to be in the Interstate Commerce Act and apply to railroads as well as to water transportation.

Mr. WHEELER. I also think so.

Mr. NORRIS. But I do not believe we ought now to go further with the shipping on the rivers, for instance, than we have already gone with the railroads.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say to the Senator that at the present session of Congress an investigation of the railroads has been ordered. I have appointed a subcommittee; we are starting out to undertake an investigation along the lines the Senator has suggested with reference to the financing and with reference to holding companies. After that investigation, we hope, I may say, to report back to the Senate some recommendations designed to prevent in connection with the railroads the milking operations on the part of some of the banking interests and holding companies. It seems to me that then would be the time to consider that phase of the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems only fair that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have the same right in fixing rates to investigate anything that may be necessary as to a steamship company that they have as to a railroad company or a bus line or a truck line. I do not see how we can properly regulate all these means of interstate commerce unless the regulating body—and that, it seems to me, ought to be one body, and not five or six different bodies—has the same power in reference to every one of the various activities which are engaged in interstate commerce. If they have not now such authority, as, in some respects, I think they have not, as regards the railroads, there ought to be such authority provided in a general law, not in a specific one applying to one branch of interstate commerce only. There ought to be a general law giving them the authority properly to investigate as to every activity engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call attention to the provision on page 46, which reads:

(2) Whenever a person who or which is not an interstate common carrier by water or an interstate contract carrier by water is authorized, by an order entered under paragraph (a) (1) of this section, to acquire control of any such carrier by water or of two or more such carriers, such person thereafter shall, to the extent provided by the Commission, for the purposes of section 315 relating to accounts, records, and reports, including the penalties applicable in the case of violations thereof, be subject to the provisions of this part.

In other words, that is intended for the purpose of covering the holding companies or a person who holds just as it does the common carrier itself.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not believe that provision will cover the situation. I say this because the Shipping Board has never investigated any associates or affiliates or subsidiaries under the old law, and all the companies have claimed that the law did not justify such investigation. The result was that in some instances as many as 50 stevedore companies and wharfage companies, and other kinds of companies, were discovered in a network. Their books had never been investigated. This bill would give the right to investigate certain companies where the Commission had granted them permission to secure control, but it would not cover other companies.

One other suggestion: Let us take the barge line down the Mississippi and let us suppose that that barge line can actually carry goods and make a reasonable profit at a certain rate. I do not want this proposed law to authorize the Commission to require them to raise their rates far above what would give them a reasonable profit and thereby deprive the shippers and the public of the benefit of the cheaper rates.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think that the Commission could do that.

Mr. BLACK. The bill makes it a misdemeanor to carry goods at any less rate than that fixed, and it does not in any wise, so far as I can see, prescribe that the Commission shall take into consideration the profit that is being made by the shipping company.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, I think it does. Let me call attention to the reference to affiliate holding companies, and so forth, on page 50, section B–1, which reads:

This provision shall apply to receivers of carriers and to operating trustees thereof and, to the extent deemed necessary by the Commission, to persons having control, direct or indirect, over or affiliated with any such carrier.

In other words, the purpose was to give the Commission the same power over affiliates and holding companies as it has over the carriers themselves.

With reference to the rates, there is, as the Senator knows and as everybody concedes, a chaotic condition in the shipping business at the present time. There may be some who argue—and I am not sure but that they are right—that we should let unrestrained competition continue. The reason why we adopted the Interstate Commerce Commission Act and the regulatory features of the Transportation Act was that if we allowed competition to go on unrestrained, while temporarily rates might be reduced below the cost of transportation, eventually when all competitors had been wiped out, then rates would be raised above what they should be. The railroads a few years ago did that very thing. They lowered their rates and, to a large extent, drove competition off the rivers and off the coastal routes. We have sought here since to build up the water carriers.

The railroads are constantly going to the Interstate Commerce Commission asking that their long-haul water-competitive rates be lowered, while maintaining higher intermediate rates on noncompetitive traffic, so that they may drive the water carriers off the Mississippi River and other waterways. They say, "Well, these forms of transportation are unregulated. You regulate us; you fix our rates; and you let them take our business away." There is some excuse for the Commission, which does not have anything to say about most port-to-port water transportation or about the conditions under which it is operated, at the present time to permit lower long-haul railroad rates so as to let the railroads meet the water competition. The railroads are carrying on a propaganda from one end of this country to the other for the repeal of the long- and short-haul clause of the fourth section.

They do not think that the Interstate Commerce Commission is railroad-minded, because the Commission at the present time has the power under the long- and short-haul clause to permit the railroads to reduce rates to meet water competition; but they have not exercised that power nearly so much as the railroads have wanted. So the railroads desire to take away entirely that authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission in order that they may themselves regulate the question of long- and short-haul discrimination and lower only their long-haul water competitive rates and drive water competition off the coastal and intercoastal routes and off the rivers, all the while maintaining higher rates to intermediate points to recoup the loss. That propaganda has been carried on and is being carried on at the present time. A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives to that effect. I have been appealed to by labor organizations, I have been appealed to by chambers of commerce, I have been appealed to by all classes to work for repeal of the long- and short-haul clause of the fourth section so as to give the railroads this power which they seek, and I have said that I would not do it. One of two things is going to take place in this country; either we are going to have no regulation of transportation or we are going to have some fair form of regulation of the transportation systems competing with the railroads. It is up to Congress to decide. If it be said we do not want the regulation of the competing carriers, then we cannot well continue to regulate one form of transportation and expect it to survive in competition with the others.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that so far as the talk about the Commission being railroad-minded is concerned, I am not disturbed about that, except that if I thought it was railroad-minded, since it is regulating the railroads, I think it would be a good idea to abolish it entirely or to impeach the members of the Commission or remove them. I think the trouble with too many commissions has been that they are minded in a certain direction. That is what I found to be the trouble largely with the shipping business. They were too shipping-minded from a shipping standpoint and the standpoint of profit; and I sometimes think it would be a wonderful thing to have the shipping interests regulated by the railroads and the railroads regulated by the steamship companies. In that way I think we would come nearer getting some kind of justice for the people who have their goods transported. So I am not disturbed about that.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me that it ill becomes any shipping interest to come here and say that he wants a special board just to regulate his particular business.

Mr. BLACK. That is what they all want.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course that is what they all want. The shipping interests want a board set up for themselves which not only first will give them a subsidy——

Mr. BLACK. A subsidy which they can suggest and which they can name.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; they want first to have a subsidy, any kind of a subsidy, and that they shall be able to do anything they want with it, and then they want the same board to regulate them.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly. I found hundreds and hundreds of letters written in the effort to determine who should be named to succeed a certain person on the Shipping Board by the very people who were to be regulated. Efforts were frequently made, and frequently carried out, to name them and to name them all the way down to the subordinates who handled the smallest detail. I am not interested in that feature; I am not disturbed about the alleged railroad-mindedness of the Commission; but what I am interested in is that we do not have a repetition of what has happened with reference to the railroads. If we are going to undertake this regulation and do away with competition, there must be absolute safeguards to prevent the accumulation of huge profits or the diversion of funds into associates, affiliates, and subsidiaries to build up a capitalization, and then demand that the public shall pay rates on that excessive capitalization. That is one of the troubles with the railroads now. What I am interested in is to see that this bill—I am perfectly willing to have it to amend the whole act, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska—shall give the Commission adequate authority. I should like to outlaw associates, affiliates, and subsidiaries and other devices for stealing; but if that is not to be done, then I do think we have got to be sure that we give complete power to regulate every contract and look at every book and every letter and every piece of correspondence which passes between these interests and those with whom they make the contracts.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator, first, I think this bill does give them the power to do what he suggests. On page 22 it is provided:

(b) Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or in an investigation on its own initiative, the Commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge demanded, charged, or collected by any interstate common carrier or carriers by water for transportation subject to this part or any regulation or practice whatsoever of such carrier or carriers relating to such transportation, is or will be unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any provision of this part, it may determine and prescribe the lawful rate, fare, or charge, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rate, fare, or charge thereafter to be observed, or the lawful regulation or practice thereafter to be made effective.

It gives them complete power to determine what is a just and fair rate and what is a discriminatory rate and what is a reasonable rate. It is practically the same provision that is found in the Interstate Commerce Act with reference to the regulation of the rates of railroads.

Mr. BLACK. I may say I read that provision, but on page 54 it is made a misdemeanor, not to get too much, but to charge too little. I find it is borrowed from the old Interstate Commerce Act, and the constant effort is to protect against too small a charge. I think there must be some kind of standard set-up which gives the Commission the right to consider, in determining what is a just and reasonable rate, not what some other carrier might think is a just and reasonable rate, but how much are the carriers making and how much profit goes to them directly or through their associates and subsidiaries and affiliates from the rates which are fixed. I do not find such a provision anywhere.

I know that the Senator's ideas and mine are exactly in accord on that line, and it is for that reason I wanted to suggest that somewhere the Commission ought to be compelled to take into consideration the earning power. The only place I find that referred to is where it is eliminated.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Commission finds that a rate is too high or too low, either one, and makes a rate which it says is just and fair and reasonable, and if a shipping company violates that order made by the Commission, it will be found in the general provisions of the bill that such violation is construed to be a violation of the law and may be punished as such. Also, I may say that if a common carrier by water charges too much the shipper may obtain reparation under section 308, if in interstate commerce, or under the reparation provisions of the present laws regulating shipping mentioned in section 323, if in foreign commerce.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator will look at page 54 of the bill he will see that it is made a crime to give rebates of any kind or to transport at less than the rates and fares charged. I do not find anything that makes it a misdemeanor to charge more than the Commission says may be charged. It may be in the bill, but I cannot find it.

Mr. WHEELER. It is provided as follows:

SEC. 319. (a) Any person who knowingly and willfully violates any provision of the preceding sections of this part, or any rule, regulation, requirement, or order thereunder, or any term or condition of any certificate or permit for which no penalty is otherwise provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district in which such offense was in whole or in part committed shall be subject for the first offense to a fine not exceeding $500, and for any subsequent offense to a fine not exceeding $2,000. Each day of such violation shall constitute a separate offense.

Mr. BLACK. When it comes to specifying in subdivision (b) it may be well to add the word "more", where it says it shall be a misdemeanor to transport at less than the rate, so it would read "at more or less than the rate."

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection; but I think the first provision entirely covers it, because it provides that if a carrier shall violate any rule or regulation, where there is no other penalty provided, it shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor. I am sure it is covered.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. It would be reached by the general authority to provide both maximum and minimum rates, so it would cover it whether it was above or below.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. We have drifted somewhat away from the debate as it started. The Senator called attention in his remarks that the railroads wanted to get rid of section 4. Is that correct?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. And that there is a desire on their part to lower their rates, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission had disregarded that appeal; so we have to assume, since it is the same Commission, that they would continue to disregard the appeal for lower railroad rates. Then, of course, if there is not to be offensive and harmful competition by reason of the difference in the rates, and the Commission will not lower the railroad rates, in order to do away with the competition they would have to increase the ship rates.

That is a reason why I do not like the bill. That is exactly what would happen. If the Senator were here with a bill reorganizing the Interstate Commerce Commission so there would be a division devoted to water carriers, pipe lines, and so forth, that would be one thing; but to have the same Commission pass upon all these rates is another question. In spite of all that has been said, I continue to maintain that the Commission would be railroad-minded. How could it do otherwise than direct an elevation of the steamship rates and a destruction of the steamship companies?

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, what I said, and the Senator apparently did not understand what I said, was that what the railroads want is a repeal of the long- and short-haul clause of section 4. They have constantly appealed to the Interstate Commerce Commission to get the Commission to lower the long-haul rates where the railroads come in competition with the ship interests for the purpose of driving the ship interests off the Mississippi River and similar places, or at least to lower the rates to such a point that the railroads would be enabled to take a lot of the business. In some cases where the railroads have made a proper showing the Commission have authorized them to lower these long-haul rates, while maintaining higher intermediate rates, but the ship interests, the very people whom the Senator now mentions as being destroyed, were the ones who came before the Commission and protested against the railroads lowering those long-haul water-competitive rates because it would injure the ship interests and drive them out of business.

The point I make is that I do not believe a careful examination of what the Interstate Commerce Commission has actually done in these matters lays them open to the charge that they are railroad-minded to the extent which has been stated on the floor of the Senate. I do not believe it is fair to the Commission to say it, and I do not think it is true that they have been railroad-minded to that extent.

Mr. President, I want to proceed with an explanation of the bill because there has been so much misinformation given out as to what the bill actually proposes.

The bill under consideration builds for the most part on established precedents. It proposes to extend to other interstate common carriers the general type of regulation which was applied to intercoastal carriers by the Intercoastal Shipping Act of 1933, known as the "Copeland Act" in conjunction with the earlier shipping act, 1916. It perfects that regulation in certain particulars and provides a limited regulation of contract carriers. So far as shipping in foreign commerce is concerned, the bill works no change whatever in the laws now on the statute books. These go back for the most part to 1916.

This talk about the destruction of our American merchant marine and our foreign commerce is just so much nonsense, because there is nothing to it.

Two agencies now regulate domestic water carriers, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce.

Let me say in that connection that part of the fight which is being waged here now is what we always find when we try to consolidate two or more bureaus into one organization. We find the people who are in one bureau opposing the loss of their power and their authority and having it given to some other department or bureau. Every time we establish a bureau in Washington, that little bureau becomes particularly jealous of its own jurisdiction over the work it is doing. If the President of the United States or the Congress should come to the conclusion that it ought to be consolidated and combined with another bureau, immediately we find that little bureau raising up its head and coming to some Senator or Representative and protesting against that being done.

I think every Member of the Senate who has come in contact with the long service of Coordinator Eastman has confidence not only in his honesty and his integrity, but his fairness.

There has not been a shipper, there has not been a person who has appeared before the committee, during all the time we have had hearings, who has not paid a tribute to Coordinator Eastman and his work, his fairness and his honesty—both the railroads on the one hand and the shippers on the other, the bus and truck people, and all of them.

As I said before, this is not my bill. This is the bill which was recommended by the Coordinator. The Office of the Coordinator was created by an act of Congress of the United States for the purpose of enabling him to make recommendations to the Congress as to what should be done with respect to regulating the various agencies of transportation.

Two major types of carriers are to be considered: the common carrier, who serves the public generally and especially the small shipper, and the contract carrier, who serves in the main the large industry or other shippers who can offer a sufficient volume of traffic to secure special rates. The bill undertakes to regulate the latter class of carrier only to the extent necessary to preserve and protect common-carrier service, which in most trades is in serious need of aid.

A brief explanation is necessary of the regulation now administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the one hand and the Shipping Board Bureau on the other, with indication of how and why the bill changes the existing set-up.

Domestic water transportation falls into a number of trades, which may be briefly indicated as the coastwise, the intercoastal via the Panama Canal, the Great Lakes, and the inland waterways, including principally the Mississippi River system and the New York Barge Canal. On these waters common and contract carriers ply in varying proportions. Alongside them is the private carrier, who may be anything from a local sand and gravel company to a great industry shipping its raw materials or finished products in competition with small industries. In each of these trades a distinction may also be drawn between the port-to-port operator and the operator who is a party to through routes and joint rates with the railroads. Carriers by water may also have joint rates with another.

If a water carrier enters into joint-rate arrangements with a railroad, these joint rates become fully subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that at the present time the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates joint rates between railroads and water carriers. Whenever a railroad and a water carrier enter into a voluntary joint rate the Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction over that rate. At the present time the Interstate Commerce Commission also regulates most of the port-to-port rates of the coastal water carriers, because many of those coastal lines are owned by railroads. In many trades a very large volume of traffic moves on such joint rates. Such a carrier is not, however, regulated by the Commission in any other respect, except that the Commission may prescribe his accounting and require him to make reports. Though joint rates on the Mississippi and Warrior River systems date back to the period of Government operation of the railroads, their extensive use in this field dates from the passage of the Shipstead-Denison Act in 1928. By this act Congress mandated the Commission to permit such joint rates to become effective on application of the carriers and proof of their ability to render service. Such rates are now wide-spread in their application. Joint rates are of longer standing on the Great Lakes and in the coastal trades. Here the water carrier may petition the Commission to require the railroads to enter into such rates. Often, however, they are entered into on a voluntary basis. The Commission may also require the railroads to permit the construction of terminal trackage where necessary to facilitate the interchange of traffic between the rail lines and the vessels of the water carrier.

The Panama Canal Act, passed in 1912, required the railroads to relinquish their interest in boat lines in those instances where the Commission found such lines to be competitive with the parent company's rail lines. The railroad fleet was forced off the Great Lakes and their interests in certain other lines had to be relinquished. However, where the Commission found that continuance of railroad interests in steamship lines was justified the lines so exempted were required to come under thorough-going Commission control. In only their case are the port-to-port rates of water carriers subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

In short, the Commission can pass on the reasonableness of joint rail-water rates and prescribe maxima therefor and the divisions thereof; it can order such rates in over the objections of the railroads; it cannot prescribe minima for such rates. On the other hand, the port-to-port rates of railroad subsidiaries, which are not numerous but include several important operations along the Atlantic coast and between the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, are subject to the same regulation as railroad rates, and such companies are in most other respects subject to the Interstate Commerce Act.

The Commission has no jurisdiction at present over contract carriers or over carriers in foreign commerce.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The question I am about to ask is not a hostile one. On page 74 of the bill, section 321 transfers to the Commission the powers and duties vested in the United States Shipping Board by several enumerated sections. I notice that sections 18 and 19 of the Shipping Act of 1916 are not referred to in this enumeration; but on the following page, page 75, there is a provision repealing sections 18 and 19 of that act. I take it that in some other portions of the bill, in language appearing on pages 16, 17, and 18, there are reenacted some of the provisions of sections 18 and 19 which are repealed; but there is other language in section 18 of the Shipping Act of 1916 which I do not find, and I wondered whether it had been intentionally omitted or whether it had been overlooked.

I refer specifically to the language which gave to the Shipping Board authority over bills of lading, receipts, tickets, and the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, and so forth. Such authority is found in section 18 of the act of 1916, which this bill repeals; and I have not been able to find, on reading the bill, that it is reinserted at any place. To repeat my question, I am wondering whether that was an intentional omission or whether it was overlooked.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator does not mind, I will pass over that matter now, and we will check up on it and come back to it.

The Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce has substantial control over common carriers in the intercoastal trade via the Panama Canal and limited control over common carriers operating on regular routes in the coastal trades and on the Great Lakes. As a practical matter, its only real power is in the intercoastal trade. In the other trades carriers are required to file with the Bureau their maximum rates and charge no more than the rates so filed. This requirement achieves little, however, as the rates filed are not the going rates but merely "paper" rates and are subject to change at the will of the carrier on 10 days' notice. Such carriers are forbidden to discriminate, but with rates made as they are there is little basis for effective action by the Shipping Board Bureau. The form of tariffs may be prescribed and reports may be required.

The greater authority the Bureau has over common carriers in the intercoastal trade is derived from the additions the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, made to the Shipping Act, 1916. For the most part, the control exercised over rates is similar to that which the Commission has over railroad rates, except that it extends only to maximum rates. No power is given to prescribe minimum or specific rates. In this one trade carriers are now required to file their actual going rates and to adhere to them. Rates so filed are subject to suspension, and the Bureau may, after hearing, determine whether the rates proposed are justified. The Bureau has acted to remove discriminatory practices and has taken steps looking to the improvement of intercoastal tariffs, which, its investigations have indicated, are in a deplorably bad condition.

In this trade contract carriers are included in the definition of a common carrier, and are required to file and adhere to published rates, which are subject to suspension.

The Shipping Board Bureau has limited jurisdiction over common carriers—other than cargo tramps—engaged in shipping in foreign trade routes, and even more limited jurisdiction over persons furnishing wharfinger or other terminal service in connection with such common carriers. Its powers are derived from the Shipping Act, 1916, and, to a less extent, from the Merchant Marine Act, 1920. These acts were directed primarily to the promotion of our merchant marine; the powers of regulation conferred were such as were deemed necessary to protect our carriers and exporters against unfair competition of foreign operators. For many years this regulatory authority lay dormant, emphasis being placed on other matters. In recent years, however, the Shipping Board and its successor, the Shipping Board Bureau, have endeavored to use some of these powers to correct conditions in foreign shipping, which have become increasingly bad as world-wide trade depression has intensified the struggle for traffic. Rates may be altered to remove discrimination. Conference agreements are subject to approval, thus affording the Bureau a direct contact with domestic and foreign lines operating to and from our ports, and a limited but beneficial control over the rates and practices of such lines. It has the power to award reparation.

As the present bill proposes no change in the existing powers over foreign shipping but merely transfers them to the Interstate Commerce Commission, no further discussion of this field of regulation is necessary. It is expected that if this bill is enacted the Commission will study the need for corrective measures and possible ways in which improvement can be brought about. Its recommendations can be considered at some future session of the Congress.

Before passing to the interstate section of S. 1632 it should be noted that the present jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over water carriers is left undisturbed. Joint rates will be subject to part I, as will the port-to-port rates of railroad subsidiaries.

In preparing the interstate section of the bill much use was made of the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Copeland or Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933. The general provisions of those acts and of S. 1632 relating to administrative procedure, enforcement, accounts, reports, and so forth, are substantially similar, and detailed comment is unnecessary. The same is true of many of the provisions relating to tariffs, rates, and discriminations. Where differences exist, the provisions of S. 1632 are more detailed and complete and therefore better adapted to securing effective results.

The respects in which S. 1632 adds to the existing regulation of water carriers, other than that now in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, may be summarized as follows:

Rates: All common carriers, and not, as at present, only those in the intercoastal trade, will be required to file and adhere to their going rates; 30 days' notice of changes in rates, now required only in the intercoastal trade, supersedes the 10 days' notice required elsewhere; the Commission can, however, in its discretion, allow changes on less notice; rates are subject to a maximum suspension period of 7 months, compared with a 4 months' period in the intercoastal trade at present; to the present ineffective power to prescribe maximum rates is added the important power to fix minimum or specific rates. The Commission's control over rates is, however, subject to relaxation where this would be desirable and compatible with the purpose of the bill—see section 304 (e), which also has general application. The Commission is also directed by section 307 (e) to fix common carrier rates with a view to the inherent advantages of water transportation and to other circumstances surrounding such transportation.

The provisions with respect to contract-carrier rates are, for the most part, new. The only contract carriers now subject to regulation are those in the intercoastal trades. Under S. 1632, contract carriers are required to file schedules of minimum rates or charges, or, in the discretion of the Commission, copies of their contracts, but the Commission, in a proper case, may grant relief from this requirement. Contract carriers are forbidden to charge less but not more than the minimum, thereby preserving as fully as is consistent with the public interest, their freedom of contract with their patrons. No period of notice is specified for changes in rates. Upon complaint, or the Commission's own initiative, and after due hearing, the Commission may prescribe a minimum rate (307 (g)). There is no provision for the suspension of new or changed rates which may be filed by contract carriers. The Commission is expressly directed to consider the costs of service of such carriers and the effect which the minimum rates it may prescribe would have upon the movement of traffic by such carriers.

Certificates of public convenience and necessity, and permits: There are no precedents in existing regulations of water carriers for such certificates and permits, except that the Shipstead-Denison Act of 1928 requires the Commission to issue certificates to common carriers on certain inland waters on a showing that they are able to furnish service in cooperation with the railroads. Certificates and permits are an operating authority which define where the holders may operate. Operators in existence in 1934 are given certificates or permits as of right; others must prove that the addition of their services is necessary in the public interest. Operators who hold certificates or permits may add to their equipment "as the development of the business and the demands of the public shall require" (sec. 310 (d)). Revocation of certificates and permits can be made only for willful failure to comply with the terms of the act or the Commission's rulings thereunder and then only after proper notice.

Dual operation (sec. 311): Carriers may not conduct both common- and contract-carrier operations without the consent of the Commission. This control is needed to prevent unfair competitive practices and discriminations. Thus a common carrier could, if not checked, defeat his common-carrier rates by granting a special concession on shipments on a contract basis made by the same shipper.

Consolidations, mergers, and acquisitions of control (sec. 313): This provision is patterned after that of the Interstate Commerce Act and is intended to check the kinds of practices which have frequently had harmful effects in the railroad field. It applies only to common carriers and, in some respects, to companies authorized to acquire control of such carriers.

Issuance of securities (sec. 314): This provision has the same purpose as the foregoing. It also applies only to common carriers and will not reach the many small operators, and it does not come into play until a carrier's issues reached one-half a million.

Reparation (sec. 308): S. 1632, as amended on the floor last week, changes the period in which claims may be filed from 2 years, the present Shipping Act provision, to 1 year for reparation complaints and 1 year for overcharges. These changes correspond generally to those proposed to be made in the Interstate Commerce Act by a bill now before the committee (S. 1631), except that one provision of that bill would have made one time limit as short as 90 days.

Pooling and other operating agreements (sec. 309): The pooling or conference agreement section of S. 1632 applies only to earnings, losses, traffic, or service; section 15 of the Shipping Act embraces additional subjects of agreement, including the fixing of rates, giving special rates, accommodations, privileges, or advantages; controlling, regulating, or destroying competition; and preferential, exclusive, or cooperative working arrangements, and so forth. Many, if not all, of these matters are either unnecessary or inappropriate subjects of agreement under the provisions of this bill.

Prescription of accounts (sec. 315): S. 1632 adds to the present power of the Shipping Board Bureau to require reports, the important power to prescribe accounting for those water carriers not now subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This power, while discretionary with the Commission, is an essential one. Until it secured this power, in 1906, the Commission could exercise no effective control over carriers' accounting practices. There is every reason to believe that the accounts of water carriers are in as bad shape as those of the railroads formerly were and that they are even more lacking in uniformity. With the power to prescribe accounts goes the equally important power to inspect and audit the books of the carriers.

Other additions to present subject matter of regulation: The principal items to be mentioned here are the power to prescribe a uniform bill of lading (sec. 316); to impose penalties on shippers for soliciting or receiving rebates, and for making false claims, and on common carriers and their agents for disclosing information prejudicial to their customers (sec. 319 (f)); and for discriminatory practices with respect to the collection of freight charges (sec. 320). These additions are important but do not require explanation.

Mr. President, the bill amends the Interstate Commerce Act and is designated as part III thereof. A companion bill, Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of motor carriers in domestic and foreign commerce, was originally designated as part III. As that bill was reached first in the executive sessions of the committee, it was renumbered part II and as such was passed by this body on April 16. The water-carrier bill therefore becomes part III and all section numbers have been correspondingly changed.

SECTION 302, DECLARATION OF POLICY, DELEGATION OF JURISDICTION, AND APPLICATION

As is indicated in the committee's report on the bill, regulation of water carriers is at present very complete in some fields and incomplete or altogether lacking in others. Also, the administration of this regulation is divided between two Federal agencies—the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce. If common carriers by water, other than those owned by railroads, enter into joint rates with the railroads, these rates, but not the port-to-port rates of such carriers, are subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission. On the other hand, steamship companies which were allowed to remain in railroad ownership after the passage of the Panama Canal Act in 1912 are subject to regulation by the Commission in all particulars, including their port-to-port rates. These companies are at present operating mainly along the Atlantic coast and between the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. The Shipping Act, 1916, vests in the Shipping Board, now a bureau of the Department of Commerce, a considerable measure of control over common carriers operating over regular routes on the high seas and Great Lakes in the domestic trades. The Intercoastal Shipping Act of 1933 materially strengthened the regulation of common carriers in intercoastal commerce by way of the Panama Canal and made contract carriers in that trade subject to the provisions of that act. Inland carriers, however, are under no regulation, except as they become parties to joint rates. Contract carriers, except in the intercoastal trade, are entirely unregulated. The Shipping Board Bureau has certain regulatory powers over shipping in foreign commerce, vested in it by the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended by the Merchant Marine Act, 1928.

The pending bill brings common carriers in all of the domestic trades under regulation and places contract carriers—those who do not hold themselves out to the general public but do business under charters, contracts, agreements, or arrangements—under a limited degree of regulation required to protect the common-carrier water service, in whose maintenance the general public has a vital interest. Such regulation is concentrated in one body, the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which also is transferred such regulatory authority as the Shipping Board Bureau now has over foreign shipping. The bill provides for the transfer of the regulatory personnel of the Shipping Board Bureau, as well as all of its records relating to matters of regulation. In this way the experience gained by the Shipping Board Bureau and the information it has collected are made immediately available to the Commission.

This explanation has been necessary in order that there may be proper understanding of the declaration of policy, which in this bill is particularly significant. Centralization of regulatory authority in a body whose duties, while they have embraced water lines, pipe lines, and other means of transportation and communication, have been primarily those of regulating the railroads, makes it essential that Congress give that body as definite directions as possible as to how it shall proceed in those instances where conflicting claims are made by the different agencies of transportation whose regulation is entrusted to it. These directions, embraced in the declaration of policy of this bill and also in that found in the companion motor-carrier bill, give assurance to these smaller but important carriers that their respective merits will be as fully recognized as possible and that the interests of one form of transportation will not be subordinated to those of another. The amendments made in committee strengthen the declaration of policy in this respect and emphasize the need for coordination between the water carriers themselves, between such carriers and other agencies of transportation, and in the regulation of all carriers. The provisions with respect to discrimination, preference, and unfair or destructive competitive practices are referred to in particular in subsequent sections of the bill and lay a stronger and more definite basis for administrative action.

Paragraph (b) of section 302 also contains an important statement of congressional policy. As originally drawn, the bill brought all interstate contract carriers within its terms. At the hearings various interests, particularly the Great Lakes bulk-cargo carriers and those operating tanker vessels, protested that they are conducting a special form of transportation and one which, because of its low costs and the specialized facilities used, is not competitive with common-carrier service by water, and therefore is not in need of Government regulation. It is said that competition assures the fixing of reasonable charges and without harmful effects on other agencies of transportation. The committee found that such claims are in large part justified, and considered the possibility of amending the bill to exempt carriers of bulk commodities. Difficulty was found, however, in drawing up such an exemption. For example, a commodity, such as coal, may not be competitive with common-carrier service on one trade route, but competitive with it on another. So also with grain. It was therefore concluded to lay down a precise statement of policy and to instruct the Commission to determine the transportation which, because of its not furnishing actual and substantial competition with common-carrier service, could reasonably be relieved from any regulation. This policy is declared in the following language:

> It is hereby expressly declared to be the policy of Congress to exclude from the provisions of this part transportation by interstate contract carriers by water which, by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirement of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by interstate common carriers by water in the same trade or route. * * *

A very large portion of all traffic handled by contract carriers would be exempted under this provision. The Great Lakes ore carriers and the tankers may be cited as examples.

As heretofore stated, it is also the intent to regulate those contract carriers which do not fall within the exemption only to the extent necessary to protect common-carrier service by water. With this in mind, a number of changes, indicated presently, have been made in committee to lessen the scope of contract carrier regulation.

Section 302 (b) also makes it clear that, "unless and to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find such application necessary to carry out the policy of Congress declared in section 302 (a)", the act shall not apply to interstate transportation, whether by common or contract carriers, within the limits of a single harbor or between places in contiguous harbors unless such transportation is part of a continuous through movement under a common control, management, or arrangement to or from a place without the limits of any such harbor or harbors. This conditional exemption also applies to transportation by ferry and by small craft of not more than 50 tons carrying capacity and to vessels carrying passengers only and equipped to carry no more than 16 passengers. Attention should be called to the fact that the material beginning at line 16, page 3, has been transferred from a later section of the bill. Paragraphs (c) and (d) have been shifted to section 323.

SECTION 303, DEFINITIONS

The only changes of importance in this section, other than those involving transfers of material, result from the elimination of all references to wharfingers (those, other than water carriers, who provide water terminal facilities) and private carriers and the curtailment of the provisions relating to shipping in foreign commerce. The reasons for these changes are discussed in the committee's report on this bill. The Coordinator is conducting additional investigations of the entire question of terminal charges and services; pending their completion, it seemed best to eliminate the provisions relating to wharfingers. With the elimination of the commodities clause, no need remained for the retention of other provisions relating to private carriers.

The definition of "interstate common carrier by water"—302 (d)—has been modified in order to make it conform to the legal conception of the term. The common carrier typically carries general traffic on regular schedules between designated termini, but he may also engage in irregular route service or confine his operations to one or a few commodities so long as he holds himself out to transport such commodities for all who apply. The terms "facility" and "transportation" are given broad meanings, as they are in the Interstate Commerce Act. The terminal operations of common carriers subject to regulation are thereby made expressly amenable to regulation, and a comprehensive coverage of all the incidental phases of transportation, such as storage, transfer in transit, refrigeration, and elevation, is assured. Otherwise the intent of the bill, to put all shippers requiring like service on an equal basis, might in this respect be defeated by leaving loopholes through which concessions could be made.

The change in paragraph (j), eliminating the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone from the terms of the bill, results in exempting transportation to or from or within such possessions from regulation as either interstate or foreign transportation. This result was not intended. Last week I offered an amendment, as follows:

[(m)] (j) The term "possession of the United States" shall include [the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone, but this enumeration shall not be construed to exclude any such possession of the United States] Puerto Rico, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of March 2, 1917, to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and any other act or acts which are inconsistent with the provisions of this part, and any other possession of the United States except as otherwise provided in this paragraph: Provided, That the transportation of property between any place in the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone and any place in the United States or a Territory, District, or possession thereof shall be deemed transportation in foreign commerce, except that when property so transported is reconsigned or transshipped at any place in the Canal Zone to any place in the United States or any Territory, District, or possession thereof, such transportation shall be deemed transportation in interstate commerce: Provided further, That nothing in this part shall be construed to affect the power of the government of the Philippine Islands vested in it by the second proviso of section 21 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, or by any other act or acts.

This change would, and properly, because of the special considerations which enter in in the case of both the Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone, exempt transportation within the islands or the Zone from regulation as interstate commerce.

SECTION 304, GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

This section confers general power on the Commission to make reasonable orders and regulations and to entertain complaints. The word "supervise" has been eliminated from paragraph (a) to meet the objection that it might place a responsibility on the Commission which more properly belongs to the managements of the carriers.

Paragraph (b) gives the Commission power to inquire into the organization of water carriers and the management of their business. This provision is similar to that found in the original Interstate Commerce Act, passed in 1887, which has frequently been resorted to by the Commission in making some of its most valuable investigations.

Paragraph (c) is of great importance. It enables the Commission to classify interstate common carriers and interstate contract carriers by water in special groups and to vary the regulatory requirements as to rates, accounts, reports, and other matters in accordance with the nature of the services rendered and the public need. Water transportation is a more varied form of transportation than rail and adjustments of the regulation and flexibility in its administration to satisfy special conditions will enable the Commission to avoid imposing unnecessary burdens upon the carriers. It is to the interest of carriers, shippers, and the public that this paragraph be retained.

Old paragraphs (d) to (g) are stricken because they relate to shipping in foreign commerce.

Paragraph (d) enables the Commission to relax the regulation where necessary to overcome the effects of the competition of carriers operating to or from a foreign port, where such competition is found to cause undue disadvantage to interstate common carriers or interstate contract carriers.

Paragraphs (e) and (f) empower the Commission to investigate and determine whether any water carrier has failed to comply with the terms of the act or the Commission's requirements thereunder, and provides for the rehearing of cases on which the Commission has rendered a decision. Paragraph (e) also enables the Commission to dismiss any complaint that does not state reasonable grounds for action on its part. This amendment was made to give assurance that water carriers will not be subjected to harassment by their competitors.

SECTION 305, INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION—RATES, FARES, CHARGES, AND PRACTICES

Paragraph (a) imposes the duty on every interstate common carrier by water to furnish safe and adequate service at just and reasonable rates and charges and under reasonable regulations as to the services which the shipper or traveler is entitled to receive. Aside from the elimination of references to wharfingers, the principal change in this paragraph is the omission of the requirement that interstate common carriers by water enter into through routes and joint rates with common carriers by water in interstate commerce or with common carriers by railroad or motor vehicle. This change was made in committee in the belief that conditions in water transportation are not sufficiently stabilized to warrant putting this responsibility on water carriers. A similar change was made in the motor-carrier bill. However, the present Interstate Commerce Act authorizes the Commission to require a railroad to enter into through routes and joint rates with interstate common carriers by water on application of the latter. The latter carriers are permitted, by paragraph (b), to enter into through routes and joint rates with each other and also with common carriers by railroad or motor vehicles. Such joint rates, fares, and charges and, the divisions thereof, are required to be just and reasonable and to be free from prejudice to any carrier party thereto. Where these rates are made by water carriers and railroads they continue to be subject to part I of the act, and where they are made by water carriers and motor carriers they are subject to part II.

Paragraph (c) prohibits any interstate common carrier by water giving any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to "any person, port, port district, gateway, transit point, locality, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever", or from subjecting any such person, and so forth, to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage. Except for the addition of the words "port", "port district", "gateway", and "transit point", this paragraph conforms to the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, and is similar to sections 14 and 16 of the Shipping Act, 1916. The committee, in its report, has recommended the addition of the same words to the Interstate Commerce Act. The proviso has been added to protect carriers from claims of discrimination or prejudice by their competitors, though it is not absolutely essential in view of the interpretation put on section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act.

SECTION 306, RATES, FARES, CHARGES, AND PRACTICES—CONTINUED

Paragraph (a) requires interstate common carriers by water to file with the Commission and keep open to public inspection tariffs showing all the rates and charges applicable to their services and all regulations which affect the value of such services. All references to the rates and charges of wharfingers have been eliminated.

Paragraph (b) enables the Commission to prescribe the form of publication and the manner of filing and posting such tariffs and to reject any tariff not complying with its requirements.

Paragraph (c) contains a rigid prohibition against any departure from lawful tariffs.

Paragraph (d) requires 30 days' notice of any change in any rate, charge, regulation, or practice except that "the Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow changes upon less notice than that herein specified, or modify the requirements of this section with respect to posting and filing of tariffs either in particular instances or by general order applicable to special circumstances or conditions." This exception, which is comparable with section 6 (3) of the Interstate Commerce Act, and section 2 of the Intercoastal Act, will, as in the case of the railroads, afford a means of adapting the tariff requirements to conditions which require either immediate action or warrant special consideration.

Paragraph (e) applies to charges of contract carriers by water. Such carriers are required to file with the Commission and keep open to public inspection, in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Commission, schedules showing their minimum rates or charges, or, in the discretion of the Commission, copies of every contract, charter, agreement, or undertaking to which such carriers are parties. Permission to file schedules of minimum charges was added by amendment to make the requirement less onerous,

An amendment was also made in committee which prohibits the charging of a less compensation than the minimum rates or charges thus established. This requirement is more in keeping with the nature of contract-carrier operations than would be a rigid requirement of adherence to a specific rate or charge. It is also in line with the Commission's authority to prescribe rates, given in section 307 (g). The proviso in this paragraph enables the Commission, "in its discretion and for good cause shown", to grant relief from the provisions of this paragraph. A more flexible and less burdensome administration of the regulation will thus be enabled, in line with the general policy of the act of not placing more regulation on contract carriers than is essential for the protection of common-carrier service by water.

SECTION 307, COMMISSION'S AUTHORITY OVER RATES, ETC.

Paragraph (a) provides for the reception of complaints against the rates, charges, or practices of interstate common carriers and interstate contract carriers by water. The elimination of reference to joint rates with motor carriers is made because jurisdiction over such rates is carried in part II. The last sentence has been transferred to section 304 (e) to give it general application, as indicated in an earlier paragraph.

Paragraph (b) empowers the Commission, on a finding after hearing, on complaint or on its own initiative, that any individual or joint rate, charge, or practice is unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or prejudicial or otherwise in violation of the provision of the part, to prescribe—

The lawful rate, fare, or charge or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rate, fare, or charge thereafter to be observed, or the lawful regulation or practice thereafter to be made effective.

The substitution of "may" for "shall", in line 17, is for the purpose of relieving the Commission from entering a mandatory order in cases where a recommendation or opinion would serve to correct the conditions complained of. The discretionary power thus conferred is similar to those given in section 15 (1) of part I.

Old paragraph (c) has been eliminated along with other provisions relating to mandatory through routes and joint rates.

New paragraph (c) is a protection against claims for rates based on goodwill or earning power and against setting up values based on the privileges conferred upon the carriers by the terms of the bill.

New paragraph (d) empowers the Commission to pass upon the divisions of joint rates to which carriers by water are parties and to prescribe proper divisions. The material eliminated is pertinent to joint rates with motor carriers and to mandatory joint rates.

New paragraph (e) should be read in connection with the declaration of policy in section 302 (a). The wording follows that of section 15 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended in 1933, except that, as an additional protection to water carriers, it directs the Commission to give due consideration to the inherent advantages of water transportation. The intent is to require the Commission to fix water rates on a basis that, so far as possible, reflects the costs and advantages of water services. A similar paragraph is found in the companion motor-carrier bill.

Paragraph (f) gives the Commission the power to suspend proposed changes in rates, charges, regulations, or practices for a maximum period of 7 months beyond the time when they would otherwise go into effect. It is similar to section 15 (7) of the Interstate Commerce Act, and to section 3 of the Intercoastal Act, 1933, except that the latter provides a suspension period of 4 months. The change in the last two lines is made to protect the initial filing of tariffs by all carriers in operation when this section takes effect and not merely those of carriers covered by the grandfather clause of section 310.

Paragraph (g) empowers the Commission to find, upon a finding, after hearing upon complaint or its own initiative, that any rate, charge, regulation, or practice of a contract carrier or the form or provisions of any charter, contract, agreement, or undertaking contravenes the policy declared in section 302 (a), the minimum rate or charge or the regulation, practice, and so forth, to be observed for the future. The Commission is directed, however, in making such a determination, to give no undue advantage or preference to any such contract carrier in competition with any interstate common carrier by water, and also to give consideration to the cost of contract-carrier service and to the effect which its requirements may have upon the movement of traffic by such contract carriers.

The changes here suggested are for the purpose of giving further assurance that in fixing minimum rates the Commission will give due consideration to the costs of contract-carrier service and to the effect which such rates may have upon the movement of traffic by such carriers. The ability of many shippers to provide their own facilities, and thus to shift the movement of traffic from contract to private operation if the minimum should be made too high, is one factor of importance in that connection. In other words, the Commission is to afford reasonable protection to common-carrier service, but is to avoid prejudicing contract carriers by requiring them to charge rates which will drive their traffic to private carriers.

Old paragraph (i) has been transferred to section 304 (f).

SECTION 308, REPARATION

The awarding of reparation to shippers who are overcharged or who sustain damage through the application of unreasonable, discriminatory, or prejudicial rates or practices is provided for in this section of the bill. As originally drawn, these provisions applied to contract carriers and wharfingers as well as to common carriers. By committee amendment wharfingers and contract carriers were eliminated, the former for reasons already stated, and the latter because the power to award reparation against contract carriers would not be in keeping with the special contractual relationship between such carriers and their patrons and with other provisions of the bill which authorizes the Commission to prescribe only minimum rates for contract carriers.

Sections 22 and 30 of the Shipping Act confer upon the Shipping Board similar powers with respect to awards of reparation, but are less specific and ample in the matter of procedure and other details. This section of the bill is patterned upon section 16, paragraphs 1 to 4, inclusive, of the Interstate Commerce Act, but varies from the provisions of that act and also those of the Shipping Act with respect to the periods of limitation for bringing complaints or suits. The Shipping Act fixes a uniform period of 2 years for the filing of all complaints. The Interstate Commerce Act allows, subject to certain modifications, 3 years for the commencement of actions for overcharges or undercharges, and 2 years for the filing of reparation complaints which are not based on overcharges. The present bill limits the period for the commencement of actions for overcharges and also for undercharges, subject to the exceptions in paragraph (c) (4), to 1 year from the time the cause of action accrues, and the period for bringing other reparation complaints is shortened from 2 years to 90 days. Corresponding changes are proposed in the Interstate Commerce Act in a bill, S. 1631, now pending before the committee. The periods of limitation should be uniform for reparation proceedings against railroads and all common carriers by water in the interstate trades. The shortening of these periods as proposed would eliminate considerable injustice inherent in the present situation and would not subject shippers to any undue hardship or inconvenience.

The changes in paragraph (c) (8) of this section have been made in order to simplify the language and to provide a reasonable period for the beginning of proceedings where the cause of action has accrued prior to the passage of the bill.

SECTION 309, POOLING AND OTHER OPERATING AGREEMENTS

This section extends to interstate common carriers by water the right to pool or apportion traffic, service, earnings, or losses. The privileges accorded are somewhat broader than those granted the railroads in 1920 by amendment of section 5 (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act, but are less inclusive than those accorded to water carriers under section 15 of the Shipping Act. The Commission is given authority to approve, disapprove, or modify any such agreement. The parties to agreements approved by the Commission are relieved from the provisions of the antitrust laws. The railroads have not to any great extent used their authority to pool traffic and earnings and water carriers may find less need for such authority under the regulation provided by the bill than they have had for it heretofore.

SECTION 310, CERTIFICATES OF PUBLIC CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY, AND PERMITS

Paragraph (a) requires all interstate common carriers by water to obtain certificates of public convenience and necessity before engaging in operation. These certificates are to be issued as of right to all carriers which were in operation in the year 1934 over the route or routes or in the trade or trades for which application is made and have continued their operation to the date of application. The addition of the words " or in the trade or trades " is made to cover irregular route operations; omission of the word " continuous " and addition of the words " in either event " provide assurance that a merely temporary interruption of service will not debar the granting of applications under the so-called " grandfather clause." At the request of the operators, the period within which application may be made for a grandfather certificate has been extended from 60 to 120 days. All references to certificates for wharfingers have been eliminated in this and the remaining paragraphs of this section.

Paragraph (b) merely outlines the general procedure for making applications and, as amended, enables a carrier which is not covered by the grandfather clause to continue in operation until his application is considered by the Commission.

Paragraph (c) requires the Commission to issue a certificate if it finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and that the service, to the extent authorized, is or will be required by the present or future public convenience and necessity.

Paragraph (d) indicates that a certificate issued to any carrier is to show specifically the route or routes over which, the port or ports to or from which, or the trade or trades in which such carrier is authorized to operate. It also empowers the Commission to attach, at the time of issuance or thereafter, reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations, including those relating to the extension of the route or routes. By amendment in committee the provisions relating to certificates have been considerably liberalized by adding " trade or trades ", by striking out the authority to attach limitations and conditions as to the furnishing of additional service within the field authorized by the certificates, and by adding in the proviso the express right of the carrier to add to his equipment facilities or service within the scope of his certificate as the development of his business and the demands of the public shall require. As amended, this paragraph substantially curtails the powers conferred by the original provisions, but nevertheless will enable the Commission to exercise a considerable measure of control over the amount of service rendered. It will have authority to prevent the possible future overtonnaging of routes to the disadvantage of operators already providing adequate service, but will be without power unduly to restrict the managements of the companies in adapting their service to changing conditions.

Old paragraph (e), which gave the Commission authority to pass on the curtailment or abandonment of service, has been deleted. This change was made in view of the claim of the carriers that they must be able to adjust their services to changes in demand and abandon operations as occasion may require. The railroads are not allowed, under section 1 (18) of the Interstate Commerce Act, to abandon their lines without receiving the prior consent of the Commission, but conditions in that field of transportation are different. It should be noted, however, that a water-carrier certificate would be subject to lapse with the abandonment of operation and that under paragraph (d) of this section and under section 313, relating to suspension, change, revocation, and transfer of certificates, and section 307 (f), giving the Commission the power to suspend rates filed by interstate common carriers by water, the Commission can exert considerable control over unwarranted abandonments or curtailments of service. The first eight lines of old paragraph (c) are in any event unnecessary in view of the provisions in paragraph (d).

New paragraph (e) merely prohibits the setting up by a carrier of the claim that a certificate confers a proprietary or exclusive right in the use of public waterways.

New paragraph (f) covers the granting of permits to contract carriers. Such carriers are protected by a grandfather clause similar to that found in the common-carrier section, and carriers in operation at the time this section takes effect but which are not entitled to a permit as of right are permitted to continue operations until their applications have been passed on. The other changes are the same as those made in paragraph (a).

New paragraph (g) indicates the procedure to be followed in applying for permits and requires the Commission to issue such permits if it finds that the applicant is fit, willing, and able to perform the service proposed and that the operation for which authority is sought will be consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 302 (a). This paragraph will apply, of course, only to contract carriers whose operations are found to be actually and substantially competitive with those of interstate common carriers by water. The changes made in committee liberalize the terms of the permits in a manner similar to that indicated in the case of certificates and make clear the intent to recognize contract carriage as a continuing business rather than a restricted operation under a particular contract or contracts.

OLD SECTION 311, REGISTRATION FOR PRIVATE CARRIERS BY WATER

This section has been eliminated for reasons indicated elsewhere.

SECTION 311 (OLD SEC. 312), DUAL OPERATION

In some instances water carriers find it advantageous to operate both as common carriers and contract carriers. The combination of the two types of service in one operator should not, however, be permitted without prior authorization by the Commission. Therefore, all operators proposing to institute or continue such dual operations are required to secure special permission under the terms of this section.

SECTION 312 (OLD SEC. 313), SUSPENSION, CHANGE, REVOCATION, AND TRANSFER OF CERTIFICATES AND PERMITS

(a) This paragraph empowers the Commission to amend, suspend, or revoke a certificate or permit, in whole or in part, for willful failure to comply with any provision of the part or any rule or regulation of the Commission promulgated thereunder. By amendment made to afford the carriers the greater security of tenure which they, at least, regard as necessary, the Commission is not to exercise its power of revocation without giving ample warning and opportunity to conform to its orders.

Paragraph (b) allows the transfer of certificates or permits with the approval of the Commission.

OLD SECTION 314, COMMODITIES CLAUSE

The original draft of the bill contained a commodities clause which, in terms, was somewhat more restrictive than that which was applied to the railroads by the Hepburn Act of 1906. However, the commodities clause in the present bill gave the Commission authority to grant exemptions where these would not be contrary to the public interest or the policy declared in section 302 (a). The industrially owned carriers raised much objection to this clause, urging that its enforcement would work a severe hardship on them and discourage the building of ships which are necessary for an adequate merchant marine. The committee eliminated the section with the idea that the Commission could observe the effect of such carriers on the conduct of the shipping business and recommend at some future time such legislation as it may deem to be necessary in the public interest.

SECTION 313 (SEC. 215 OF ORIGINAL BILL), CONSOLIDATION, MERGER, AND ACQUISITION OF CONTROL

This section sets forth the conditions under which consolidations, mergers, and acquisitions of control of interstate common carriers by water will be permitted, prohibits unifications which are not thus sanctioned, and gives the Commission supervision over such transactions. The provisions are derived from section 5, paragraphs (4) (a) to (15), of the Interstate Commerce Act and are substantially the same as those now applicable to railroads. In consonance with the provisions of section 5, paragraph (19) to (21), of that act, this section of the bill prohibits carriers by railroad from merging their properties with or acquiring control of such common carriers by water. Experience has shown that governmental control over unifications of railroads and public utilities in general is necessary in the public interest, and there is good reason to believe that such control would be beneficial with respect to common carriers by water.

The original bill applied to any part of the properties of water carriers as well as to the merger or acquisition of control of the entire properties. As amended by the committee, it would only apply to unifications of entire properties or a major part thereof. This change removes from the scope of the bill minor transactions which are without any real significance to the public, such as the sale of a barge or small vessel or other small items of property by one carrier to another.

The original bill also applied to transactions which involved the unifications of common with contract carriers. As amended by the committee, the bill would apply only to common carriers. This change was made in view of objections urged and in the belief that the public interest will be adequately protected by limiting the scope of governmental control to unifications of common carriers.

Another amendment by the committee somewhat broadens the scope of the original provisions by substituting the term "persons" for the term "corporations", as in line 25, page 44, and lines 5 and 12, page 45. Without this change there would be a serious lack of jurisdiction over acquisitions of control by associations, partnerships, and so forth.

Subparagraph (e) relieves any carrier or person affected by orders of the Commission under this section from the operation of the antitrust laws.

SECTION 314 (SEC. 216 OF THE ORIGINAL BILL), ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES

Common carriers by water and corporations authorized to acquire control of any such carrier are made subject to the provisions of paragraphs (2) to (11), inclusive, of section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act where the par value of securities to be issued, together with that of the securities outstanding, does not exceed $500,000. In the original bill it was proposed to repeal the provisions of the Securities Act, 1933, insofar as that act related to such security issues. The amendment adopted by the committee accomplishes the intent of this section by amending section 3 of the Securities Act so as to exempt securities of water carriers herein subjected to regulation. Securities issued by railroads are exempted by section 3 of the Securities Act, and the committee's amendment provides like treatment with respect to such security issues of water carriers as are subject to regulation by the Commission.

SECTION 315 (SEC. 217 OF THE ORIGINAL BILL), ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND REPORTS

This section gives the Commission discretionary authority to require the filing of reports and to prescribe the form of such reports or of the records and accounts to be kept by interstate water carriers. It also carries authority for the inspection of records and accounts by the Commission or its examiners or special agents. The Commission now has like authority with respect to railroads, pipe lines, and such water carriers as are subject to its jurisdiction, and the Shipping Act also provides for the filing of such periodic or special reports, contracts, memoranda, and so forth, as may be required by the Shipping Board. Under this section and section 304 (c) of the bill the Commission would have authority to adjust its requirements in these respects to the different types of carriers and operations in order to avoid any unnecessary exactions.

SECTION 316 (SEC. 218 OF THE ORIGINAL BILL), RECEIPTS, BILLS OF LADING, MANIFESTS, ETC.

This section makes applicable to common carriers of property the provisions of section 20 (11) of the Interstate Commerce Act. These provisions require the issuance of bills of lading, prohibit limitations of liability for loss or damage, and authorize suits against the carrier that issues the bill of lading, for loss or damage occurring on the line of a connecting carrier. Except in this latter respect, the provisions of section 20 (11) of the Interstate Commerce Act are similar to those of the Harter Act (secs. 190–195, title 46, U. S. C.), which now applies generally to the issuance of bills of lading or shipping documents by common carriers by water. Water carriers now subject to the Interstate Commerce Act are governed by the requirements of that act with respect to bills of lading and in the interest of shippers and of uniform regulation the provisions of section 20 (11) should be extended to all interstate common carriers by water over which the Commission is given jurisdiction.

SECTION 317 (SEC. 219 OF THE ORIGINAL BILL), NOTICES, ORDERS, AND SERVICE OF PROCESS

This section provides that interstate water carriers shall file the name and address of persons upon whom service of notices or orders may be made. It also provides that no order may be made without due hearing and that orders shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than 30 days, as the Commission shall prescribe and remain in force either for a specified period or until the Commission's further order. The Shipping Act does not require the designation of an agent and provides a maximum period of 2 years for the duration of orders. The bill provides for regulation of interstate water carriers in this respect like that now applicable to railroads. The same provision is found in the motor carrier bill.

SECTION 318 (SEC. 220 OF THE ORIGINAL BILL), ENFORCEMENT AND PROCEDURE

Paragraph (a) of this section incorporates by reference certain provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act which relate to the Commission's procedure and the enforcement of its orders. Section 12 of that act principally concerns procedure for procuring the attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to proceedings under the direction of the Attorney General for enforcement of the act and for punishment of violations. The paragraphs of section 16 to which reference is made relate to the service and enforcement of orders. The "compulsory testimony act" provides that no person shall be excused from testifying or producing documentary material on the ground that such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate him and provides for exemption from prosecution with respect to such testimony. In the immunity of witnesses act the exemption is restricted to natural persons. Section 17 of the Interstate Commerce Act concerns the internal organization of the Commission for the conduct of its business and authorizes the delegation of functions to divisions, individual commissioners, or boards of employees, and so forth.

Paragraph (6) of this section concerns enforcement of the act by injunction or other proper process and paragraph (c), the publication of reports by the Commission and their competency as evidence.

Most provisions of this section are in substitution for or amplification of similar provisions of the Shipping Act—sections 24, 25, 27, 29, and 31.

As in other parts of the bill, the committee has deleted from this section the reference to wharfingers appearing in the original bill.

SECTION 319 (OLD SEC. 221), UNLAWFUL ACTS AND PENALTIES

This section provides penalties for rebating and various other specific offenses and also contains a general provision for penalties applicable to violations of the act for which penalties are not otherwise provided. These penalty provisions are adapted from corresponding provisions contained in the Interstate Commerce Act or the Shipping Act, or both (sec. 10 (1), (2), (3); sec. 20 (2), (6), (7), (8); and sec. 15 (11), Interstate Commerce Act; sec. 1, Elkins Act; secs. 14, 20, 21, and 32, Shipping Act, 1916). The amendments proposed by the committee eliminate wharfingers and private carriers.

SECTION 320 (OLD SEC. 222), COLLECTION OF RATES AND CHARGES

The provisions of this section correspond with those found in section 3 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act. There are no similar provisions in the Shipping Act. These provisions have a twofold purpose, namely, the prevention of undue discrimination and preferences in the extension of credit for freight charges and the limitation of liability for undercharges on the part of commission merchants, brokers, or other agents of the shipper who have no beneficial interest in the property transported.

SECTION 321, TRANSPORTATION BY COMMON CARRIERS IN FOREIGN COMMERCE (OLD SECS. 223 TO 229, INCLUSIVE)

As explained in the report upon the bill, the committee has eliminated all the provisions contained in sections 223 to 229, inclusive, of the original bill and substituted therefor a new section, no. 321, which merely transfers to the Commission the regulatory powers and duties with respect to common carriers in foreign commerce and persons who are engaged in such commerce who are included in the term "other person subject to this act", now vested in the Shipping Board by certain sections of the Shipping Act enumerated in section 321 of the bill and section 19 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920. Reference to the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, in lines 6 and 7, should be deleted, as this act does not concern any powers or duties transferred to the Commission by the provisions of this bill. The reference to the Intercoastal Act, 1933, in lines 8 and 9, is also in error and should be deleted, as repeal of this act is provided for in a following section of the bill (sec. 323 (a)). These amendments will require omission of the words "and the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, and the powers and duties vested in the United States Shipping Board by the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933", in lines 6 to 9, inclusive, and the insertion of the words "also those vested in such Board by", after the word "and", in line 9.

SECTION 322 (OLD SEC. 232), ADMINISTRATION

Paragraph (a) of this section authorizes the Commission to employ the necessary experts, special agents, and so forth, for the administration of the act. Paragraph (b), as amended by the committee, prohibits members or examiners of the Commission from having any pecuniary interest in water carriers, railroads, motor vehicles, or other forms of transportation. Section 3 of the Shipping Act prohibits any Commissioner of the Shipping Board from having any official relation to or pecuniary interest in carriers or other persons subject to that act. Section 11 of the Interstate Commerce Act contains similar restrictions upon the members of the Commission. The committee amendments extend the same principle to examiners of the Commission and broaden the prohibition to include motor vehicles or any other form of transportation.

SECTION 323 (OLD SEC. 233), REPEALS, TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES, ETC.

This section, in paragraph (a), repeals the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, and sections 18 and 19 of the Shipping Act and such other provisions of that act and of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as may apply to matters within the Commission's jurisdiction and which may be in conflict with the provisions of this bill.

The Intercoastal Act and sections 18 and 19 of the Shipping Act relate solely to interstate water carriers and the substance of their provisions is embodied in the rate sections of this bill, so far as deemed appropriate for inclusion. Other regulatory functions of the Shipping Board are covered by the various sections of the Shipping Act enumerated in section 321 of the bill and by section 19 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920. The provisions of these sections concern transportation in foreign as well as in interstate commerce and, hence, are repealed only so far as they purport to apply to interstate transportation or conflict with the provisions for interstate regulation set forth in this bill.

Paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of this section preserve the respective jurisdiction of the Commission and the Department of Commerce to exercise powers which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act and also preserve in full force and effect any laws of navigation, the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts, and so forth, which are not in conflict with this act.

Paragraphs (e) and (f) transfer to the Commission the present employees and the files, records, property, and so forth, of the Division of Regulation of the Shipping Board Bureau and also any appropriations and unexpended balances available for the support of that division. As already suggested, this transfer of personnel and records will prevent any interruption or impairment of regulatory functions now exercised by the Division of Regulation.

Mr. President, I shall not further take up the time of the Senate to go into detail in explaining the bill. I feel that I have covered it as thoroughly as I can in a brief explanation. I hope that the bill will be passed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a moment ago I asked the Senator about section 18 of the 1916 act and its repeal. I rather think that section 316 of the pending bill answers my question.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I think that covers it.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson	Pittman
Ashurst	Connally	Keyes	Pope
Austin	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Bachman	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Lewis	Robinson
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Russell
Barbour	Dieterich	Lonergan	Schall
Barkley	Donahey	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bilbo	Duffy	McGill	Shipstead
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Smith
Bone	George	McNary	Steiwer
Borah	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Gibson	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulkley	Glass	Minton	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Murphy	Truman
Burke	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Nye	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Holt	Overton	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

ONE-MAN RAILWAY DOMINION OF THE WATERWAYS

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, as shown by the minority report submitted by my colleague, Senator SHIPSTEAD, the pending bill (S. 1632) transfers regulation of waterway transportation from War Department engineers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which regulates the railways.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, as now constituted under the new deal, consists of one man, Eastman, who demands socialization of all railways under Federal rule, as in European kingdoms and governments, including Russia.

The future of American waterway transportation, if this bill shall pass, rests completely in the hands of a one-man railway bureau, whose term of office and whose rulings are subject to the pleasure of the President, who thereby is made the transportation dictator of the United States—a President who already has a $5,000,000,000 war club to swing over the heads of recalcitrant Senators and Representatives to force their obedience to his will; a President who with his bureau appropriations has $8,000,000,000 subject to his will in coercing the 48 States in the coming election; a President who has 7,000,000 Federal officeholders to carry out the Executive will in the 1936 expenditure of this $8,000,000,000; a President whose $10,000,000,000 of debt, deficits, and doles are now carying 22,000,000 people, or one-fifth of the population, as public charges.

All which seems to be needed to complete the picture of royal succession in making our dictatorship permanent is complete control of transportation. The President, through his one-man control of railways and highways by recent acts and Executive orders, now has Federal control of interstate commerce and much of intrastate commerce by land transportation. But most of the States are anxious to develop their waterways—the waterways through which this country was settled and developed in the early days, and upon which they today hope for lower-cost transportation of heavy freight. This bill proposes to drive a nail into that hope by placing the waterways under the railway bureau and provide a complete one-man rule over all interstate transportation.

No man here needs to be told what such control of waterway transportation means. Royal favor is the price that every State must pay to secure the waterway development which it needs. Dictatorship means favoritism. Autocratic rule is a succession of acts of favoritism. The State which bows to the one-man ruler, kisses his feet, and gives him its vote in 1936 will get waterways. The State which refuses obeisance and withholds its electoral vote will have just as good a chance to get waterway transportation from the Federal one-man railway bureau as Henry Ford had to land a Government contract for motor cars under the late N. R. A. bureau.

My State of Minnesota protests against this bill. The Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Northwest Farmers' Union, the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, as well as the American Cotton Cooperative Association of the South, are all in protest against the dangers of this bill to American agriculture.

The shippers of my State and the Mississippi Valley are cpposed to this Senate bill 1632—the White House sudden substitute for Senate bill 1635, on which the hearings were held. This bill is a notable sample of the high-handed methods now in vogue under the new deal. As in the case of the recent Rayburn-Roosevelt utility electrocution bill, finally rejected by the House, one bill is laid before the committees for a hearing, and after the hearings are over a second bill, framed by the White House, is injected as an Executive substitute.

Among the protesting organizations of shippers of Minnesota and neighbor Mississippi Valley States against S. 1632 are:

The National Industrial Traffic League, through its representative at Duluth, Minn.

The Mississippi Valley Association, representing the States of the Middle West.

The Upper Mississippi Waterway Association, representing the grain and livestock States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota.

The Mississippi and St. Croix Improvement Commission, representing the farm and shipping interests of Minnesota and western Wisconsin.

They favored S. 1635 on which the hearings were held. They protest this Executive sleight-of-hand trick by which the Executive seeks to usurp the legislative functions of Congress.

In the majority report, submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]—the same Senator who had charge of the utility electrocution bill, the Rayburn-Roosevelt bill drafted by Cohen and Corcoran and now, fortunately, killed by the House—we find a letter from Franklin D. Roosevelt, of June 7, 1935, from which we learn:

First. That this bill which we are supposed to swallow—80 pages and 325 sections—at one gulp, was "prepared by the coordinator" and must be "pressed to early passage."

Second. Our Executive ruler tells us: "I can see no reason why the responsibility of the regulation of intercoastal, coastwise, and inland waterways should not be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission." This means his one-man railway commission, named and subject to the will of the autocrat who swings a $5,000,000,000 war club over these deliberations and the vote of the 48 States.

If this bill passes and transfers the waterways to White House control, and the State of Minnesota votes against the reelection of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1936—as it is morally certain to do—the State of Minnesota, at the headwaters of the Mississippi, has just as much chance for White House cooperation in waterway development as the State of Louisiana, at the mouth of the Mississippi, has to get work relief from the $5,000,000,000 Roosevelt allocation, or from the doles of the F. E. R. A. and C. W. A. or from the Ickes distribution of the P. W. A. billions.

If this coordinator bill from the Frankfurter, Cohen, and Corcoran law mill of the "brainstorm trust", which the President labels "must" and "pressed to early passage", is passed by Congress, there is only one remedy left for the 12 States of the Middle West, which produce two-thirds of the Nation's food, and that is to vote bureaucratic dictatorship out of Washington and turn the $5,000,000,000 Mussolini out of the White House. I am wondering if the Cotton States, which produce the bulk of our clothing fiber, are not rapidly approaching that same conclusion.

Wherein is there any semblance of democracy in this one-man autocracy? Take the whole line of Presidents born in the cotton-growing and tobacco-growing States of the South—Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Tyler, Polk, Woodrow Wilson—where do we find one who would stand for the autocracy which now seeks to override both Congress and the rights of the States?

Wherein is there any semblance between the autocracy of the present White House and its campaign against the Constitution, on the one hand, and the decision, past and present, of justices of the Supreme Court from the Southern States—the decisions of John Marshall, Rutledge, Blair, Iredell, Bushrod Washington, Wayne, Barbour, Campbell, Harlan, Lamar, the late Chief Justice White, and the present Justice McReynolds?

Look over the Democratic doctrines of the leaders of the once solid South, the speeches of the House Speakers, and Vice Presidents—John C. Calhoun, Breckinridge, Stevenson, Bell, Polk, Cobb, Carlisle, and Crisp—and see if you recognize in their democracy any of the autocratic demands of this administration in its assault upon government by the people and upon the rights of our sovereign States?

The distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], in his great speech delivered at the foot of Washington Monument on July 4, 1935—the day when no new-deal exponent of this administration raised a voice for American liberty anywhere in this land—the Senator from Virginia, I repeat, expressed what I believe to be the true sentiment of both North and South when he declared, midst the cheers of this patriotic assembly, "the choice is between Constitution and chaos." That, Mr. President, is the choice which lies at the fundamentals of this bill.

Another Democratic leader, Albert C. Ritchie, four times Governor of Maryland, expressed the issue in these words:

> The bureaucratic centralization in Washington will, unless checked, destroy the self-governing function of the sovereign States, on which rests our entire governmental structure.

The House has checked the autocratic electrocution of utilities. It is the opportunity of the Senate to check this bureaucratic centralization of transportation powers, which vitally affects the progress and development of the vast majority of our States.

Governor Talmadge, of Georgia, on July 4 asked if we were going to "obey the orders of 72 bureaucracies in Washington" and aid their ruler to override the Constitution. Our vote on this bill carries our answer.

OUR CONSCIENCE AND OUR OATH, OUR GUIDE

Mr. President, why do we sit here mute while our country is being betrayed? Our conscience and our oath should be our guide, and we should denounce with all the vehemency at our command this administration's betrayal of our Republic.

If any President of the United States preceding this one had done or attempted to do what this administration has accomplished, would he not have been impeached?

Shall we sit here like dumb, driven cattle, waiting for the butcher's knife, hoping only to deflect the destructive knife through the gallant defense of the Supreme Court?

Oh, for a modern Patrick Henry to flame our Americanism again to the sticking point. "Why stand we here idle? What is it the gentlemen wish? Is life so pure", or the pretended personal security promised by the communistic administration, "so sweet as to be purchased at the price" of regimentation and subserviency, "chains, and slavery"?

Why can we not see that this administration's so-called "war on depression" has been in reality a war on recovery? Every move he has made has been to create a planned chaotic condition. When that chaos has reached to sufficient riots and strikes will the mailed fist of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy appear? Meanwhile, why is it he wants our gold bullion amounting to half of all the gold in the world, of which no American citizen dare hold a fraction of a grain, under his edict, moved to the caves of Kentucky, where his picked regiments may defend it against the righteous wrath of our people, which wrath will furnish the excuse needed to put it down by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy? Will half the gold of all the world in the hands of the dictator cement the contemplated empire and fulfill his prophecy of being the last President of the United States? Shall history write the name of this administration as the last President of the United States and the first emperor?

Shall we sit here day after day blinded to the unbelievable evident purpose of the President and pass bill after bill at his command to further his conniving Fabian plan of ultimate destruction of our Republic founded upon the teachings of Christ and the individualism of man?

Why can it not be revealed to us before it is too late that when his planned chaos shall have reached such proportions of strife and revolution that his next move will be, in furtherance of his grandiose ideas, to take over this chaotic and riotous condition by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and build his throne upon the shattered elements of our once glorious and free Nation?

He that hath eyes to see, let him see.
He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

Let us reaffirm our oath to defend the Constitution and the sovereign power of the people that government of the people and by the people shall not perish from the earth.

Mr. President, I read an editorial from the Tonganoxie Mirror, of Tonganoxie, Kans.

[From Tonganoxie (Kans.) Mirror of June 27, 1935]

TEDDY'S VIEW OF FRANKFURTER

"The President is faced with dissention amongst the Democrats in Congress."

"The President accepts HUEY LONG's share-the-wealth plan."

"The President, being advised of the Supreme Court's N. R. A. decision, called Prof. Felix Frankfurter to the White House."

These headlines in the news are daily occurrences. The public mind is confused, perplexed. In some quarters there is a tendency to pooh-pooh as ridiculous attempts to find explanations in the backgrounds of unofficial leaders who influence constitutional officers of the Government.

Take the case of Mr. Frankfurter.

"Frankfurter is a foreign-born Jew, of Austrian birth. He is today head of the law department of Harvard University, and aside from Franklin D. Roosevelt, probably the most powerful figure in Washington. For 30 years he defended radicals, Communists, and I. W. W.'s."—Revealer, Wichita.

"Felix Frankfurter: National committee A. C. L. U. (anyone who has taken the trouble to learn what this organization is and does, knows it is directed by Communist-Socialist revolutionary leaders and that it furthers and legally protects the red movement in all its branches, strikes, atheism, sex freedom, opposition to deportation of reds, etc.); legal counsel for N. A. A. C. P., subsidized by Garland funds, headed by W. Z. Foster, Scott Nearing, other Communists."—Red Network, Milwaukee.

As far back as 1917 no less a personage than former President Theodore Roosevelt, in a letter to Frankfurter, said:

"Thank you for your frank letter. I answer it at length because you have taken and are taking * * * an attitude that seems to me to be fundamentally that of Trotsky and other Bolsheviki leaders in Russia; an attitude that may be fraught with mischief to this country."

This information is available (and more so) to constitutional Democrats in Congress as to the Mirror, but they are in the odd position of being unable to publicly explain their position both through retaliation and because their own party leaders are involved.

Certainly Republicans in calling attention to such angles, do so with great reluctance. There are thousands of patriotic American Democrats. They did not elect Felix Frankfurter. They have been as patriotic in their respect for the Stars and Stripes and constitutional Government in America as any patriotic Republican. They have contested with the Republican Party in domestic policies as to whom should best serve the popular welfare. The issue of Americanism is no more their choice than it is of those who are termed Republicans.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, never, I think, have I with greater reluctance undertaken to debate a pending measure than the one now before the Senate. When one senses that everything is cut and dried and that the end is inevitable there is not much encouragement to make any effort to stand off the inevitable. I have the feeling that this bill has been sent down as a "must" bill and therefore that it must and will pass.

It is also distressing that many steamship lines, which, in my judgment, will be adversely affected by this proposed legislation, appear to favor it. Ever since I have been a Member of the Senate I have tried as best I could to favor the cause of the American merchant marine. I felt it my duty to do that because I in part represent the largest port in the world, and to and from that port sail vessels representing millions of tons of weight. It would be calamitous to my State to have any misfortune come to the American merchant marine. I think it has been generally recognized amongst shipping men that my inclination has been to help them in all the ways that I could. I am not saying on the floor of the Senate what I have not said to them individually and collectively, that there is a most remarkable lack of cooperation and coordination on the part of shipping in this country. I sometimes become so disgusted with the whole shipping outfit that I think I never again will raise my voice to help them. At the same time, however, we have the necessities of the country to consider, and I do not think any informed person can fail to realize how necessary a merchant marine is to a nation.

England has grown great by reason of her shipping. No nation can hold an important place in the sun without an efficient and effective merchant marine. One cannot read the history of England from the time of Alfred the Great without discovering how important has seemed to that little island the encouragement of its shipping. In the time of Alfred the Great there was issued a proclamation—I think in the year 891, if I remember correctly—that special honor should be conferred upon any citizens of his realm who crossed the seas three times in ships of their own. "The seas" in that day meant simply the channels to the Continent.

When we seek for the origin of the preamble to all our recent merchant-marine legislation, beginning with the act of 1920 and including the acts of 1924 and 1928, in which that preamble has been repeated, we find it in the early acts of Great Britain. One can go to the statutes of the time of Henry VIII and find written into the laws of Great Britain of that time the very sentiments which we have expressed in the preambles to our shipping acts, that in time of war the merchant marine should be used for the national defense and in time of peace should be used to promote trade and commerce. So to my mind nothing can be more important to the American people than an efficient, successful merchant marine.

Unfortunately, in our efforts to benefit American shipping, we enacted laws which were good in themselves but which were not well administered, and because of bad administration those laws have fallen into disrepute. I have no defense to offer of all that. There are explanations which can be made, and I venture to say that when the mail contracts go into court next fall it will be found that most of them were in the public interest and that all but a very few have been entered into in full accordance with the law. However, I am not here to defend what has taken place in the past. It is my ardent desire to do what I can, representing a maritime State, to further the cause of the American merchant marine.

On the 4th of March last the President of the United States sent to us a message advocating a frank and open subsidy to American shipping. It was essential that this law be speedily formulated because under the law as it then existed the mail contracts would terminate on the 30th of April. It took a long time to formulate a law.

In connection with that measure the Senate Committee on Commerce was aided by the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who has been an authority on the American merchant marine for many years. Starting his career here as an assistant clerk to the Commerce Committee and afterward having a long and honorable career in the House of Representatives, where he served as Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, he came to the Senate, where he has been an active and useful member of the Commerce Committee. We had his assistance.

We had the assistance of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who has long been interested in the American merchant marine. We had the assistance of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON]. We had the assistance of other members of the committee in the formulation of the bill.

Then we held joint hearings. Judge BLAND, the able Representative from Virginia, Chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, with Mr. LEHLBACH, ranking Republican member, and other members from the House committee, met jointly with our committee, and we formulated the measures which were finally presented in the House and in the Senate.

The House has passed the Bland bill, the ship-subsidy bill. Upon the calendar of the Senate is its companion bill, which we discussed for a day and then turned aside because we found it was not one of the "must" bills.

Mr. President, I contend that it is unfair to Members of the Senate who have worked as hard as have these Members if no action is to be taken on that bill. Long and exhaustive hearings were held, day after day and week after week, and finally a bill was evolved which represented the views of the While House, so far as we could interpret them. I think it is unfortunate if we are not permitted to consider that bill upon its merits and determine whether or not we shall enter upon a plan for maintaining an effective American merchant marine. No one who is at all familiar with shipping can fail to realize that there cannot be a successful merchant marine under the American flag unless in some manner the United States shall assist both in the construction of the vessels and in their operation upon the high seas.

America has been very kind to labor. Congress has never failed when called upon to enact laws favorable to American workingmen. The strongest appeal that is made by any group to the Congress is made for those who labor. It is not surprising that in the formulation of laws for the protection of labor there should have been enacted measures for the protection of those who labor upon the high seas. The late Senator Robert M. La Follette—brilliant, kindly, humanitarian that he was; father of the present Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]—was the author of certain bills which are known to this day as the "La Follette Acts", and which have to do with the protection of American labor on the high seas. These laws demand, in the first place, that the 8-hour system, which we have recognized as the prevailing method of labor control on land, shall also apply at sea. They prescribe that seamen shall have ample facilities in the way of sleeping quarters and cubical content of air space where they sleep. They are not packed in like sardines as are sailors in foreign ships.

Our workmen upon the seas live under decent conditions and have decent air to breathe at night. Likewise there is an insistence that there shall be proper food for those who work upon the high seas, and certain rules regarding their payment and the protection of their rights. American seamen are protected and guarded as no other seamen in the world ever have been. It costs money to do this, and American shipowners have been obliged to compete with Japanese shipowners and with other foreign-flag ships where no such rules prevail, where a very much smaller crew operates the ships, working many more hours than American seamen work, where the wages paid are materially less, in some instances even 50 percent less than they are on American ships.

We cannot compete with foreign ships unless we do something as a nation to assist shipowners in maintaining their operation upon the high seas.

It is not only that it costs less to maintain and operate foreign ships, but foreign governments susidize their shipping. For example, consider the Normandie, which has just been sent across the sea on her initial trip, a great floating night club, which cost $52,000,000, the money for which was supplied by the French Government, the amortization of the amount being provided for by the French Government, and an ample subsidy being given for its operation. How can we hope to have liners upon the ocean if we are to compete with governments so liberal as in the case of the Normandie?

Further than all this, it is not alone that it costs more to operate our ships, but it costs more to build our ships in American yards.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am in full sympathy with what the Senator says with reference to building up the American merchant marine, but I wonder whether we would be justified in going far enough in that matter by the payment of a subsidy or through any subvention to put on the high seas a show boat, which the Normandie really is? It is a sort of show boat because of the pride of the French people to put on the ocean the fastest vessel possible.

The recent history of the merchant marine shows that large, fast boats do not make any money. One of the troubles with the Leviathan was that she lost $100,000 every time she made a trip. While I believe the Government should aid in any reasonable degree in the building up of the American merchant marine, I wonder if we are justified in going to the extent the French Government has gone in subsidizing the Normandie?.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very glad the Senator asked the question, because I should not want to leave the impression that I would favor such a thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I did not think so.

Mr. COPELAND. I think it is a perfectly absurd thing. I have no objection if the French want to do that, but I should resent to the uttermost any effort on our part to compete with such a show boat as that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to be permitted to add in connection, so to speak, with the inquiry directed by the Senator from Kentucky, that it is admitted, perhaps, that the steamship Normandie will lose money on every single trip she makes to American shores, where she gathers more patrons and secures more money in the form of transportation and patronage than from any other shores she could possibly visit.

In that connection, we must take into consideration the fact that only a few months ago the British Government constructed a great monster of the sea called the Queen Mary, which is said to have cost in the neighborhood of the cost of the Normandie; that is to say, about $50,000,000. Shortly after the completion by the British Government of the Queen Mary, which was subsidized, it was stated through the columns of the press of Great Britain that that Government proposed to build a sister ship to the Queen Mary.

I am of the opinion, as are a great many other people who have casually given this matter some thought, that such great sea monsters are not constructed initially for the purpose of making money in the transportation of passengers from the shores of continental Europe to America, but that they are built for the fundamental reason of having transports ready when this or that government is in need of transporting its soldiers from its shores to the shores of a country with which it may find itself in controversy.

For instance, it is my understanding that the steamship Rex, of the Italian line, has never really made any money for the Italian Government; but it is my further understanding that the Rex and the other large liners of the Italian Government were constructed for the purpose of having them available for use when the time came to transport their troops from their land to the land of some nation with which they might be in controversy or at war.

We find that today the Italian Government, under the direction of Mussolini, is going to war with the Abyssinians, or the Ethiopians, of central eastern Africa. I have read in the press that they have transported some hundred thousand soldiers over there, who are encamped on the border line of Italian Somaliland and Ethiopian Somaliland at the present time. I noted a few days ago that this big ship, the Rex, and her sister ship are being put into commission for the purpose of transporting their soldiers, their warring factions, from Italy to the coast of Africa.

So, in line with what the Senator has to say, I am in accord with him to the effect that big passenger ships cannot make money. Therefore, I reason that the various nations build such great ships, and the governments help build them, because they have in view the idea that they may need them in case of war.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I cannot imagine why the great Italian ship Rex should be used in transporting soldiers to Ethiopia unless it were for the purpose of carrying on one trip enough soldiers to end the war speedily, because it is inconceivable that any war between Italy and Ethiopia would be of such magnificent proportions as to draw into its vortex a great passenger ship such as the Rex or the Conte di Savoia or the Normandie or any similar ship. It may be that the Italian Government, in the event this great conflict shall occur between Italy and Ethiopia, will bring the Rex into service in order that only one trip will be necessary on the part of any ship.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I can hardly agree with the Senator upon that point, because I recall that several years ago there was difficulty between the Italians and the Ethiopians, and it ended by the Ethiopians boiling and eating up several thousand Italians. It is true that there is quite a difference between conditions of the day when they boiled and ate those Italians and the present time. For example, the airplane has been brought into great and prominent use; but, according to the press reports which we now have before us, some 100,000 engineers and fighting men and men of all descriptions essential to the formation of a modern army have already been landed in eastern Africa.

I do not know the passenger capacity of the Rex. I am sure the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] can tell us, because I consider the Senator from Alabama the finest authority in the Senate upon matters of this sort. I should surmise that the vessel has a capacity of about 5,000 passengers. I will ask the Senator whether that is not correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. How will Ethiopia get her soldiers into Italy? She has no ship like the Rex.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Ethiopia is not a conquering nation. It is said that Italy is waging a war of conquest; that Italy is waging the war for the sole purpose of gathering unto itself territory that it needs for the expansion of its nation.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I were an Italian, and happened to go to Ethiopia, and happened to be burned or boiled and eaten, I should consider that I had been conquered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I did not get the point the Senator made about being burned and boiled and eaten.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator said Ethiopia is not a conquering nation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. He has just referred to the fact that several thousand Italians were boiled and eaten by the Ethiopians.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In answer to that question, I will say that at that time Ethiopia was fighting in defense of her country. At this time, from all I can understand, Italy is waging nothing more nor less than a war of conquest. Incidentally, in that connection, I may mention the fact that I recall very vividly the controversy we had in this Chamber several months ago in regard to our entering the World Court, which eventually would have brought us into the League of Nations. I desire here to mention the fact that both Italy and Ethiopia are members of the League of Nations, and they both signed the pact; yet the fact that they are members of the League of Nations does not seem to have any effect upon their desire to get that which belongs to somebody else.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point I was attempting to make was that whereas the Senator said Ethiopia was not a conquering nation——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not at all; it was acting then on the defensive.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator had been one of the Italians who had been boiled and eaten, he would have been pretty well conquered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In that event I should not be here today. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, after this very pleasant diversion we will continue the main argument.

I always refer to such ships as the Normandie as the night-club type; but there was one great vessel, the Vaterland, which was within the harbor of New York at the beginning of the war, which was interned there and afterward taken over by us and named the Leviathan. It did render us and our allies a great service, because that one ship carried 75,000 of our troops. It carried the very first members of the American Expeditionary Force who landed abroad; and except for the providence of God and the presence of that ship in our harbor, one wonders what might have happened without the very effective aid which America rendered.

At that time we had only 13 ships in transoceanic service. The lessons of the war caused us to build many, many more ships, and the various merchant-marine acts which have been presented and passed resulted in the building of ships. Now, however, there has been an end to that sort of thing, and we are building no ships. Ninety percent of all the ships under the American flag are now 13 years of age or over; and since the economic life of a ship is only 20 years, one can see that in 7 years the American flag will be swept off the seas unless we do something to assist American shipping.

That is a prospective calamity to every industry in America. It means everything to agriculture, it means everything to manufacturing, to have an American merchant marine; yet we are approaching the time when we shall have no American merchant marine.

It is because I feel so strongly on this subject that I have spoken rather bitterly about the failure of any plans to perpetuate the American merchant marine. Then, on top of that, we have the pending bill, which to my mind is sure to destroy the remaining ships under the American flag. I should not feel so uncomfortable about the bill before us if it were associated in its passage with the measure known as "Senate bill 1635", a bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act and to enlarge the Interstate Commerce Commission to 16 commissioners. I say, I should not be so disturbed, because that bill provides for the creation of various divisions of this great group, almost as large as the Sanhedrin.

I am speaking now of Senate bill 1635. I quote from page 3 of that bill, line 10:

> The membership of the Commission shall be so organized as to include a Chairman; Coordinator of Transportation; Control Board; Finance Division, consisting of three members; Railroad Division, consisting of five members.

Then we come to the matter which is important in connection with the particular question under discussion.

> Water Carrier and Pipe Line Division, consisting of three members.

The other divisions are the motor carrier and air carrier division, consisting of three members; and such special divisions as may be created hereafter.

This is really a remarkable bill, in addition to the inclusion of what to my mind is the important part of the particular set-up as proposed by the coordinator.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator will offer Senate bill 1635 as an amendment to the pending bill, I shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I have such an amendment prepared, and I will say to the Senator from Montana that I intend to offer it as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. COPELAND. That is an excellent suggestion.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to say to the Senator from New York that I have been in sympathy with the purpose of the bill now before the Senate, but only with the understanding that Senate bill 1635 will be passed first. In other words, I am very much interested in the development of the inland waterways of this country, and I am not willing to turn the regulation of those inland waterways over to a commission which any one on reflection will admit is, from experience and training, railroad minded at the present time.

Mr. WHEELER. I think it was the idea of the coordinator that Senate bill 1632 should be passed first. The only thought was that if the Congress did not pass S. 1632 and S. 1629 then there would not be any need for the reorganization of the I. C. C. provided in the other bill, S. 1635. It was just a question of which bill we should take up first.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, at the proper time I intend to offer the other bill as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. WHEELER. The coordinator desired to have the pending bill passed first, and if there is any responsibility for bringing that measure up first I take the responsibility.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Missouri will offer Senate bill 1635 in its entirety as an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. CLARK. As part 4 of the pending bill.

Mr. COPELAND. That is very good. I approve of that very much. I cannot say that I approve of everything in Senate bill 1635, but I do approve of that particular part of it which sets up a special division for water carriers.

Senate bill 1635 is an amazing bill. It is founded on the present organization of the Italian Government.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought the Senator was in favor of it.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in favor of it.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not want the Senator to back away after he has said he would take it.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to support it.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator said he would withdraw his opposition to the pending bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I am for Senate bill 1635, but I want the Senate to understand just what it is. It is founded upon the present organization of the Italian Government. As I understand, Italy has a king as well as a dictator, Mr. Mussolini. Senate bill 1635, in addition to the good feature which I have pointed out, providing for a division of water carriers, provides for a "king." The "king" is to be the chairman of the commission. But besides the "king", it provides for a "Mussolini", the coordinator of transportation. He is to have coordinate power with the "king." He is to have all the powers the chairman will have. It will become a two-headed commission, presided over by the "king" on the one side and by "Mussolini" on the other.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I am quite sure the Senator has not read the bill carefully; otherwise he would not have made the statement which he has made. I am afraid that when the Senator said that he wanted to see Senate bill 1635 adopted as an amendment, he really was not serious about it, because he now attacks the very bill he said he wanted to see passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is not in favor of a Mussolini dictator in this Government, is he?

Mr. COPELAND. I am, in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, the Senator is?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I want a Mussolini there. I want someone with power enough to say, "We are going to do thus and so", because the Interstate Commerce Commission as heretofore organized could do something in about 17 days. It takes just about that long to get action. But we will have a Mussolini there, in the form of a coordinator of transportion, who will have coordinate power with the "king", the chairman of the commission. So I am in favor of it. I think it is a splendid addition to the bill, and I am glad the Senator from Missouri intends to offer the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I assume the Senator will withdraw his opposition to Senate bill 1632?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. And vote for the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I will not vote for the bill, but I will withdraw any opposition that I intended to raise to the bill as it is now before us.

Mr. WHEELER. I thought the Senator was going to be in favor of it in the event we adopted the amendment and thus passed Senate bill 1635.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I could not say that, but I will vote for the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator will vote for the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. The reason why the Senator will vote for the amendment is that afterward he will vote against the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall vote against the bill; but the amendment is a splendid amendment, and it ought to be added, and I am glad the Senator from Missouri intends to offer it. It will help the cause of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from New York need not worry about the cause of the Senator from Montana. I will take care of that.

Mr. COPELAND. No; the Senator from Montana does not have to worry, because he has higher authority back of him than I have. He has a "must" bill, and I have an "unmust" bill. The Senator from Montana does not have to worry. I am the one who has to worry.

The Senator from Montana has been telling us about General Ashburn, and he waxed eloquent as he referred to the support General Ashburn had given his bill. General Ashburn did not support Senate bill 1632; he supported Senate bill 1632 plus the Clark amendment, Senate bill 1635. That is what he supported, and I will read the record to show that, because I wish to help the Senator from Montana, now that he is going to have a good bill.

Mr. WHEELER. If it is a good bill, I know the Senator will vote for it, because he will vote for any good bill.

Mr. COPELAND. If I had no interest whatever in the American merchant marine, or if my interest in the American merchant marine were not superior to my interest in the railroads, I would vote for it.

Mr. CONNALLY. A point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from New York is not talking to the other Senators in the Chamber, only to the Senator from Montana. The Senate rules do not provide for private colloquies.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Presiding Officer to the fact that the Senator from Texas is out of order. He did not rise in his place; he rose at some other Senator's place. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York is going to invoke that rule it will stop his perambulating, because in making a speech he usually walks all over the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is well we can have something that is of a cheerful nature and causes us to smile a little. We need that in the Senate. If I had my way I would have the Senate adjourn tomorrow and go home. I have seen many a fine operation spoiled by a tired surgeon, and if we stay here long enough we will spoil all of our legislation by having tired doctors work upon it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. That is what I am afraid of. I am afraid the Senator is a tired doctor and that he is going to try to spoil the proposed legislation now pending before us.

Mr. COPELAND. If I had any way of spoiling this proposed legislation and defeating it I should certainly indulge in the practice necessary to that end, because I am interested in the American merchant marine; and the pending bill, even as modified by the Clark amendment, will be destructive of the American merchant marine. But the bill will be infinitely better with the Clark amendment, because under that amendment there will be new men added to the enlarged Interstate Commerce Commission; and as the railroad-minded men who are now on the Commission will probably want to continue to consider railroad problems there will be five new members appointed; and it may happen that they will not be unfriendly to the American merchant marine. But unless we can have friendly treatment at the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission the American merchant marine will be ruined, as I see it.

I was about to speak of the enthusiastic recital of the testimony of General Ashburn. He did not say he was in favor of Senate bill 1632. I quote from page 788 of the hearings. General Ashuburn said this:

> I wish I had it in my power to impress this honorable committee with the gravity of this transportation situation and the necessity of the enactment of these bills.
> S. 1635—

Which is the bill which is to be offered by the Senator from Missouri as an amendment to the pending bill—

> S. 1635, taken in conjunction with the policies enunciated in S. 1632—

The pending bill—

> and S. 1629—

The bus bill—

> provides a means by which the situation may be remedied. It is to be presumed that the President, in his appointment of additional Commissioners, will select the most competent experts he can find to represent water carriers, pipe lines, motor carriers, and air carriers.
> These additional members will introduce new elements, new methods of approaching the vital problem of coordination and cooperation of all forms of transportation. They will not be handicapped by a habit of mind formed through the approach of the problem with the primary end of adding to the revenues of the railroads, but of giving to the public the best and cheapest form of transportation available. Naturally they—> will be assigned to the waterway carriers and pipe-line division.

The new members—

General Ashburn never supported Senate bill 1632. No man who knows anything about shipping or is interested in shipping would support Senate bill 1632.

Furthermore, it is not alone the ship lines and informed persons in shipping who object to this proposed law, but various organizations which are informed on the subject are likewise in opposition to the bill. Even with the addition of Senate bill 1635 as an amendment, I think it is wise to mention the fact that we have here the opposition of the American Farm Bureau, represented by Chester H. Gray. We have the opposition of the National Grange, represented by Fred Brenckman.

I desire to inform the Senate as to the statements which they are signing, so there will not be any misunderstanding about what I am putting into the RECORD. This is an extract from a letter to the President of the United States dated February 14, 1935, with the signers' names attached, two of whose names I have already given:

> DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned organizations are deeply concerned about the proposals of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation to subject inland waterway transportation services to the regulation of rates, routes, and schedules by the Interstate Commerce Commission. * * *
> 1. Regulation is sponsored by the rail carriers for the purpose of increasing water rates and costs to a point whereby they will regain the water-borne commerce.
> * * * * * * *
> 3. Under Interstate Commerce control, the yardstick of water rates would be the rail rates and not the cost of service.
> * * * * * * *
> 6. One of the reasons for railroad regulation was their monopolistic character. This does not exist in water transportation, as the waterways are free and open to all.
> 7. Inland waterway transportation benefits the entire Nation, including communities and population not located on water and including all railroads serving the interior of the United States.

I am going to give the names of those who signed this letter. I was interested in what the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] said awhile ago, that every Senator has had letters from the railroads urging the passage of this bill. I have had such letters and have been spoken to regarding the matter. Of course, the railroads desire this legislation. Does any Senator think the railroads of the country are satisfied to have competition by transportation on the Mississippi River and the Missouri River and the Ohio River, and on the Great Lakes, and by the intercoastal activities of American ships carrying freight from the Atlantic to the Pacific and the other way? Does not that take away from the railroads very much traffic?

I recall very well the opposition of the railroads to the building of the Panama Canal; but whatever the railroads suffered by the reduction of freight through the building of the Canal they will make up by the passage of this bill, because the competition which is now present, and which must be present if the ships are to prosper, will be done away with by reason of the fact that the railroad-minded—and I say that in spite of everything which has been mentioned to the contrary—the railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission will deal with the problem from the railroad standpoint. How can it be otherwise?

I think it was in 1887 that the Interstate Commerce Commission came into existence, for the express purpose of dealing with railroad problems. The first chairman of the Commission was from my own home town of Ann Arbor, Mich.—Judge Cooley. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been dealing with railroads. If it is not railroad-minded, I am amazed. It is bound to be just as much railroad-minded as a surgeon is surgical-minded, or a doctor medical-minded, or a lawyer legal-minded. For 50 years it has been doing nothing else than dealing with the railroads. So these writers, in their letter to the President under date of February 14, have called attention to the fact that they fear the effect of the transfer of regulation from a ship-minded group to a railroad-minded group. Who are the signers? I mentioned two—the American Farm Bureau, by Chester H. Gray, and the National Grange, by Fred Brenckman. The others are as follows:

The Northwest Farmers Union Legislative Committee, by O. N. Horsford.

The Farmers' National Grange Corporation, by M. W. Becker.

The American Cotton Cooperative Association, by N. C. Williamson.

The Mississippi Valley Association, by Robert Isham Randolph.

The Mississippi River System Carriers Association, by Andrew P. Calhoun.

The Intracoastal Canal Association of Louisiana and Texas, by Roy Miller.

The Missouri River Navigation Association, by A. J. Weaver.

The Upper Mississippi Waterway Association, by C. C. Weber.

The Ohio Valley Improvement Association, by Oscar F. Barrett.

Upper Mississippi and St. Croix Rivers Improvement Commission of Minnesota, by R. P. Warner.

Gulf Inland Waterways Conference, by Theodore Brent.

Let it not be said here that there is no opposition to this bill. There is opposition to it. There is opposition from every informed person who has not a direct interest in the passage of the bill. I desire to say that, in my opinion, great harm is sure to come to us by reason of this proposed transfer of regulation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I have no question the Senator has in mind that one of the purposes of the 1916 act, and the 1920 act, and the Transportation Act of 1920, was to encourage water transportation. It is significant that in the second section of this bill the words "promote and encourage" are stricken out, and there is left only the word "regulate." It seems to me that has a real significance.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, who apparently has been studying this bill, what is meant by the following words in the title?—

Regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce.

Every time the matter of foreign commerce has come up, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has said that the bill has nothing to do with foreign commerce; but repeatedly in the bill I find language similar to that found, for instance, at the bottom of page 2:

The provisions of this part shall apply to the transportation of passengers or property by water in interstate and foreign commerce—

And so forth. Yet the statement is made that the bill has nothing to do with foreign commerce.

Mr. President, it is a bad bill. It is badly written. Of course, if I were to suggest that it should be recommitted to the committee for improvement and rewriting, I should be charged with seeking its death; but I would do anything honorable to bring about the death of the bill, because I am so sure that it is another blow at an already weakened and dying system—the water-carrier system of America.

I now desire to give a little more material concerning the attitude taken toward the bill. I do not wish to have the impression prevail in the Senate that even though we accept Senate bill 1635 as an amendment—and I shall vote for that because it will be an improvement—there is no opposition to the bill. Those who are informed on the subject are still in opposition, as I shall undertake to show by a letter from which I now quote:

In line with our conversation of Wednesday I am writing you in an attempt to present a clear picture of the positions taken by the various inland water carriers and inland shipping interests in regard to S. 1632 (the Eastman water-carrier regulation bill).

You will remember that during the course of the debate on Wednesday (particularly to be found on p. 10695 of the RECORD for July 3) certain statements were made regarding the position taken by the Federal Barge Line and the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., the only common carriers of any consequence on the Mississippi River system. It is quite true that representatives of these lines appear in favor of the bill, but it is equally true that their approval of the bill was based upon a reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as provided for in S. 1635—

Which, I assume, will be added now.

* * * The Mississippi River System Carriers' Association, whose members carry the tremendous preponderance of tonnage on the inland waterways, is whole-heartedly opposed to S. 1632 in any event—

It does not make any difference how much it may be improved by the addition of Senate bill 1635, the Mississippi River Carriers' Association continues in opposition—and its representatives so testified both before the Senate and House committees.

I want to read a little more from this letter, because I am sure the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] did not wish to mislead the Senate, but, inadvertently, I fear he did so, because he said so much concerning testimony in support of the bill by certain carriers, when, as a matter of fact, they are in opposition. I quote from this letter further:

Quite a point was made of the fact that the Missouri River Navigation Association is supposed to have appeared in favor of this bill. I should like, if possible, to clear up that situation. It is true that Mr. George J. Miller, who is the executive secretary of the association, appeared before the Senate committee in support of the bill. His testimony appears on page 808 of the hearings, and you will note that, while he says he is executive secretary of the Missouri River Navigation Association, he does not say that he is speaking for the association.

And yet it was represented, inadvertently, of course, that he was speaking for the association.

At the time of the hearings before the House committee he again testified, and his testimony appears on page 238 of the hearings. During the course of that testimony he made it very clear that while he favored regulation, he did not favor the Eastman bill without proper provision being made for reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

On page 288 of the hearings before the House Committee appears the testimony of Hon. Arthur J. Weaver, former Governor of Nebraska, and president of the Missouri River Navigation Association ever since its organization. Mr. Weaver expressed opposition to the bill and made it clear that the association has taken no position on this question and that Mr. Miller was speaking in his personal capacity.

The position of the Mississippi River Valley Association in opposition to regulation of water carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission is, I believe, too well known to you to require any further statement in that regard.

It is well known to me, Mr. President. I sat through all the hearings on the ship-subsidy bill. I had a few patient colleagues who came occasionally, but I happened to sit there all through, and it was made perfectly clear to me that the inland water carriers on the Great Lakes and rivers do not want this sort of regulation and are in bitter opposition to it.

I want the Senate to hear the statement of Mr. Gray, who is well known to us. He is the representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, an organization highly respected by every Senator, and Mr. Gray is equally highly respected by all of us. This is what he said, which is found in the hearings on page 1143:

First, I want to state that the American Farm Bureau Federation * * * has taken the position that for the public welfare we do not need coordination of transportation nearly as much as we need competition in transportation.

To accomplish that objective our resolutions, only one of which we shall put into the record, state that we oppose not only the bills pending—

That is, bill no. 1629, the bus bill; 1632, which is the bill before us today; and bill 1635, which has been offered as an amendment by the Senator from Missouri. Mr. Gray continues:

We oppose not only the bills pending, but any others which have formerly been submitted and which may later be submitted, placing under one Federal regulatory body the regulation and control of all transporting agencies, which means to state that in the bill pending, S. 1632, we do not think it is good public policy to let the Interstate Commerce Commission regulate rates and services on the railroads, on the highways, on the waterways, or, if it should be imagined so, on the airways.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I have been interested in this discussion because it is a matter of surprise to me that under the fourth section of the interstate-commerce law complaint has gone forth all over the country that the railroads have driven the carriers off our inland waterways and have practically destroyed our coastal traffic for the reason that they were allowed whenever there was water competition to impose a rate which was as low as or lower than the water rate.

I have not had an opportunity to study this bill and its purposes, but I am a little confused as to how transportation on our inland waterways, our lakes and rivers, and coastal traffic may hope to survive so long as the railroads, which transport goods more swiftly and have a larger capacity, can be given a rate to all the competing water points which will take the business away from the water carriers. I have an idea that if the Interstate Commerce Commission or some other body could coordinate our different systems of transportation so that we might take advantage of the intrinsic merit of each and every one, and give each and every one a chance to survive and serve the public, it would be better than to have the competition—an unnatural competition—which has existed under the fourth section up until now. If we could secure a coordination of these different elements, the busses and trucks, the waterways and the railroads, which would recognize the inherent advantages of each system and give each a proportionate opportunity to serve the public, it would be highly desirable. I thought, perhaps, that was the object of the pending bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that the very laudable objective of which he speaks is the purpose of Senate bill 1635. I have already stated that I would vote to add that bill as an amendment to the pending bill, although I would still vote against the pending bill, but I would vote to add Senate bill 1635 as an amendment because it would do exactly what the wise Senator from South Carolina suggests. It proposes a coordination of all these various activities; and under that bill we would have a Mussolini coordinator who would have all the powers which Mussolini has in Italy. Anyway, it provides for various divisions in the Interstate Commerce Commission, so that the railroads would be taken care of and the motor carriers would be taken care of and the water carriers would also be provided for. There would be a railroad division, a water-carrier division, a pipe-line division, an air-carrier division; there would be special divisions, and there would be exactly what the Senator proposes. That, however, is not in this bill, and will not be in the bill unless the amendment shall be adopted. This bill has only to do with the transfer to the present railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission of the function of regulation of waterway rates.

Mr. SMITH. I am sorry that, although I am a member of the committee, I have not had an opportunity to study the bill. The Senator's contention is, then, that the bill under discussion simply provides for regulation without specific order for a just coordination of the various elements of transportation?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator has stated the situation exactly.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to state, Mr. President, that I have been a member of the committee ever since I have been a Member of the Senate, with the exception of about 4 or 5 years, and it has been a matter of marvel to me that with the facilities for water transportation we now have, with the facilities afforded by busses and trucks, in addition to the railroads, each having a peculiar advantage within its own domain, we have not so coordinated them as to give our coastal shipping, our inland waterways, our trucks and busses, and railroads due consideration, and then so to correlate them as to have each and every one of them give the public the full benefit of their peculiar intrinsic value. I say that we ought not to enact any legislation disturbing the present situation until we may have a bill that does have that objective in contemplation and clearly undertakes to coordinate all these elements of our transportation.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is essentially correct in his statement, and I want the Senator to know that when we wrote the unfortunate ship-subsidy bill—unfortunate, I assume, with regards to its fate—we had in mind exactly what the Senator from South Carolina is talking about. We had in mind that there come times when there is an interrelationship of railroad and steamship traffic. We did not seek selfishly to appropriate everything in the way of shipping rates.

There is a section in the ship-subsidy bill which is headed "Interrelation of Rail and Water Traffic" and which, in part, provides as follows:

(b) A board is hereby created, to be known as the "Joint Transportation Board", to be composed of the Secretary of Commerce and of 2 members selected by the Interstate Commerce Commission from among their members, and of 2 members selected by the Authority from among their members, of which Board the Secretary of Commerce shall be chairman.

This interrelation board, designed to deal with problems where the ship interests conflict, was to cope effectively by such an arrangement with any situation that might arise. We had that in contemplation. To my mind that is far superior even to the pending bill with the addition of Senate bill 1635, which will be offered as an amendment by the Senator from Missouri.

I wish to call attention a little further to what Mr. Gray said. Competition! How do the producers in Oregon and Washington and California get their food products to market? The apples of Washington and Oregon must compete with the apples from my State of New York. They could not do that if they had to be shipped by rail. They are enabled to compete because they can be shipped by cheap water transportation. That is the way such traffic is carried. That is the way it is made possible for the wheat farmers of the United States to compete with some degree of success with the wheat farmers of Canada and the Argentine. It is cheap transportation by water that does it. Representatives of the big farm bureaus see the point. They know if we have no longer free and frank and honest competition between the waterways and the railroads that there will be an interference with cheap transportation for the products of the farm and the orchard throughout our country and throughout the world.

The testimony of Mr. Brenckman, of the National Grange, is found at page 835 of the hearings. This is what he said, in part:

This bill would permit the Commission to limit the services and raise the rates of boats and barges on the lakes and waterways of the interior and on the high seas. We are opposed to all this legislation in principle. Some of the farmers' cooperative organizations use these cheaper services on the rivers and the savings are credited to them in the returns on their produce, or it enables the cooperatives to pay a higher price directly.

And yet we have here upon the "must" program a bill which takes away the certainty of free competition and the certainty of cheap rates by giving a railroad-minded body the power to determine what shall be the rates so fixed and so definitely determined. In writing the ship-subsidy bill we did not dare incorporate a provision that specific rates could be fixed. We said there might be maximum and minimum rates fixed, but we did not dare say specific rates. However, the authors of the bill now before us did not hesitate to say the Commission could fix specific rates so there would be a definite rate fixed on apples from Oregon and canned fruit from California to the Atlantic seaboard—a definite rate fixed by a railroad-minded Commission.

Mr. T. L. O'Connor, of the Farmers' Union Terminal Association and the Farmers' Union Legislative Committee, appeared before the Senate committee. His testimony is found at page 834 of the hearings, where he said:

We are appearing here in opposition to that portion of the Eastman bill which contemplates placing water carriers under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of determining rates.

I have just told the Senate how definitely the Commission can determine these rates—not on a sliding scale, not a maximum and minimum rate, but specific rates.

Mr. O'Connor continued:

Our waterways are public highways on which all who wish may travel. In no sense can they be compared with railroads, which are a private monopoly, though built, and to a considerable extent maintained, at public expense.

Are we going to disregard all these farm organizations merely because a handful of shipping men imagine they are going to be benefited and a few lines which are hand-in-glove with certain railroads will be benefited, and the railroads themselves, who want to get rid of water competition? They are the ones who want this bill enacted into law.

Every week I read a splendid little paper edited by a friend of mine, Railroad Data. I read it because I want to know what are the railroad loadings, for the railroad loadings, in my judgment—and that is the judgment even of distinguished economists, so Senators do not have to take my word for it—give evidence of whether we have prosperity or the reverse. So I read it every week to know how prosperity is coming along. Incidentally, when I have read the figures as to railroad loadings, I look the publication over to see what else my friend has said. He said recently:

"Do waterways need more study? How much more careful study and research are required to discover the economy and efficiency of railroad transportation in competition with the Mississippi, Missouri, and Warrior Rivers and Erie Canal?" asked the Wall Street Journal in a recent editorial.

I am for the railroads. We never could have had a country without them, and I have done everything I could within decency to help them all the time I have been in legislative life. But when there comes a conflict between the perpetuity of the shipping of this country and what the railroads regard as their welfare, there is no question of the position I am going to take. I am going to stand by the shipping. No one seeing the barges on the Rhine and the canals of Holland, realizing how one man can push or drag along a boat loaded with as much as could be put on two or three of our motor trucks, can question how much cheaper that transportation is than is our rail transportation. I do not want such transportation to be used to the abuse and destruction of the railroads.

The railroads got along very well until by their own mismanagement they got into distress. They got along very well even with water competition and water transportation. I want to see that competition continued. Therefore I am opposed to turning the shipping interests of the country over to a railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission—and I say that without any disrespect or any intent of disrespect. It is their job to be railroad-minded. They were put there to be railroad-minded, and on the whole they have done a good job.

So far as Mr. Eastman is concerned, who is now the Coordinator of Railroads, and under Senate bill 1635 will be the Mussolini of the Commission, if we have to have a Mussolini, I am glad Mr. Eastman is to be the man, because I regard him highly as a man of integrity and character and great ability and devoted to the public service. But I do not disregard the fact that he has been engaged in the railroad-transportation business, that his interests are those of the railroads, and of necessity he is railroad-minded. That is no more a curse than it would be to say of the Senator now speaking that he might be medically-minded. Nevertheless, if we are to preserve our shipping we need to have it directed by those who have but one thought in mind, the perpetuity and development of a powerful American merchant marine which shall be used for the national defense in time of war, and for the promotion of commerce in time of peace.

Now, I wish to give the Senate the testimony of a man representing the Farmers' National Grain Corporation. It is always very refreshing and encouraging to one who is speaking either for or against a measure to have testimony substantiating the position he takes. Any one of us who is modest must believe that he could be mistaken; but when he finds that all the witnesses say the same thing he knows that he is not mistaken, and that his position is a sound one. Therefore, I take pleasure in quoting the testimony of these men who have made a life study of the needs of agriculture in our country.

Mr. McClintock, of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, said:

> The public's interest is so allied with that of agriculture we believe it proper to state that speaking in behalf of agriculture is in effect speaking in the interest of the general public. This reference is made since the Coordinator repeatedly emphasizes and makes clear that the provisions of the bill now under consideration are drawn to conform to the public's interest.
>
> We are opposed—

Says Mr. McClintock—

> to extending authority affecting water transportation to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Then the American Cotton Cooperative Association came forward to express the views of that organization. L. D. Estes—hearings, page 838—said:

> We are opposed to S. 1632, cited as the Water Carrier Act of 1935 * * * as such legislation will increase transporation charges, restrict service, and create monopolies.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. That was before the bill was amended. Since the bill has been amended I may say that I have heard no opposition to it from these organizations, but the statements have been to the contrary effect.

It has been stated that the Farmers' National Union is opposed to the bill. Day before yesterday, or two or three days ago, I talked with Mr. Kennedy, the secretary of the Farmers' National Union, the largest farm organization of the West, and he told me that he had no opposition whatsoever to it.

Mr. COPELAND. That is very interesting. The letter and enclosure I am using are dated July 5, which is only Friday of last week.

I am glad to have the Senator from Montana state that he has amended this bill. Every time he strikes something from it or puts something in it he has improved it. If he could have another couple of weeks to modify and amend his bill, I think ultimately he would have a bill which, so far as I am concerned, I should be glad to vote for, because, as he said, he has had distinguished men converted by reason of the changes he has made. God bless him! I hope he will make some more changes, so that all the Members of the Senate may vote for a bill which as yet, as I view it, is quite unfit to receive the suffrages of Senators.

Mr. President, it must be encouraging to the Senator from Montana to know there is such a lobby in the gallery. They are all here—every one of them—and when we have the lobby investigation, I assume they will all be before the committee. I am going to go there and give my testimony. The members of the lobby who are up here now, hoping this bill will pass, think that after it is amended it ought to be passed; but they were enthusiastic for it even before it was amended. The men I am talking about, however—the farmers, the wheat growers, the orchardists of the country—are not for the bill, either amended or unamended.

Now, let us see what is said by the chairman of the traffic committee of the Mississippi Valley Association, Mr. C. E. Childe. He says:

> It is my belief, based upon study and experience, that regulation, as we have applied it to railroads in the United States, has worked badly and imperfectly, but it is needed by the railroads and, in the public interest, must be continued. I hope, however, that it may be continued in a modified form and under different rate policies than we have been following.

Then Mr. Childe goes on:

> I am convinced, however, that the same kind of regulation would work even worse than it has on rail transportation if it is attempted to be applied to water transport. I do not believe it is needed by water carriers, or even in the interest of the railroads, and certainly not in the interest of the public.

We ought, once in a great while, at least, to give some thought to the public. I suppose we do, in our subconscious minds, think about the public; but so many of our bills seem to have a selfish basis and to be founded on a desire to serve some interest.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I presume the Senator now has particular reference to the ship subsidy bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; a bill conceived in the interests of the public, written with the purpose of serving the public, and which, if it could be enacted into law, would give the American people an effective American merchant marine which would keep America upon the map, put her flag upon the seven seas, and carry her products to every port of the world. Certainly the ship-subsidy bill is a bill written in the public interest; and when the time comes, as it will come, unless we have a way of subsidizing and making possible the operation of American ships, in 7 years from now there will be hardly an American ship upon the seas. Our ship operators will take their good American money and go to England and Japan and elsewhere and build ships at the low price for which they can build them there. They will send them out under the flag of Denmark or Great Britain or some other country and operate them under the conditions of labor common in those countries. The seamen will be packed in like sardines; they will be served the poorest kind of food; they will be paid starvation wages; and American products then will be carried in foreign bottoms, even though the ownership may be American.

I do not wish to see such a condition, Mr. President. I wish to see the fine products of Nebraska carried down to the Gulf and taken on American ships to every part of the world, and the raw products of foreign countries brought back in American ships and ultimately landed in Nebraska for the benefit of labor and the general population of that fine State.

I have before me the testimony of Fred S. Keiser, representing the National Industrial Traffic League, before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, to be found in the hearings at page 1102. Now I shall call upon men who are directly interested in order that we may have here testimony which is full and complete, made up, not of what I am saying about shipping or about the need of regulation by an appropriate body, but testimony of men who are directly interested in having the free competition of the seas and the cheap transportation rates given by the water carriers under the American flag.

Mr. Keiser said:

I am traffic director of the Duluth Chamber of Commerce and traffic manager of the Duluth Board of Trade. I represent in this proceeding not only those two organizations, but also the National Industrial Traffic League, and I am chairman of the inland waterways committee of the National Industrial Traffic League and have been for 10 years.

I quote what was said by this man, so highly respected that he has been honored by two rival organizations in his city, the chamber of commerce and the board of trade:

The league is the only national organization of strictly shipping interests in the United States. * * *

We believe that the adoption of the Eastman bill will mean heavy increases in transportation charges, a gradual decrease in shipping via the Great Lakes, less competition in the grain trade on boats of Canadian registry, and in the American grain trade it will penalize the shipper and the farmer.

Mr. President, the American wheat farmer is bound to have much trouble. He has had trouble and he is going to continue to have it. To begin with, the soil of Canada is more productive than is the soil of our country. It has not been wasted by long years of tillage without proper fertilization. Consequently in Canada the farmers can produce about 50 percent more wheat to the acre than can be produced in the United States.

In the next place, the land values and the overhead charges of the Canadian farmer are much less than they are in the United States, because land can be bought in Canada for a quarter of what it can be bought for in Nebraska.

Further, the labor costs in Canada are much less than they are in the United States. More than that, the National Railroad of Canada, a Government-owned railroad, has written into its charter a provision that the carriage on wheat from Saskatchewan and Alberta to the lakehead, Port Arthur, is, if I remember correctly, 18½ cents a hundredweight, while the rate on American wheat from Montana to Duluth is about 23 cents a hundredweight.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the differential is about 10 cents a bushel.

Mr. COPELAND. Ten cents a bushel; very well. More than that, the Canadian farmer has now a differential in the Liverpool market by reason of agreements. So, taking it all in all, I cannot see how the American wheat farmer can have anything else but a hard time. Furthermore, by our grain-grading laws we are sending much American wheat to be shipped out of Canada.

So it is a matter of great concern, as this witness says, what rate is to be had on the vessels, and if the railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission decides that too much wheat is being shipped by way of the Great Lakes, and in order to assure it being turned over to the railroads, it rules that the rates on the shipping shall be increased, once more the poor wheat farmer will have the knife placed under his seventh rib. That is what Mr. Keiser means when he says:

We believe that the adoption of the Eastman bill will mean heavy increases in transportation charges, a gradual decrease in shipping via the Great Lakes, less competition in the grain trade on boats of Canadian registry, and in the American grain trade it will penalize the shipper and the farmer.

That is so because, of course, at the lake head there is competition between the American-owned vessels and the Canadian-owned vessels, and if the railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission puts up the price on the American shipping, once more the American merchant marine will suffer.

This witness, Mr. Keiser, proceeded:

I want to urge upon this committee as strongly as I know how that all of these bills are the outgrowth of the most vicious railroad propaganda which has been practiced since 1930 against water transportation of every character for the sole purpose of restricting service via the water lines and of making rates via the water lines so high as to make that service unattractive as a transportation agency.

How can it be more strongly put? I am not surprised at the number of railroad men here today. This is a great measure for the railroads. I wish I could help the railroads. I do not want to commit murder for them, but I want to do what I can that is proper to help them. As compared with the amount of traffic upon the railroads, the freight carried by shipping is so infinitesimal that the railroads ought to be ashamed even to give it a thought, let alone to use any methods of lobbying to put over a bill which is in their interest.

Mr. President, these men are all friends of mine. I know what they will say to me; but I cannot help it. I want to see the American flag carried all over the world, and the only way that can be accomplished is by the encouragement of American shipping, and not by its discouragement. One blow after another has been given American shipping until, as I have said, in 7 years there will not be any American shipping.

Mr. Keiser closes by saying:

There is no public demand for regulation of inland waterway transportation except by those who have an ax to grind.

That is his testimony, and I know Mr. Keiser is telling the exact truth.

It was at this point that I read the letter to the President of the United States dated February 14, and gave a long list of farm organizations signatory to that letter.

In the Senate debate it was contended that the Missouri River Navigation Association favored the Eastman water-regulation bill. That was said here the other day. This assertion was based upon the testimony of George J. Miller.

Let us see what Mr. Miller said. Let us look at the record. It is a good idea once in a whole to see just what the record says. The record, at page 808, is as follows:

Mr. MILLER. I do not speak for the whole of the Missouri River interests. There is some disagreement amongst us as to this bill, and there will be other witnesses that may take a different view of this bill than the one I shall present here.

The CHAIRMAN. Whom do you represent?

Mr. MILLER. I am executive secretary of the Missouri River Navigation Association. But I might say that the Kansas City interests are in accord with my view on this bill.

So, Mr. President, there is another organization opposed to the bill. Everyone who knows what the effect of the bill will be, or what its effect may be, is opposed to it. There is no question about that. Everyone who is for the public interest and the welfare of those who produce and those who ship would be against this bill. It will be greatly improved when the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] is attached to it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator from New York that I had nothing to do with the preparation of the other bill, but I do insist that if one is to be passed, they should both be passed at the same time.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is correct about that, and therefore he can move the amendment. Then, if one is passed, both will be passed. That will be the least of the evils that might be perpetrated. There is an implication in what the Senator says that probably with that amendment on the bill he would not be for the bill anyway; and, so far as I am concerned, I should be against the bill.

Hon. Arthur J. Weaver, president of the Missouri River Navigation Association, appeared before the Merchant Marine Committee of the House in May 1935; and, referring to Mr. Miller's testimony before the Senate committee to which I have just made reference (see House hearings, p. 290), Mr. Weaver, ex-Governor, said:

I want to approve Mr. Miller's statement, except on the one point, namely, that we should go to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not believe that there should be any regulation at this time.

We hope that if there is any regulation that inland waterways will be placed under the supervision of the Merchant Marine Committee or under a separate inland waterways committee, outside of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

What the Governor had in mind there was the maritime authority which we are providing for in the ship-subsidy bill—that ill-fated bill, not on the "must" list. He said that if there is to be any regulation it should be under the supervision of the maritime authority. Certainly it should. Why? Because the maritime authority will be maritime-minded. We are going to have the railroads under a board which is railroad-minded. By the same token we should have shipping under a board which is merchant-marine-minded. That is what Governor Weaver thinks.

The other day there was a great deal of debate in the Senate between the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], patient and faithful to his duties, and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the ardent, eloquent advocate of the bill. There was a great deal of conversation, which we speak of as a colloquy, between the two Senators about what the barge lines thought about this bill and what General Ashburn, the representative of the Army engineers, thought about the bill. The Senator from Minnesota—without intending, of course, to mislead the Senate—inadvertently got himself in the position of appearing to make General Ashburn in favor of the bill which is now pending. The point was not made that both General Ashburn, on behalf of the Federal Barge Line, and L. W. Childress, president of the Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., severely criticized the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission as now constituted.

When we come to the question of criticizing the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I wonder how many Senators have ever read the testimony on the fourth section of the act before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House in the Seventy-fourth Congress. It is very illuminating. Here is a witness who quoted Judge Cooley at great length. Johnston B. Campbell, representing the Intermediate Rate Association of Washington, said:

> Let me say right there that the statement was made by one of the witnesses, or one of the members of the committee, I do not know which, that it took the Interstate Commerce Commission longer to decide the case than it does the Supreme Court. Well, there are nine men on the Supreme Court of the United States, and they have about 400 cases a year, and there are nine men on the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they dispose of, I think they disposed of, in 1928, when I was chairman of the Commission, disposed of 2,200 cases, and in addition to those 2,200 cases they also have to dispose of literally thousands and thousands of memoranda under the fourth-section relief that never went to a decision, and yet those nine men in 1928 disposed of four or five times the amount of business that the Supreme Court does.

Mr. President, we are not satisfied now to have the Interstate Commerce Commission loaded down, as its former chairman says it is, with railroad cases; but, in addition, we have to give it all the problems of the water carriers! I desire to say about the water-carrier problems that they must be settled at once. Problems which come up in connection with water carriers are imminent. There must be immediate action. There cannot be delay over a period of a year or 6 months or whatever it may be. The matter has to be decided overnight. Yet here we are proposing to transfer to an already overloaded commission the shipping industry, the shipping interests, involving a great problem which has to do with our welfare in time of war, and our trade and commerce in time of peace.

No wonder General Ashburn and Mr. Childress criticized the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission as now constituted and further charged the Commission with being unfair to waterways and with being railroad-minded. Every witness has done so.

Yet it is proposed here to turn over the shipping interests of America to the Interstate Commerce Commission which is already burdened with duties.

I do not believe the average American realizes how important American ships are to our country. When Theodore Roosevelt was President of the United States he sent the white fleet around the world. Every heart thrilled at our great warships being sent on that extended voyage. But it took the edge off the joy when we found that in order to maintain and support that fleet we had to hire 300 vessels from foreign-flag owners to carry the supplies, coal, and so forth, for the fleet.

We cannot have an effective Navy without an effective merchant marine. If I am correct in my dire prediction that 7 years from now the American flag will be off the waters of the world, we will not have any use for our Navy. It will not be any good except to look at on the Fourth of July. Our naval vessels could be moved up into the Hudson River and we would be glad to have them there, because we like to have the boys visit us. We are glad to have the battleships there. It gives us a holiday.

When we build the St. Lawrence Canal these great battleships can be floated up the St. Lawrence through the Great Lakes to Chicago and lined up there in front of the great parks of that beautiful city.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, whose battleships can be floated up the St. Lawrence?

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, the Senator from Missouri and I think alike on this matter. The battleships which will go up the St. Lawrence River, if that waterway shall ever be built, will be British battleships. There will be no American battleships except once in a while when Chicago may have a festive occasion and some of our battleships may be sent there for display.

That will be in times of peace. But when war comes on, the war vessels which go up the St. Lawrence will be British vessels and not American vessels. All the rest of the time the shipping upon this great canal about which we hear so much will be under the British flag and the Canadian flag. There will not be any American shipping there. By that time, if we shall have proceeded with our plans, there will not be any American ships in any event; so I suppose it will make no difference to us what use is made of this great imaginary prospective waterway which never will be built in the time of any man now living.

Mr. President, the hearings were extremely interesting. I find, for example, the testimony of representatives of the committee of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York in connection with the bill. The extract I shall quote will be found on page 931 of the hearings. I heard a little while ago that New York is for the bill. I am never much disturbed when I am told that New York is for something and I find myself opposed to it. The people of New York are the fairest-minded people in the world. They do not dislike a man who expresses his convictions even though they do not follow along the line of the convictions of some other men. Furthermore, they sometimes give us in Washington the benefit of the doubt, and they perhaps think that those of us in Washington have learned a little more about it than the folks at home.

The Maritime Association of the Port of New York, under the heading "Coordination of all forms of transportation", said, among other things, the following:

> Coordination of all forms of transportation: Your committee is not in agreement with respect to the method of coordinating all forms of interstate transportation. The minority viewpoint (a) is to give it to a single body, the Interstate Commerce Commission; whereas the opposite (majority) viewpoint (b) is that such concentration in the Interstate Commerce Commission, especially as presently constituted, would be dangerous to water transportation and wharfingers and not now under the Interstate Commerce Commission and that water transportation and wharfingers should be regulated by a separate, properly qualified body, with an appeal body composed of representatives from each of such bodies, which appeal body should pass upon any general question that involves more than one competing form of transportation and compose any differences necessary to prevent rate warfare between the different forms.

That is exactly what we did in the writing of the ship-subsidy bill. We recognized the necessity or at least the wisdom of having an appeal body composed of representatives to meet with such body. As I said a while ago and pointed out from the bill, that is what we did in section 702 of the ship-subsidy bill, where we provided for such an appeal body, or a body to deal with problems where there was interrelation of rail and water traffic. We provided that there should sit down on one side of the table the Interstate Commerce Commission, railroad-minded, and on the other side the maritime authority, merchant-marine-minded, and work out the problem. So, I repeat, the majority of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York said there should be—

An appeal body composed of representatives from each of such bodies, which appeal body should pass upon any general question that involves more than one competing form of transportation and compose any differences necessary to prevent rate warfare between the different forms.

That strikes me as a very sensible plan, even if it does come out of New York, which, so far as I am concerned, would make it even more important.

Under such a plan each form would be left to be developed to its fullest extent, subject only to restraint by the regulatory and appeal bodies. It is feared by those who oppose the first viewpoint that the concentration under one body would give such body under such a bill as S. 1632 dictatorial powers without adequate appeal. That would mean its decisions must inevitably react against one form or other of transportation. It seems to the majority members who held this view that with respect to rates the Interstate Commerce Commission is certainly not going to favor water carriers at the expense of the railroads and that any adjustment of rates affecting the diversion of higher-grade traffic that takes place must inevitably be at the expense of the railroad's competitors.

Mr. President, that is common sense. If we have two forms of traffic—railroad traffic and water-carrier traffic—there must always be a conflict between them, because, as I have repeatedly said, and as everybody knows, freight cannot be carried on a railroad so cheaply as it can be carried by water; and the only possible way for water carriers to survive is by reason of the lower rate by water. If a shipper has express traffic, if he has need of speed, he can afford to pay the higher price which must be paid for carriage on the railroads; but if it is a form of traffic where it does not particularly matter when the goods are delivered, the cheaper traffic by water will necessarily attract the shippers who would be benefited by such cheapness. There must always be this conflict. There must be the conflict between the higher-priced railroad establishment and the water carrier which can operate at a much lower rate. So I think the conclusion of the majority of the committee from the Maritime Association of the Port of New York is very logical.

The statement continues, under the heading "Majority for United States Shipping Board Bureau":

The United States Shipping Board has been charged by Congress since inception with the promotion and development of the merchant marine. It has consistently carried out such a policy and is essentially a "ship-minded" body.

It is rather interesting how that particular language slips into every statement regarding these regulatory bodies. It is said of the Interstate Commerce Commission that it is railroad-minded; and, on the other hand, the Shipping Board, which had to do with vessels upon the waters of the earth, was naturally ship-minded.

The report continues:

Despite certain criticism, the Shipping Board has consistently followed a policy generally beneficial to the public interest, the shipowners, and the development of the merchant marine.

The Shipping Board's general attitude toward shipowners, their problems, etc., has been sympathetic and cooperative.

The Shipping Board Bureau has accumulated experience over a number of years in dealing with the complex problems of shipping.

The Shipping Board Bureau serving as a nucleus could and should be expanded and enlarged to take care of proper regulatory functions.

Yet this bill specifically, by its very language, transfers to the Interstate Commerce Commission everything that is now in the Shipping Board. It takes all those things away from the Board which has learned the problems of shipping and has administered them with a reasonable degree of satisfaction, and turns them over to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Then the report goes on with another heading, "Majority against Interstate Commerce Commission regulation of water transportation":

The Interstate Commerce Commission is a railroad-minded body, for the reason that for nearly 50 years it has had to deal substantially only with problems connected with the railroads. It, as a matter of practice, in regulating both rail and water carriers, undoubtedly would attempt to bring water regulation in strict conformity with railroad regulation and would, we fear, subordinate the water-carrier viewpoint. S. 1632, as drawn, closely parallels railroad regulation and appears to endeavor to conform all shipping practices to railroad practice.

Then the report continues, under the heading: "Attitude of Interstate Commerce Commission toward the railroads":

The attitude of the Interstate Commerce Commission toward the railroads is in marked contrast to the sympathetic attitude of the Shipping Board toward the water lines. The Interstate Commerce Commission has not been as sympathetic and cooperative as the railroads believe it should have been in dealing with the railroads' problems, nor has its attitude toward the railroads been comparable with the sympathetic attitude of the Shipping Board toward the steamship lines, viz:

Mr. Eastman on page 39 of his report (S. Doc. No. 152) states:

"However, there is little warrant for a belief that the Commission has been unduly favorable to the railroads as compared with water carriers. Certainly the railroads entertain no such thought."

A rather interesting statement.

The daily press and trade papers contain many criticisms of the Interstate Commerce Commission's unfavorable attitude toward the railroads, typical of which are the following:

* * * * * * *

An editorial in the New York Journal of Commerce, issue of June 6, 1932, states:

"The Interstate Commerce Commission originally was set up as a regulatory body which was expected to protect chiefly the interests of shippers. The Transportation Act of 1920 introduced a new doctrine of requiring the Commission to act as a protective agency for the railroads themselves. The Commission, however, has been very slow to shift its viewpoint and still shows a little concern for the carriers in many of its decisions. The Supreme Court has taken a step to enforce the Transportation Act of 1920 in its grain-rate order, insisting current conditions be given due weight in rate making and setting a limit to the application of the Hoch-Smith resolution in giving special treatment as regards freight rates to depressed industries."

The Interstate Commerce Commission is cited (Wall Street Journal, issue of June 6, 1934) as having always treated the industry (railroads) as "on parole and under suspended sentence." With such an attitude on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the (railroad) industry with whose regulation and protection it is charged, what can the stepchild, water transportation, expect. Certainly not the sympathetic and benevolent attitude that the Shipping Board has displayed.

Criticism may be made that the Shipping Board has been altogether too considerate of the shipping industry. That may be true; the criticism may be well founded. Nevertheless, it must be borne in mind that in our various shipping acts there has been the express statement that each act was intended to build up an effective American merchant marine.

Regardless of the abuses which crept into the administration of those various acts—and I do not question that there were abuses—nevertheless, a real effort has been made to build up a merchant marine. Always when I get to that point I recur to the necessity of a merchant marine, the necessity to the shippers of the country, the necessity to agriculture, the necessity to the grain growers, and to the canners and the manufacturers.

We know very well what happened during the coal strike in England, when all the ships of Europe were used in carrying coal from the Continent to England. We know how there were piled up in Galveston and in Pacific ports the products of the farm, and if it had not been for the fact that we had a reserve fleet under the Shipping Board, I do not know what might have happened. The losses would have been tremendous.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield while I ask that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside so that the Senate may take up another matter? I dislike to interrupt the Senator's very interesting and illuminating discussion, of course.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will wait just a moment I shall be very glad to yield. I have had the thought in mind of trying to contribute something to the debate. I may say that at the proper time I hope to continue the discussion. There is much that I desire to say relative to this matter.

Mr. President, if we do not encourage the American merchant marine we are going to have the American flag disappear from the seas. We cannot compete with the bad living conditions and the ill treatment of seamen upon foreign vessels, the bad food, and the bad sanitary surroundings. We cannot compete unaided with the underpaid labor of Europe in building up our shipping. If we are to have an American merchant marine there will have to be some form of encouragement.

I think unquestionably the President is right when he says there must be a subsidy. But if we are to have a subsidy it should be frankly and openly given. So far as the pending bill is concerned, there is no doubt at all that it is a blow below the belt, and that if we turn over to the railroad-minded Interstate Commerce Commission the care of the American shipping it will be the last blow.

Of course, as I have said, with the addition of Senate bill 1635, as proposed by the Senator from Missouri, the bill will be greatly improved. But even so it will be detrimental and harmful in the extreme, and go far toward ending shipping under the American flag.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make a short statement in correction of a statement made by the Senator from Montana this morning. I am sure he did not intend to give the misinformation which was given. He read a statement given to him by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which sought to correct a statement made by me last Wednesday as to the tonnage carried by common carriers on the Mississippi River system.

I said at that time that the common carriers carried 3 percent or less of the tonnage on the Mississippi River system. According to the statement the Senator from Montana read this morning from the Interstate Commerce Commission, it would seem that the common carriers carried 31 percent of the tonnage.

The error comes in this way, that while the Interstate Commerce Commission talks about ton-miles, I talked about tons. I said they carried approximately one and three-quarter million tons. What the Interstate Commerce Commission statement refers to is ton-miles. They talk about miles traveled. I talked about tons carried.

We have here in the report of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, page 28, the next to the last column on the page, figures showing that the total tonnage carried on the Mississippi River system was 57,700,813.

Statement numbered 34127, file no. 48–C, of the files of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shows the water carriers reporting to the Commission. These data are selected for the calendar year 1933, showing what every barge line carried on the Mississippi River system—that is, common carriage.

The Interstate Commerce Commission makes the mistake of figuring in the tonnage of the American Barge Line. That barge line in 1933 carried 322,952 tons, of which only 5,000 tons were common carriage.

The total of all the tonnage listed on that page amounts to 2,205,514 tons, and when we subtract the 322,952 tons carried by contract by the American Barge Line we have a total tonnage of 1,882,562 of common carriage. That is just 3.2 percent of the 7,700,000 tons carried on the system.

I do not wish the RECORD to be closed for the day without that statement; and I am sure the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] would not desire it, either.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] with reference to one provision in this bill on page 34, as follows:

> No interstate common carrier by water shall engage in transportation subject to this part unless it holds a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Commission.

Then the bill contains a proviso that—

> If any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a common carrier by water in 1934 over the route or routes—

And so forth. It would seem to me that any of these lines which existed prior to the enactment of this bill into law ought to be excluded, instead of applying it and restricting it to those which were in existence prior to 1934; so I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 34, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "in 1934" and to insert in lieu thereof "prior to the date of enactment of this act."

On page 34, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "in 1934" and to insert in lieu thereof "prior to the date of enactment of this act."

On page 38, line 22, it is proposed to strike out "in 1934" and to insert in lieu thereof "prior to the date of enactment of this act."

And on page 39, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "in 1934" and to insert in lieu thereof "prior to the date of enactment of this act."

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the pending measure be temporarily laid aside and that the Chair lay before the Senate the House amendments to the public-utility holding company bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the House to the so-called "public-utility holding company bill" be laid before the Senate in lieu of the pending bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to that procedure, conditioned, however, on the amendments of the House going over until tomorrow. I have no objection to their being taken up tomorrow. However, under no circumstances should I wish to proceed with the matter at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. No, Mr. President; I do not propose that the Senate proceed with it at this time. I merely desire to have the amendments of the House laid down and then to have the Senate discuss the question involved tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state that the subject has been discussed with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH]. It is agreeable to me to proceed in the manner suggested by the Senator from Montana, and I understand it is also agreeable to the Senator from Illinois.

I will say it is expected that the subject will occasion considerable debate. There are Senators absent who will wish to be present when the matter is considered, so it is my purpose at this time to move an executive session and then a recess.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas postpone for a moment his motion for an executive session?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. DIETERICH. I should like to move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the amendments and the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments, which I understand is a preferential motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand the parliamentary situation to be that the motion made by the Senator from Illinois has precedence over the motion made by the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. McNARY. And that the whole subject goes over until tomorrow at 12 o'clock, and that the first vote will be on the motion to concur in the House amendments.

Is that the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the motion of the Senator from Illinois is a preferential motion and takes precedence, so that the question now before the Senate is whether or not the motion of the Senator from Illinois shall be adopted.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, may I have the floor at the convening of the Senate tomorrow noon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois now has the floor.

Mr. DIETERICH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be that the Senator from Illinois has the floor on the motion to concur in the House amendments.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers for appointment in the Medical Corps of the Regular Army; also the nominations of several officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

NOMINATION PASSED OVER—POSTMASTER

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Alice L. Woolman to be postmaster at Coweta, Okla.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand there is some arrangement for the postponement of the consideration of that nomination. I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE—COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the nominations on the calendar in the Coast and Geodetic Survey be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of postmasters, with the exception of the one passed over, be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, with the exception noted, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

MISSISSIPPI POSTMASTERS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, sundry nominations of postmasters in Mississippi have been reported today. I ask unanimous consent that those nominations may be considered at this time and confirmed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi that the nominations of postmasters in the State of Mississippi which have been reported today shall be considered at this time and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to repeat that they are all Mississippi postmasters.

Mr. McNARY. That is against the course of practice, unless there is some great emergency.

Mr. HARRISON. The delay has been caused by my failure to approve the nominations sooner. There is no objection to these postmasters. My colleague and I have approved them. They have been considered by the committee and approved.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suppose that states an emergency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters in Mississippi reported today by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 9, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 8 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

APPOINTMENTS IN THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Dorsey W. Hyde, Jr., of the District of Columbia, to be Director of Archival Service.

Solon J. Buck, of Pennsylvania, to be Director of Publications.

Thaddeus S. Page, of North Carolina, to be Administrative Secretary.

Collas G. Harris, of Virginia, to be Executive Officer.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE

Addison E. Southard, of Kentucky, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and a consul general, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

Leslie E. Reed, of Minnesota, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4 and a consul general, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

DENTAL CORPS

To be first lieutenants with rank from July 1, 1935

First Lt. Oscar John Ogren, Dental Corps Reserve.

First Lt. Marion Lawerence Mills, Dental Corps Reserve.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO FINANCE DEPARTMENT

First Lt. William Peyton Campbell, Cavalry (detailed in Finance Department), with rank from October 24, 1926.

TO COAST ARTILLERY CORPS

Second Lt. Thomas de Nyse Flynn, Infantry, with rank from June 13, 1933.

Second Lt. Charner Weaver Powell, Infantry, with rank from June 13, 1933.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

To be colonels

Lt. Col. Robert Charlwood Richardson, Jr., Cavalry, from July 1, 1935.

Lt. Col. Francis Webster Honeycutt, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

Lt. Col. Jay Leland Benedict, Infantry, from July 1, 1935.

To be lieutenant colonels

Maj. Julian Sommerville Hatcher, Ordnance Department, from July 1, 1935.

Maj. Benjamin Lafayette Carroll, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

Maj. Bernard Robertson Peyton, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

To be majors

Capt. Chambord Henry St. Germain, Infantry, from July 1, 1935.

Capt. Hardy Pate Browning, Signal Corps, from July 1, 1935.

Capt. John Webster Llufrio, Quartermaster Corps, from July 1, 1935.

To be captains

First Lt. Joseph Vincil Phelps, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. Charles Norton McFarland, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. Charles Alvin Pyle, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. John Ray Hardin, Corps of Engineers, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. Maurice Place Chadwick, Field Artillery, from July 1, 1935.

To be first lieutenants

Second Lt. William Alexander Schulgen, Air Corps, from July 1, 1935.

Second Lt. Daniel Beckett White, Air Corps, from July 1, 1935.

Second Lt. Donald Harvey Baxter, Air Corps, from July 1, 1935.

Second Lt. Samuel Oswald Redetzke, Air Corps, from July 1, 1935.

Second Lt. Roy Thomas Wright, Air Corps, from July 1, 1935.

MEDICAL CORPS

To be captains

First Lt. Frank Anthony Minas, Medical Corps, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. Henry Schuldt Murphey, Medical Corps, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. Carl Robert Darnall, Medical Corps, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. George Merle Powell, Medical Corps, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. Charles Henry Morhouse, Medical Corps, from July 1, 1935.

First Lt. John Lemoin Crawford, Medical Corps, from July 1, 1935.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 8 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

PROMOTIONS IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

Carl Ingman Aslakson to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant in the Navy).

John Crawford Ellerbe, Jr., to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer (with relative rank of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy).

Harold John Seaborg to be aide (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy).

POSTMASTERS

COLORADO

Charles H. Rash, Dolores.
Erwin L. Regennitter, Idaho Springs.
Elmo C. Rowland, Ovid.

CONNECTICUT

Frederick J. Bielefield, Middletown.

MINNESOTA

Charles C. Young, Aitkin.
John L. Townley, Jr., Fergus Falls.
Hazel M. Stull, Mazeppa.
Roy Viall, Spring Valley.

MISSISSIPPI

William M. Ferrell, Ashland.
Mable C. Whitaker, Gunnison.
James S. Garraway, Hattiesburg.
Pink H. Morrison, Heidelberg.
Helene Clarke, Holcomb.
William Liston, Kilmichael.
John T. Miller, Myrtle.
Thomas J. Barnes, Noxapater.
Andrew Y. Sivley, Olive Branch.
James C. Edwards, Pontotoc.
Tommie A. Hamill, Sturgis.
William W. Milner, Vaiden.
William T. Byrd, Walnut.
Will S. Black, Weir.

MISSOURI

Joseph H. Degginger, Albany.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Clifford H. Jope, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our divine Father, we thank Thee today for every pure man, every servant and scholar, every true, earnest, and honest person in the land who adds to the righteous influence of this great Nation.

Continue, we pray, Thy merciful patience toward all who fail in the fulfillment of Thy divine purpose. May we be consumed with a sense of the supremacy of duty over pleasure, the beauty of sacrifice, and the high nobility of service. In the name of Jesus, the Prince of Peace and Good Will. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 5, 1935, was read and approved.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on July 5, 1935, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8021. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On July 2, 1935:

H. R. 115. An act to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920;

H. R. 1292. An act for the relief of Grace McClure;

H. R. 2987. An act for the relief of E. W. Tarrence;

H. R. 3556. An act for the relief of Sophie Carter;

H. R. 4034. An act for the relief of Charles Szymanski;

H. R. 4123. An act providing for the payment of $15 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber fund standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States;

H. R. 4651. An act for the relief of the Noble County (Ohio) Agricultural Society;

H. R. 4764. An act for the relief of the officers and men of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserves who performed flights in naval aircraft in connection with the search for victims and wreckage of the U. S. dirigible Akron:

H. R. 4808. An act for the relief of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co.;

H. R. 4811. An act for the relief of George W. Miller; and

H. R. 5809. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to control the manufacture, transportation, possession, and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia."

On July 3, 1935:

H. R. 1438. An act for the relief of Carrie McIntyre;

H. R. 3012. An act to authorize the transfer of certain lands in Hopkins County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky;

H. R. 4368. An act for the relief of E. C. West;

H. R. 4610. An act for the relief of John J. Moran; and

H. R. 7235. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to make provision for suitable quarters for certain Government services at El Paso, Tex., and for other purposes.

On July 8, 1935:

H. R. 8021. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6732, entitled "An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes", with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a great many Members of the House are interested especially in amendments nos. 71 and 72 of this bill. They embody the same provisions as a bill reported by the Committee on Flood Control. That bill contains the provisions relating to the Parker Dam and Coulee Dam; but these amendments go further than that bill and include a dam on the Colorado River, in the State of Arizona. My understanding is that the Democratic leader is very much interested in that particular amendment.

This very important legislation has never been considered in the House. It provides for validating everything that has been done up-to-date with reference to the building of the Parker and Coulee Dams, and goes so far as to validate all plans that have been made, whatever that means. A great many Members of the House desire to have an opportunity to debate and to have a separate vote on these two amendments particularly.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless some opportunity is given to consider the merits of the Senate amendment. We are not going to consent willingly to validating all these vague plans. In the first place, to do so would be clearly unconstitutional; and, in the second place, surely this House has not yet reached the stage where it wants to validate matters about which it knows nothing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my point of order for the time being.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—JOSEPH W. HARLEY (H. DOC. NO. 244)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return, without my approval, H. R. 1119, entitled "An act for the relief of Joseph W. Harley."

This bill provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Joseph W. Harley shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on November 10, 1903.

In view of the facts set forth in the accompanying report of the Secretary of War, I do not feel justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 8, 1935.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES REQUIRING THE SUPREME COURT TO RENDER OPINIONS AS TO THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ACTS OF CONGRESS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by my colleague the gentleman from California, Hon. JOHN H. TOLAN, on his proposed amendment to the Constitution, over a coast-to-coast network broadcast on July 5, 1935. Congressman TOLAN is an eminent attorney and has made a comprehensive study of the question he discusses, and it is with pleasure I extend my remarks with his address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Representative JOHN H. TOLAN, of California, made over a National Broadcasting Co. coast-to-coast network, Friday night, July 5.

The subject of this brief talk is a proposed constitutional amendment. The Constitution of the United States seems to be a live topic today, and rightfully so, for therein lies the salvation of the American people. We still have reverence for that great document and amid the hurry and worry of the present day, the heart of our people is still sound and beats to the tune played by the fathers of our country.

Why amend the Constitution? Well, the framers of it looked into the future and knew changing conditions would require it and provided in the Constitution itself for amendments.

You know, since the original 10 amendments in 1791, only 12 others have been ratified—one of which repealed another—out of about 3,500 that have been proposed during the 144 years.

For a first-term Congressman to take 1 chance out of 292 to put over a constitutional amendment would seem at first blush the height of absurdity. But the most humble might get an idea and you are the jury tonight to say whether or not there is anything to my proposed constitutional amendment. It is House Joint Resolution 317, and provides as follows:

"The President, or either House of Congress, at any time, may require from the Supreme Court an opinion upon the constitutionality of any act passed by Congress, and the Supreme Court shall render such opinion in writing."

Now, is there any background or authority for it, and will you please keep in mind the question, why cannot the Supreme Court of the United States tell us before and not afterward what is constitutional and what is not constitutional?

Why, the background of this constitutional amendment is calling to you tonight from the historic words and graves of John Adams, James Madison, Charles Pinckney, Oliver Ellsworth, Charles Morris, George Mason, and John Mercer. One hundred and forty-eight years ago in the Federal Convention at Philadelphia they fought and argued in favor of such a provision whereby the Supreme Court should render an opinion on legislation passed by Congress, but they failed by a close vote.

And down these one hundred and forty-eight years what has it cost our people in anxiety and in billions of dollars; in years of time and troubled business conditions; in thousands of cases on calendars of our Federal courts; in debates in Congress as to the constitutionality of acts?—and through it all sit nine black-robed figures, human beings, receiving $20,000 a year, the paid servants of 125,000,000 people, who have within their legal minds the answer, if they would only tell us before and not afterward what is constitutional and what is not constitutional.

Just listen to this: James Madison, a signer of the Constitution, proposed the following amendment in the Federal Convention on August 15, 1787:

"Every bill which shall have passed the two Houses shall, before it becomes a law, be severally presented to the President of the United States and to the Judges of the Supreme Court, for the revision of each."

Here is the proposed article submitted by Charles Pinckney, of South Carolina, August 20, 1787:

"Each branch of the legislature as well as the Supreme Executive shall have the authority to require opinions of the Supreme Judicial Court upon important questions of law, and upon solemn occasions."

Except for the substitution of the words "Supreme Executive" for "the Governor and Council", this proposed article was worded exactly as the provision for advisory opinions in the Massachusetts State Constitution as written by John Adams, the second President of the United States, in 1780, 7 years before the Federal Convention.

Had John Adams not been a special envoy to the Court of St. James from 1785 to 1788, there is no doubt that he would have added much support to Charles Pinckney in bringing this proposal to a vote. Proposed late in the convention, it was lost in the committee of detail and never considered in debate.

Seven States, however, followed Adams' leadership and incorporated the advisory-opinion clause in their constitutions. They were: New Hampshire, Maine, Rhode Island, Missouri, Colorado, Florida, and South Dakota.

Some of the States have not included the authority to request extra judicial advice in their essential law, but have provided by StateState statutes that the justices of their supreme courts may be called upon on important occasions. They are: Oklahoma, Vermont, Minnesota, Delaware, and Alabama.

Though not authorized by law, other States have recognized its advantages, and on important occasions have had recourse to opinions of their justices—New York, North Carolina, Illinois, Connecticut, Kentucky, Ohio, and Nebraska.

The advisory opinion is as old as the history of the English common law. Many other governments of the Western Hemisphere have placed it in their constitutions, including the Dominion of Canada and 7 of its 9 Provinces; also, Hawaii, Colombia, Panama, Salvador, Honduras, and Nicaragua.

In our State courts 410 advisory opinions have been rendered, and so far as the records disclose no court thereafter reversed itself.

May I ask why it is necessary for 125,000,000 people to remain in the dark, in uncertainty, and anxiety as to the constitutionality of legislation until some private citizen devotes his time and money to make a test case? No particular reason that I can see unless we wrap the mantle of mystery about our Supreme Court and forget that after all is said and done they are human beings like ourselves and the paid servants of the American people.

I maintain this proposed constitutional amendment is sustained by the common law, the very source of our statutory law, by laws in force in other nations, and by 12 of our own States.

As a matter of fact, there is not one single word in our Federal Constitution granting authority to our Supreme Court to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. Chief Justice Marshall was the first to so hold, and it has been followed ever since. So this proposed amendment is really an addition and not an amendment, and would forever clarify the Supreme Court's authority in this regard.

It may be said, and rightfully, that it is necessary to keep our three branches of government independent of each other. In answer to this I quote from the book written by Albert R. Ellingwood, assistant professor of political science in Colorado College. He says:

"Lack of space forbids detailing more of the innumerable examples of a failure of our governmental organs to work together; they are within the knowledge of every reader. Embarrassments, tangles, missteps, inconsistencies, discords are of everyday occurrence in our public affairs, and they all spell waste.

"It is as if there were three cragsmen roped together for the ascent of a cliff. The success of the expedition depends upon the mutual helpfulness of all the individuals. If each one, instead of anticipating the difficulties ahead of his companions and suggesting methods for circumventing them, contents himself with commenting on reverses only when they are suffered and criticizing past errors, what a wealth of effort goes to waste; and surely no independence is sacrificed by such helpfulness—each is still a 'check' upon the others in time of necessity. Our present political problem is to build up a cordial sympathy and mutual cooperation between the three departments, without interfering with the domain of individual liberty under the Constitution or the independence of the judiciary."

No question but what this would be a helpful amendment, if passed by Congress and ratified by three-fourths of the States. Surely the 12 States which have provided by law for advisory opinions would promptly ratify this proposed amendment and others would follow.

What have we here in this country? Everything but the ability to think together and of what is best for all our people. We cannot solve the pressing and distressing problems of today by thinking in conflicting discordant groups, calling each other old names and coining new ones, but we can and must solve them by calm and united thinking, and in terms of the other fellow.

Hemmed in by two mighty oceans, we are impregnable from without. If we fall, it will come from within. There has been two much sacrifice and bloodshed by our fathers in creating and maintaining this Government for us to part with it now.

Take the picture today in regard to important legislation either passed or pending and which affects all our people: The Social Security Act, the Wagner Labor Disputes Act, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Guffey coal bill, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Wheeler-Rayburn holding-company legislation, and the Eccles banking bill. The dark cloud of unconstitutionality hovers over each and every one of these measures; and yet the judicial branch of our Government if given the constitutional authority provided by this proposed advisory-opinion amendment, could tell us before and not afterward and thereby dissolve this black cloud of uncertainty, anxiety, fear, and waste.

How helpful it would be to the entire Nation if the President, before signing any of these measures could request of the Supreme Court an opinion in writing, as to the constitutionality of any act? No one would be harmed—all our people would be benefited and it would remove from the shoulders of our private citizens the great burden of testing the constitutionality of legislation.

If you think this proposed constitutional amendment would be of assistance to the people of this country or if you have any criticisms concerning it, I would deeply appreciate it if you would kindly let me know.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF THE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert therein a radio address over the N. B. C. hook-up on July 5 last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered over the radio, over the National Broadcasting Co. hook-up, on July 5:

It would be impossible in the brief space of time allotted to do more than make passing mention of one or two of the matters of a political nature that are engaging the attention of the American people at the moment.

The policies of the present administration are under the critical and appraising eye of the American people. The average citizen will do well, however, to measure carefully the motives behind those who, at the present moment, are rushing into public print and availing themselves of every opportunity to criticize the President and his recovery efforts. Criticism prompted by partisan bitterness, however, may be easily recognized and taken for what it is worth.

It is needless to again catalog the overwhelming economic and social problems that confronted the President in March 1933. Not only was the business and industrial world suffering from economic prostration, but mortal and terrifying fear gripped the hearts of the American people. In their hour of extremity they turned to the President because they believed him to be a man of sincerity and courage and a leader not afraid to do and dare. In this estimate of the Chief Executive they have not been disappointed. There may be a difference of opinion about the efficacy of some of the remedies applied. It is undoubtedly true that experience has developed disappointments and weaknesses. This was no more than we expected. As experience has shown and developed these weaknesses, every effort has been made to remedy the defects.

It is manifestly unfair to focus attention on any one particular point in the President's program of recovery and undertake thereby to appraise the whole enterprise. We have heard much of late about the so-called "failure" of the N. R. A. and the famous sick-chicken case, but I think it may be said that notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court as to its constitutionality that the basic fundamentals involved in the N. I. R. A. were helpful in the emergency. The abolition of child labor, the fixing of maximum hours and minimum wages, and the protection of business and industry against cutthroat price cutting were certainly objectives to be desired in the effort to rehabilitate business and put men back to work. It is my firm belief that too much ballyhoo and an unfortunate interpretation and administration of this law—especially the effort to make it apply to small business—had more than anything else to do with its increasing unpopularity, which resulted in its ultimate defeat.

Let us not forget, however, the multitude of vastly beneficial measures that have been put into operation and which have undoubtedly and unmistakably set in motion the processes of ultimate recovery.

Mention might be made of the Civilian Conservation Corps; the financing of homes through the medium of the Home Owner's Loan Corporation and of farms and farm activities through the credit facilities of the Farm Credit Administration; assistance rendered to business and industry through credit facilities of the R. F. C.; efforts to rehabilitate agriculture through the activities of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which have beyond any question put new life and hope into the hearts of the farmers of America as well as added dollars in their pockets; the organization of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the regulation and supervision of securities for the protection of the investing public of America; the relief and Public Works programs, which have had for their primary purpose the relief of those in immediate distress, with the ultimate object of providing work for the unemployed in lieu of the dole and until they could be absorbed by industry. Time does not permit a careful analysis and description of these various recovery measures. I reiterate that no one has claimed perfection for them, but we do assert with unbounded confidence that the sum total of these efforts has been wholesome and helpful; and that notwithstanding the handicaps and obstacles, we are well on our way to economic solidarity and domestic tranquillity, all of which is just a highbrow way of saying that we are coming out of the depression.

As the time draws near for the American people to again select their national legislative body and Chief Executive, we find the air reverberating with all sorts of fantastic charges and accusations. Our political adversaries are charging us with breaking campaign promises and deserting our party platform. Of course, in true, old political fashion we deny the accusations and denounce the accusers; but this prompts me to make a more or less serious observation in this line, and that is that the present Chief Executive has refused to make partisan politics and political gain the guiding stars of his administration. Some of us more orthodox politicians have complained at times about this, but the President has steadfastly refused to depart for an instant from his announced purpose of guiding us out of our wilderness of confusion. For his attitude in this respect, the American people honor him; but suppose we should say for the sake of argument that he has departed from a campaign promise or a platform pledge. Is the purpose of his administration to carry out literally the Democratic platform, or is it to pursue such a course and apply such measures and remedies as may be reasonably expected to cure the evils with which we are beset? The question is its own answer. The President has had to meet changing conditions brought about at times by warring factions, groups, and classes. He has in every instance conscientiously and sincerely applied the remedy that he thought would cure the disease.

The question is being asked now whether the recent action of the House of Representatives, in adopting the House version of the so-called "utility holding company bill" in preference to the Senate bill had shown an inclination to revolt the leadership of the President. I do not think any such assumption is warranted. Speaking entirely for myself, I don't think that there is nearly so much fundamental difference between the President's announced views and those of the House of Representatives as might appear at first blush. The President has said in substance that useless utility holding companies that were not performing any useful public service should abolished, and the Senate bill sought to abolish them at a given time by operation of law. That portion of the House bill dealing with this problem provided a tribunal in the form of the Securities and Exchange Commission and conferred upon it absolute authority to investigate and regulate utility holding companies, and where they are found not to be of any public value or by their manipulations and operations a menace to the economic and social order, to abolish them. Really, the only practical difference is that the House bill gives the holding company the right of trial which is denied it under the terms of the Senate bill.

It is not only the President's prerogative but his duty to advise the Congress of his views in the premises—which he has done. It is "likewise, however, the duty of the Congress as a legislative body to determine the ways and means and the mechanics for putting into operation any policy of government that may be agreed upon. To my way of thinking, it is utter nonsense to say that this vote in the House of Representatives indicates to any extent whatever any loss of prestige on the part of the President. The Members of the House of Representatives, certainly those of his own party, and undoubtedly many of the opposition party, as well as an overwhelming majority of the American people, still entertain for our great leader that same abiding faith and confidence that prompted the Congress in the days of stress and emergency to almost blindly follow his leadership. The processes of recovery are at work; the faith and perseverance of the American people under the guidance and leadership of the President will continue to carry us on and up to a higher and a more secure social and economic order."

IS THE PERSECUTION OF RELIGION BY THE MEXICAN GOVERNMENT JUSTIFIABLE?

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein a radio address I delivered yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address which I delivered yesterday:

The first answer to this question may be given by one of the highest ranking Mexican officials in the United States. I refer to Mr. Eduardo Villasenor, the Mexican Consul General at New York City. A few weeks ago this gentleman tried to defend the anti-God policies of the Mexican Government. When I, in a speech in the House of Representatives on Friday, June 21, 1935, exposed the utter falsity of the position assumed by the Mexican Consul General, the latter official was so overcome with shame and humiliation that he was entirely unwilling to engage in debate with me upon this question this afternoon. Consequently, his default and his refusal to argue this question shows clearly that the Mexican Government itself and its agents are well aware that their campaign against religion and against God cannot be justified before the tribunal of world opinion.

The Mexican Government itself is the first witness, therefore, that I summon to refute the contention of the gentleman who has tried to defend the affirmative side of this question.

My next witness, gentlewomen and gentlemen of the radio audience, are the Mexican people. What have they to say upon this subject? Apart from the small clique of millionaire Socialists and corrupt military chieftains that dominate the Government of Mexico, there is a common unanimity of disapproval of the entire anti-religious policy of the Calles-Cardenas regime.

In order to establish the truth of this statement, I have only to refer to the magnificent demonstration in behalf of educational and religious liberty displayed by 30,000 Mexican men and women on the occasion of the convention of national rotary in the capital of the Republic of Mexico. Taking advantage of the presence of our freedom-loving American citizens, the Mexican populace was permitted to give a clear manifestation of its attitude on this important subject. The national press services of this country related that 1,500 Mexican citizens marched, demonstrated, and orated on this occasion. According to authentic reports from leading nonpartisan newspapers of Mexico, such as La Prensa and Excelsior, it is well established that more than 30,000 people took part in this splendid manifestation of divine faith.

In other parts of the Republic, such as Guadalajara, Puebla, Coyaocan, and Vera Cruz, Mexican men, women, and children have braved the murderous fire of machine guns and the sabers of cavalrymen in order to attend religious services. More than 5,000 citizens have shed their blood for their faith within the last 7 years, including 300 ordained ministers of religion. Can it be said that Christians at the time of the persecution under the Roman Emperor Nero displayed nobler courage or a more abiding faith in God than these martyrs of modern Mexico? These are witnesses whose voices come to us from beyond the grave and whose testimony is sealed by their own blood.

What do the Mexican people think of socialistic, atheistic, and sexual education? I will relate some concrete examples in order to give a frank, if not brutal, answer to this question. In some localities in Mexico, heads of families were so inflamed with indignation and resentment at the exposure of their daughters unclad in the classroom before immature children of both sexes that they pursued the godless government teacher who had attempted to corrupt the youth by a bloody and awful vengeance. It is neither my intention nor my obligation to justify these tragic reactions to the ruthless, debasing tendency of the Mexican governmental policy in education. It is my duty, however, to relate the facts as they have been presented to me in sworn statements by both Mexican and American citizens of unimpeachable character and a reputation for truth-telling. In certain instances the young girls who were thus exposed to the curious gaze of their classmates were so shocked with the experience that they fainted dead away, and in one authentic case actually the child for some days verged on the borderland between hysteria and permanent insanity. The mothers and fathers of Mexican children, who are revolted by the corrupt and corrupting policies of the Mexican officials, are star witnesses against the affirmative side of the question which we are debating this afternoon.

My third class of evidence will be compiled from the clear, undeniable statement of reputable American citizens who have lived in or visited Mexico within the past 10 months. I call into court that eminent Presbyterian minister, Dr. Charles S. MacFarland, secretary general emeritus of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. His book "Chaos in Mexico" is a crushing refutation of the falsity and misrepresentations of the Mexican Government, which they have been trying to propagate in the United States. It shows clearly that the warfare of President Lazaro Cardenas is a warfare upon Almighty God, Himself.

It throws into clear relief the fact that the National Revolutionary Party in Mexico seeks the extermination of all religion. This means that the radical governmental chiefs not only wish to destroy both Christianity and Judaism but that their hatred is directed in an intimate, personal manner even against the individual citizens, who without giving their allegiance to any particular organized church, nevertheless believe in their individual hearts and minds that there is a Supreme Being, the Creator and Ruler of the universe. In this sense it must be evident from reading Dr. MacFarland's book that President Cardenas desires to destroy the deeply human instinct to render Divine worship to the Infinite Majesty of God. His quarrel is with all religions, with all churches, and with all persons whose consciences oblige them to believe in God. The well-known American journalist, Robert Hammond Murray, reiterates this testimony of Dr. MacFarland in an even more emphatic form. He regards General Cardenas and his clique as nothing more or less than a group devoted to the ignoble purpose of exploiting the masses of their fellow citizens.

A few years ago there were five Methodist schools in Mexico City. Now the only one which has been permitted to eke out a precarious existence is the Sarah H. Keen School in Mexico City. Is the Mexican Government's persecution of religion justifiable? What justification can there be for a program of atheistic education that inaugurates the day in the classroom with the following interchange of salutation by the teacher and pupil: "Good morning teacher; there is no God"; "Good morning, children, there never was a God." According to Cardenas and his clique of greedy generals the child is the property of the state. The state alone has the right of education, while the rights of parents are not only disregarded but subject to ruthless violation. Is this justifiable?

In order to give a classic response to this question, I summon to the bar of judgment the overwhelming majority of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, citing the fundamental concept of liberty upon which all questions in this Union repose, which excludes any general power of the state to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public-school teachers only. "The child is not the mere creature of the state. Those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right, coupled with the high duty, to recognize their proper traditional obligations." Every mother and father, not only in Mexico but in the United States, must rise up in judgment and, on the unchanging basis of the natural law which gives parents the right of education for their child, deliver a crushing refutation of the Mexican Government's assault upon fundamental, inalienable rights of man.

What is at the bottom of Mexico's trouble and against what groups should the measures of reform be directed? I quote from the book entitled "Mexico and Its Heritage", by Dr. Ernest Gruening, now director of the Division of Insular Possessions and United States Dependencies in Washington.

"The traditional lack of a public conscience among public 'servants' is one of the reasons for Mexico's stagnancy, for the generally squalid conditions of living, undrained and unpaved city streets, habitations unfit for human beings, wide-spread and needless ill health, high infant mortality."

I quote further from Dr. Gruening:

"In 1923 one of the most enlightened revolutionists said to me that out of 28 Governors there were just 2 for whose honesty he could vouch. To two more he said he was willing to give a certificate of reasonable doubt."

Said he:

"The best that can be hoped for, generally speaking, is not a Governor who will not enrich himself through his office, for nearly all do, but one who while stealing will do something for his State. The majority take all they can and leave nothing. In half a dozen States the revolution Governors supposedly elected on the basis of 'uplifting the people' are closing State schools as fast as the national Government opens federal schools. The state contribution to education is either nothing or is diminishing, in the face of a national educational drive, in Campeche, Querétaro, Sianloa, Puebla, and Mexico.

"In one State Governor Carlos Riva Palacio, disregarding his informal agreement with the ministry of education that he would support village schools if the federation would take charge of rural education, has closed 75 village schools while the national government was opening a hundred new rural schools. Of course, he needs money—for his carousing in the capital; to pay his gambling losses, which have reached as high as ₱20,000 a night; for his high-powered cars with which he burns up the Toluca-Mexico road. And then his numerous relatives and the Gomez dynasty—which helped him into office and really rules the State—and its numerous relatives must be taken care of."

Who are the men who are persecuting religion in Mexico? One of the most notorious atheists and a bosom friend of General Calles and President Cardenas is Luis Leon, formerly secretary of agriculture and now editor in chief of the principal governmental newspaper in the whole of Mexico, the organ and mouthpiece of the National Revolutionary Party, El Nacional. This man is known as "Luis Leon"—and I quote the graphic description given of him by Dr. Gruening, who is by no means a prejudiced witness in favor of religion, inasmuch as it is known at the present time that he does not profess any faith at all.

"Luis Leon, best known for his oratory, had served during the post-revolutionary days in various posts. He was an active campaigner for Calles, to whom he was deeply devoted, and who reciprocated the young man's affection. Calles made him secretary of agriculture, for which his training as an agronomist gave him some claim. The appointment was personal rather than political. Calles with a very definite idea of agrarian reform, wanted an obedient executor of orders rather than an initiator. Leon did extraordinarily well. The Calles-Leon combination gave land distribution an impetus which it had lacked. Leon did his work efficiently until, in his case as in that of so many others, the Mexican heritage reasserted itself. He became enmeshed with one of the capital's well-known actresses. After a while even a Cabinet officer's income could not support her extravagances. The temptation to exploit his office became overpowering. After repeated admonitions, the President was compelled to ask for his friend and minister's resignation."

These are the men who are persecuting religion in Mexico and are waxing fat and rich on the profits of plunder and the fines they have illegally imposed upon citizens of Mexico who wish to worship God according to their consciences. The warfare on religion in Mexico is a racket, and the Mexican Government officials are the worst type of racketeer. There is an old proverb to the effect that a man can be known and respected for the enemies he makes. Religion in Mexico may be understood and interpreted in the light of her enemies. Luis Leon and criminals of his ilk close down orphanages, confiscate the property and revenues of hospitals, drive out the Little Sisters of the Poor, seize the possessions of the church which are the patrimony of the sick and afflicted and abandoned children of humanity and use them for their personal aggrandizement and political advancement for nights of wild dissipation and days of idleness in vain amusement. It is no exaggeration to say that Luis Leon and the other enemies of the church have wasted more wealth on their actress friends and upon the mistresses whom they adore in the last 20 years than all the religious institutions of Mexico by charity, frugality, and unselfish devotion to the people were able to amass in the previous 100 years. For men of this character to blaspheme God and try to destroy the ministers of religion is an outrage upon society and civilization. Of all people in the world Mexican politicians are least blessed with a sense of honor.

This, gentlewomen and gentlemen of the radio audience, is my answer to the question under debate: "Is the Persecution of Religion by the Mexican Government Justifiable?"

I thank you.

H. R. 8666—THE UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY BILL—BUILD HOMES AND REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. ELLEBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, for over 2 years I have been devoting a large part of my time and of my work to, first, save home owners from loss of their homes by foreclosure; second, to bring about the building of modern and decent homes at low cost for those of low income.

The fight to obtain sufficient funds for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been largely won.

NEED FOR HOUSING PROGRAM REALIZED

Now, our aim is to secure the building, on a large scale, of modern and decent homes at low cost—a fight which is now going on and which must be won. This is the problem which I want to discuss with you today—the problem of securing the construction of modern homes full of light, sunshine, and air, to be leased at low rentals to families of low income.

Government experts who have studied this problem have come to the definite conclusion that there is now developing the largest shortage of homes that we ever had. They have come to this conclusion in spite of the fact that there are many to-let signs and many unoccupied houses.

A long-term program of housing must depend on the future needs. Future housing needs depend on the expected net increase in families, the rate of obsolescence in old dwellings, and the drifts of population.

MARRIAGE RATE FACTOR IN HOUSING

The most important single fact on which the housing program must be based during the next 10 years is the expected net increase in the number of families. The increase in the number of families depends mainly on the number of marriages. In many cases marriages have been delayed on account of unemployment.

In 1929 there were 1,233,000 marriages in the United States; in 1932 only 982,000; in 1933, 1,077,000. But in 1934 there were 1,245,000 marriages, which is more than there had been in 1929. The marriage rate will increase over the next 10 years much above what it has been last year and even during normal times.

WE NEED 14,000,000 NEW HOMES

Considering the probable marriage rate during the next 10 years, the need for rebuilding old and obsolete dwellings, vacancies, and other factors, Miss Catherine Bauer, a well-known housing expert in the United States, has come to the conclusion that during the next 10 years the total number of dwellings needed in the United States to meet decent standards is 14,066,000. Just think of it! Over 14,000,000 new homes should be constructed in the United States during the next 10 years, if we are to have decent housing conditions. This may appear excessive, but the tremendous need for proper housing is documented and proven by thorough studies which have been made by Miss Bauer and by other experts.

GOVERNMENT AID ESSENTIAL

It is calculated that of these 14,000,000 homes, 5,000,000 can be built by the ordinary channels of private enterprise, and that 9,000,000 homes will have to be built with the aid of some governmental agency. The construction of these 9,000,000 homes during a 10-year period would cost approximately thirty-one and a half billion dollars.

Let us stop for a moment and consider the situation.

ENERGY AND SKILL OF UNEMPLOYED UNUSED

On the one hand, we have an army of millions of unemployed men and women who are able, who are anxious to work, but who are unable to find jobs. By the millions they are maintained by the Government through the payment of relief, while still others are exhausting their meager savings. The energy of these millions of jobless is wasted—their skill, their knowledge, and their experience is unused. Millions of able-bodied men and women have been going idle for the last 4 or 5 years. Just imagine what they could have built. Just imagine how many homes they could have built; just imagine the millions of garden communities which they could have constructed.

SLUMS BREED CRIME AND DISEASE

While this energy was wasted, millions of others have had to live in slums and blighted areas, in old homes without much light and air and without sanitary plumbing facilities.

While a misguided society has permitted millions of able-bodied men and women to live in enforced idleness, it has forced other millions to live under conditions which breed crime and disease. The same forces of society which find no outlet for the strength and energy of the jobless, have forced the children of the poor to play on busy thoroughfares under conditions which have sent many a promising young man or woman on a career of crime. Instead of leading these young citizens into channels of useful work for society, they have been led by these slum conditions into antisocial activities which tend to undermine society.

It is an absurd situation. On the one hand it forces the jobless and their wives and children to live in the slums in idleness, and on the other hand prevents them from building modern homes during those months and years of idleness.

MAJORITY OF FAMILIES HAVE LOW INCOMES

It is not only the unemployed, however, who live in substandard dwellings. The income of a large part of the population of the United States has always been much too small to permit the payment of rentals demanded for modern housing.

Even during 1929, a year of unexcelled prosperity, 42 percent of the families in the United States had an income of less than $1,500 a year. They were only able to pay up to $25 a month for rent, while modern homes with up-to-date conveniences could not be rented for that amount.

HALF OF POPULATION NEEDS HOUSING AID

Only with the aid of the Government can modern, decent homes be built for occupancy by families of low income. That means that between one-third and one-half of the population, and perhaps even a larger percentage, must have the aid of the Government, if they are to have decent and proper housing.

H. R. 8666—THE UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY BILL

With this in mind, I introduced in the Congress of the United States H. R. 8666, a bill to establish the United States Housing Authority.

This authority is to be a corporation wholly owned by the Government of the United States, which means by the people. The authority is to be established for the purpose of using the credit and, if necessary, the funds of the Government for the purpose of engaging directly or through local housing agencies on the large-scale construction of modern homes throughout this Nation, available for families of low income.

UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY IS TO ABSORB P. W. A. FORCES

The United States Housing Authority is to absorb the Housing Division of the P. W. A., its personnel, and the money which has been made available by Congress or which will be made available by the President for the building of low-cost housing. In addition it is to have the power to issue bonds up to $1,000,000,000, the payment of which is to be guaranteed by the Government.

The bill is designed to revive the building-trade industries and to give employment to hundreds of thousands of building workers and other employees. It provides specifically that prevailing wages must be paid to all workers on its projects. H. R. 8666 has been widely endorsed. It has been endorsed by the Labor Housing Conference, by the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, by the New Jersey State Building Trades Council, by the Chicago Federation of Labor, by the Cleveland Federation of Labor, by the Central Labor Union of Toledo, by the Building Trades Councils of Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Miami, Seattle, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, and by many other organizations.

This bill is a recovery measure, but it is more than that. It would add to the physical wealth of the Nation by laying the foundation for the building of hundreds of thousands of homes, and it would aid to the well-being and happiness of large parts of our people by stamping out crime-breeding, health-destroying slums.

I hope that the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which H. R. 8666 has been referred, will soon hold hearings on the bill and make a favorable report. I hope that the Congress will pass it and thus defeat unemployment and build the new homes which the country needs.

FRAZIER-LEMKE FARM REFINANCING BILL

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, 12 of our colleagues who signed the petition to take the Frazier-Lemke farm refinancing bill out of committee and allow a vote on the floor of the House have requested that their names be withdrawn from the document. There are, I understand, 204 signatures remaining.

I take this opportunity to state with all possible emphasis and energy, that there is one Congressman from whom no request of this character will ever come. "What I have written, I have written." I want to assure my constituents and all others interested in this legislation that I have been for the Frazier-Lemke bill from the start and that neither promises dangled before my eyes nor threats hurled at me, will cause me to change my opinion. The 12 who withdrew from the petition had a right to do so—it is every man's privilege to change his mind. As for myself, I long ago recognized the value of such a bill in helping extricate the agriculturist from the morass in which he is imbedded. To me it seems that the plan does not go far enough and that more comprehensive and fundamental methods must eventually be utilized, but I am certainly 100 percent for the measure as far as it goes.

If this bill becomes a law, relief to a tremendously helpful degree will be available to agriculturists by the long-term handling of farm obligations at 1½-percent interest and applying 1½ percent annually on the principal sum of their debts. It is predicted that the increase in the sums available for farmers for commercial and industrial expenditures will be more than a billion dollars a year.

All over the United States there are hundreds of thousands of mortgage claims pending, many of them held in abeyance for several years, that will be disposed of if this bill becomes a part of the statute books of our land. Enacting it will bring to these unfortunate farmers a bright ray of sunshine. It will furnish them with a means whereby they may temporarily rehabilitate themselves. What will be their lot after that may be a debatable question, but it is certain that the law will give them a little longer occupancy of their homes and provide a course of procedure which, in some cases at least, will permanently save these homes for them.

Neither this nor any other law we have passed or may pass is a panacea for all ills. It will help the farmer in his time of distress, although it does not solve the economic problem at the base of his disaster that must sooner or later be considered. The farmer has suffered so severely that a measure of this type, affording temporary relief, should receive the whole-hearted support of all lawmakers who have a social conscience, regardless of the fact that other and more sweeping legislation must yet be enacted.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make an announcement.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 117]

Amlie	Chapman	Dunn, Miss.	Harlan
Andresen	Claiborne	Eckert	Hart
Andrew, Mass.	Clark, Idaho	Eicher	Hartley
Andrews, N. Y.	Cochran	Engel	Hennings
Bacon	Collins	Evans	Higgins, Conn.
Bankhead	Corning	Ferguson	Higgins, Mass.
Barden	Crowe	Fernandez	Kerr
Beam	Culkin	Frey	Kimball
Bell	Darden	Gambrill	Kniffin
Berlin	Dear	Gasque	Knutson
Brown, Mich.	Dempsey	Gassaway	Kocialkowski
Buckley, N. Y.	Dickstein	Gifford	Lamneck
Bulwinkle	Dieterich	Gildea	Lea, Calif.
Cannon, Wis.	Dirksen	Goldsborough	Lesinski
Carter	Duffey, Ohio	Hancock, N. Y.	Lloyd
Casey	Duffy, N. Y.	Hancock, N. C.	McClellan

McKeough	O'Neal	Russell	Thomas
McLeod	Patton	Ryan	Tinkham
Maloney	Perkins	Sabath	Tobey
Marshall	Peterson, Fla.	Sadowski	Treadway
Martin, Mass.	Peyser	Sanders, La.	Turpin
Millard	Rabaut	Seger	Underwood
Montague	Rayburn	Shannon	Wadsworth
Montet	Reed, Ill.	Smith, W. Va.	Walter
O'Day	Reilly	Snell	Weaver
Oliver	Robertson	Stewart	Wigglesworth
O'Malley	Rogers, N. H.	Taber

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-two Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 4 of rule 27, I have filed a petition at the Clerk's desk to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 300, authorizing and directing the payment of adjusted-service certificates to World War veterans out of appropriations made for public works. There is still $1,000,000,000 left of appropriations for public works made by a previous Congress. Payment is to be made on the terms and conditions set forth in the so-called "Vinson bill" as reported from the Ways and Means Committee and sponsored by the American Legion. I hope the Members will see fit to sign this petition. [Applause.]

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN LANDS NEAR VALLEJO, CALIF.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1206) authorizing the transfer of certain lands near Vallejo, Calif., from the United States Housing Corporation to the Navy Department for naval purposes and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the gentleman from Georgia that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that this is a Senate bill that was considered by the Naval Affairs Committee and unanimously reported to the House. It is a departmental bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Georgia proposes to call up some other bills, and as far as I can see at the present time they are not of great importance, and I understand that they have all been unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Each one of the bills which I shall ask unanimous consent to consider has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. They have passed the Senate and are departmental bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Housing Corporation, a corporation organized by authority of the President of the United States pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs", approved May 16, 1918, as amended, is authorized and directed to transfer, by appropriate conveyance, to the Navy Department, for naval purposes, that certain tract or parcel of land comprising 29 acres, more or less, designated as the unsold portions of the tideland lot no. 19, in Bay Terrace, near Vallejo, Solano County, Calif.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUITABLE SITE AT PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII, FOR A REAR RANGE LIGHT

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2230) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire a suitable site at Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, for a rear range light and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to acquire on behalf of the United States a perpetual easement in or use of a suitable site on lot no. A4–12, Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, for a rear range light for the waters of Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, and for said purpose there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BEQUEST OF LATE DR. MALCOLM STORER

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2378) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a bequest of certain personal property of the late Dr. Malcolm Storer, of Boston, Mass.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, without cost to the United States, a bequest of personal property, provided in the will of the late Dr. Malcolm Storer, of Boston, Mass., consisting of a collection of naval medals, together with the sum of $500 to be used to cover the expense of the installation of said collection of naval medals as an exhibit at the United States Naval Academy.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BEQUEST OF LATE PAUL E. M'DONNOLD

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2846) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States the devise and bequest of real and personal property of the late Paul E. McDonnold, passed assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant commander, Medical Corps, United States Navy, retired.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States the devise and bequest of the real and personal property, provided in the will of the late Paul E. McDonnold, passed assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant commander, Medical Corps, United States Navy, retired, or the proceeds from the sale thereof, for the benefit of the hospital fund, United States Navy.

SEC. 2. The funds accruing from the sale of property and the moneys authorized to be accepted by section 1 of this act shall be deposited into the Treasury to the credit of the trust fund account "Naval hospital fund (7 s 815)", subject to the provisions of the Act of June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 1224, ch. 756).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETIREMENT OF ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 883) directing the retirement of acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy at the age of 64 years.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman how many officers are involved?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Two, and this bill saves $4,000. It is recommended by the Department from the standpoint of economy.

Mr. BLANTON. This legislation will affect only two officers either now or hereafter?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct. It affects two men who are 64 and 69 years of age and we propose to make the age limit 70 years.

Mr. BLANTON. If this bill is passed, it will not affect any other officers in the Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is correct, unless an officer gets to be 70 years of age and is in the position of these two men.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to know that the distinguished Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee is raising the age limit to 70 years.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It also saves $4,415.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, as the Clerk read the title of the bill, the age limit provided for is 64 years.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. There will be an amendment offered.

Mr. MAPES. Raising the age limit to 70?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., The acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy who, on the date of the passage of this act, have reached the age of 64 years shall be placed on the retired list of the Navy with pay at the rate of three-fourths of their active-duty pay.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 5, strike out the word "sixty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act directing the retirement of acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy at the age of 70 years."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to the request for 2 minutes, but a number of gentlemen have asked those of us in charge of the legislation for today for our consent to make brief speeches, some as long as 15 minutes. We have had to notify them that in the interest of making progress it will be our duty to object. I am not going to object to this request, but I felt it was right and fair to the other Members to make this statement at this time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in view of the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina, I think the House would be interested to know what the gentleman from Maine is going to discuss.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to ask a question relative to a quotation I find in a Maine paper this morning.

Mr. MAPES. On what subject?

Mr. HAMLIN. On the subject of Passamaquoddy.

Mr. MAPES. That is the matter that is going to be investigated by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire very much to ask my colleague the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. MICHENER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

LOTTERY MOVEMENT LAUNCHED

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address made by me at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on July 2 on the occasion of the opening of a Nation-wide campaign in behalf of a legalized and honest lottery in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, the National Conference for Legalizing Lotteries, Inc., of which Mrs. Oliver Harriman, of New York, is president, on July 2 last started a Nation-wide drive for membership in the organization which has for its purpose the legalizing of a lottery or lotteries in the United States. The movement was launched at a luncheon and meeting held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Many prominent men and women of the country were present to participate.

Howard Chandler Christy donated for use in the campaign a large painting which was unveiled at the luncheon. The design depicts a figure representing Charity, holding an infant in the left arm and resting the right arm on the shoulders of a crippled boy. A little girl clings to her skirts. In the background there is a group of unemployed and a hospital which is closed. Miss Elise Ford, of New York, was the model for the main figure.

As soon as a slogan is accepted for the design, facsimiles will be disseminated throughout the country in aid of the drive for membership in the organization. Sixty-eight prizes will be given for the best slogans. All who join in the membership of the organization will be entitled to submit a slogan. The first prize-winning slogan will appear on the picture which will be used in the lottery campaign.

Following is the address delivered by me on this occasion:

My compliments I extend to Mrs. Harriman and the representative women here assembled, splendid women who have already done much to banish hypocrisy from the land, you, who now with celebrated and prominent gentlemen open a grand membership drive in behalf of honest, legalized lotteries for America.

It is a good omen that there has been contributed for your plans one of the finest works of the creative art of the world's famous artist, Howard Chandler Christy.

This occasion, marked by the unveiling of his wonderful poster design, which will hereafter bear a prize-winning slogan, and facsimilies of which will be widely disseminated, auspiciously begins your Nation-wide campaign for the presentation to the country of the necessity of dealing with a problem which takes its place in the forefront of moral and economic questions. When your cause shall have been fully and completely presented, it will be accepted and adopted by the country more readily and more happily than was repeal of hypocritical prohibition which never would have been repealed except for the influence of President Roosevelt and the aid of the outstanding women of the Nation, many of whom are members of this group reuniting today in the interest of America and Americans.

You are a body of women who see things as they are, not as you and I would like to see them. You have not closed your eyes to that which is going on about you. You know that our people are participating in all sorts of lotteries not only in the large cities, but in the small hamlets and villages of every section of the country. The factual merit of this statement is undisputed and indisputable. Our people are spending on lotteries each year in the aggregate a gigantic sum ranging between three and six billions of dollars. As good moralists, as good economists, you are launching a movement to harness these billions of American dollars.

What becomes of the fabulous amounts of money now being spent by our people in the lottery markets of the Nation?

Firstly, a considerably part of it goes to foreign countries for the benefit of their governments and institutions.

Secondly, the greatest portion is spent in participation in illegal, dishonest, surreptitious number rackets, policy games, and other forms of lottery conducted, for the most part, by former beer barons, bootleggers, white-slave traders, and leaders of organized crime.

Our people have an urge to spend varying amounts of money for a chance to better their condition. They are doing so, will continue to do so, they persist in so doing. Our lottery laws, which are not gentle, prohibit, but they do not prevent. The racketeers have been quick to perceive it. Our legislators have not wished to see it. The racketeers have not made our laws, but our laws have made millions for the racketeers. The racketeering element has obtained control of every kind and form of unscrupulous domestic lottery. With foreign governments, the racketeers share the benefits of our lottery laws, Federal and State. Given a legal lottery or lotteries in this country, these benefits will pass from the present beneficiaries to the aid of worthy purposes here in America.

Is participation in an orderly lottery conducted for worthy purposes hurtful or destructive to the character, morals, or lives of our people?

Despite diligent research, I have yet to find that the self-respecting, sturdy patriots of the Revolutionary War took shame to themselves because George Washington fed and clothed his starving and suffering soldiers with lottery funds authorized by the Continental Congress in 1776. Nowhere have I read that consciences were impaired when a lottery furnished the means of paying the deficit incurred for providing a suitable meeting place for the first Congress under the Constitution in the city hall of this metropolis; nor again when in the early part of the nineteenth century the President of the United States approved a lottery legalized by Congress for the erection of public buildings in the National Capital in Washington. At no time has it come to my attention that the guiding sense of propriety was demoralized by any of the lottery participation which created funds for the building of churches, colleges, and edifices throughout the country.

Nevertheless, it may very well have been that zealous jailers of the public will cried out against these proclivities and called them "gambling." We have had, always, and very likely always shall have, sincere conscientious objectors who counsel extremely because they do not consider to think straightly. From befuddlement emerged the eighteenth amendment upon its tragic reign of mischief, which has been equaled only by the present-day rule of the policy, number, and lottery kings.

Until it fell into the hands of corrupt private individuals, as was the case in Louisiana, the lottery was viewed as a ready and wholesome method of raising funds, especially in emergencies. Let us take it out of the clutches of the racketeers where it now flourishes. Legalize it for the benefit of our hospitals, accredited charities and institutions, unemployment relief, relief of the taxpayers, or any worthy purpose. Legalize it for the benefit of the plain citizen who will then be given the opportunity, yes, the chance an approved lottery affords of potential happiness, independence, and self-reliance.

That the lottery when conducted for worthy purposes does not violate the moral law many foreign countries bear witness.

From authority high in the Italian Government comes this confirmation:

"I want to confirm to you that we have had a national lottery in operation since the organization of the Kingdom. It is conducted with weekly extractions in the 12 most important cities. The system in question has had no bad results on the general welfare of the people but has offered, on the contrary, a healthy method of contentment and happiness, with the possibility of drawing a fortune, especially on the part of the people of modest means. The system is under the strictest control of the Government, and since its operation its functioning has been most regular and efficient. Out of the operations of the lottery the Italian Treasury has realized a net average income of about 280,000,000 lire during the past few years."

A source high in the German Government sent me this communication:

"For many years legalized lotteries have been conducted in various German States under the auspices of the respective governments.

"As to the effect of these lotteries upon the citizenry, I can unhesitatingly state that they have been adding to the contentment of a large part of the population. Thus, their reaction upon the state of mind of the individual citizen has been a favorable one."

From the Turkish Government, I have this to convey:

"I may say that the Turkish lottery has had no bad effects whatever upon the general welfare of Turkish people, and has in no way increased crimes or misdemeanors.

"On the contrary, the lottery, which is conducted for the promotion of aviation, the purchase of planes, and the training of pilots, has been beneficial in arousing public interest in the cause which it supports."

Significantly, more than 30 other countries have lotteries, including France, Spain, Ireland, Russia, Belgium, Holland, Norway, and Sweden, and many more well-known nations. We have followed the example of other countries in granting equal suffrage to our women and well might we now adopt their sensible, practical view which permits of lotteries for worthy purposes.

Under existing law the billions yearly invested by our people in lotteries circulate outside the pale of our economic structure. Millions upon millions of our dollars going abroad annually to foreign countries never return. Billions yearly passing to the coffers of our public enemies are extracted from and remain outside the economic realm. Our penal laws keep lottery money from economic uses; they divert them to uneconomic uses.

This great wealth can, however, be reclaimed. The only requirement is a legal outlet. The States should join with the Federal Government to that end. Meanwhile, the laws of the States to the contrary notwithstanding, the United States Government, by Federal law, can establish a national lottery to garner funds for disposition for worthy purposes.

A Federal lottery would be a Federal instrumentality for raising revenue. A ticket in the hands of the purchaser would represent a right to participate in a governmental transaction which is not completed until the drawing. The States may not interfere with or burden the agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government and a State law prohibiting possession of a ticket would discourage the sale of the tickets, thereby hindering and placing a burden upon the means employed to carry into execution the powers of the Federal Government.

The task is yours. You have succeeded in establishing the full liberty and equality of women. You we have to thank for your part in taking from the Constitution the iniquitous prohibition amendment, constituting as it did the only constitutional restriction upon the liberties of our people. Upon you we must depend to restore the lottery to its proper sphere and place in our economic system. Reinforced by hosts of our countrymen and women, future members who will volunteer to serve as fellow members of your organization, you will win and register another notable victory for America and the American people.

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 279.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 279

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8632, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of T. V. A., or the amendments to the Tennessee Valley Authority Act. It is an open rule, providing for 6 hours of general debate. It is not as open a rule as the one under which the public utilities bill was considered. That was an especially open rule, permitting votes in the House on any amendment which was adopted in the committee. That has rarely been done.

Now, in regard to the rules of the House, there has been so much confusion in respect of them that such misunderstanding has pervaded news articles, and even editorials, and I would like to take this opportunity to point out what that rule did as compared with this rule.

As I said when I called up that rule for the consideration of the public utilities bill, it provided for at least five record votes, and three of them were had. If the bill comes back from conference, there are opportunities for two more record votes on the "death sentence." The editors should count them.

Some of the editorials have been very vicious in their unwarranted attacks against me and other Members of the House for having done what they claim is against the rules of the House, when what we, in fact, did was to follow the rules of the House as they have been in existence for over a hundred and fifty years, except that we liberalized them in this particular instance.

I pick, for instance, an editorial from the Washington Daily News of July 5, headed "Let There Be Light." There certainly should be, and especially concerning the long-established rules of the House.

I am only concerned with the misstatements in the editorial, not its blackguarding attack on me. It states:

The House was not permitted to cast a record vote on the "death sentence" clause.

This is not correct, unless the editor means that he wanted a record vote in the Committee of the Whole, something that has never been done in the history of the Congress; unless he personally wanted a record vote on every amendment that was voted down in Committee of the Whole, so that on some bills you might have 150 or 200 record votes. If, after you have had your day in court, in Committee of the Whole, you feel you are entitled under the rules of any game to another chance, for instance, every time an amendment is voted down, that is all so inconsistent with the rules of the House that you might just as well tear up the rules and turn this gathering into a town meeting, and even let the galleries, including the press gallery, participate.

The editorial further inquires, "Why not? After all, that was about the shadiest performance in the whole show", meaning no record vote in the Committee of the Whole.

There was nothing shady at all about it. Every opportunity to vote, and more than usual, was afforded under that special rule.

The editorial goes on to say:

It is known that Representative RAYBURN, who had charge of the holding-company bill in the House, asked the Rules Committee for a rule permitting a roll-call vote on the so-called "death sentence" issue.

Mr. RAYBURN, as an individual and without any support from his committee at all, asked for two motions to recommit, but never in the history of the Congress was any rule ever brought in permitting two motions to recommit where the Committee had not authorized a representative of the committee to make the request.

In this connection, something has been said about some of the Democratic Members voting for the House bill as against the Senate bill and thereby "voting against the President" and the "death sentence." I voted for the House bill as against the Senate bill, but in doing so I followed the chairman of the committee, Mr. RAYBURN, who voted for the House bill as against the Senate bill containing the "death sentence", and he asked this House to follow him. This was correct parliamentary tactics. Although he had asked for two motions to recommit, he took the floor and asked that there not even be one vote on the House bill for fear it might be endangered in conference. This move shows he was wrong in his original request.

Although he had asked for two votes to recommit, he took the floor and asked that there be not even one.

With due credit to him, that was one of the finest parliamentary actions I have ever seen in the House. [Applause.] That is what should have been done. It was readily realized that two motions to recommit, if they had been granted, would have buried the "death sentence" worse than the Rules Committee or anyone else could have ever done, if they ever had such a desire, which the Rules Committee had not. The editorial further states:

It is reported that President Roosevelt made a similar request to Representative O'CONNOR, Tammany Chairman of the Rules Committee.

"Tammany" is always used every time after my name as a descriptive word. It is especially used whenever anybody wants to take a whack at me. [Laughter.] I wish "Tammany" thought as much of me as some newspapers think it does. I would have had less trouble in the past. [Laughter.]

The report that President Roosevelt made a similar request of me is not a fact. President Roosevelt never asked me as 1 member of the 14 members of the Committee on Rules for two motions to recommit; neither on that bill nor any other bill. The subject was never discussed. Let the editors in justice to me make that correction.

The editor further misstates:

It is rumored further that Mr. O'CONNOR never told his committee colleagues about the President's request.

Bosh! That is another absolute misstatement, as is likewise the following:

But inferred, instead, that a teller vote would satisfy the administration.

What has the administration, if the executive branch is meant, to do with the rules of the House of Representatives?

The President never sent any such message to me. Whenever the President wants to talk with me he knows how to do it. [Applause.]

Sir Editor further effuses:

We do not know whether this rumor is true. But we think Congress should find out.

There is another investigation for you—to find out whether the President spoke to O'CONNOR. [Laughter and applause.]

Again:

All we know is that the rule the committee brought out permitted a teller vote, but forbade a record vote.

Tommyrot! Of course, the Rules Committee had nothing to do with that at all. Under the ordinary rules of the House teller votes can be had on any amendment. The Rules Committee never attempted to stop or permit them, if it could.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The editorial speaks of a secret teller vote here in the Chamber. There was no secret teller vote. With the galleries full of people watching our teller vote, and the press gallery full of reporters, all watching and tallying our teller vote, how could there have been a secret vote? How could there have been anything secret about it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course not, and the vote that went out to the country was about 75 percent correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; they were 97½ percent correct in printing how Members voted in the teller vote, which is most remarkable, because there are few men in this Chamber who can call the names of all Members by sight. Every reporter in the crowded gallery saw every Member as he voted by passing through the tellers.

Mr. KVALE. I understand there were only three errors out of 425 votes.

Mr. BLANTON. There was nothing secret about it. Everybody in the crowded galleries could observe everything that went on in the House at that time, and all witnessed this teller vote.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I quote further from this editorial:

All we know is that the rule which the committee brought out permitted a teller vote, but forbade a record vote.

That is an entire misstatement. The rule did not do any such thing. No rule would attempt any such a thing.

And that of the 11 members of the Rules Committee who voted on the issue, 9 stood with the power interests and 2 with the administration.

These figures are absolutely incorrect. There is no way by which anybody could get any such information for any editorial as to how the Rules Committee voted. It is entirely the conjuring of some editorial writer.

Here is another statement from the New York Post about lobbying by the administration, and its investigation by the Committee on Rules to quote:

This outfit—

Referring to the Committee on Rules—headed by Tammany's Mr. O'CONNOR, did more to save the day for the holding companies than any other group in Congress.

Well! Well!

Mr. Speaker, I followed the leadership of one of the most distinguished men of this House, the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. RAYBURN]. [Applause.] I joined with the vast majority of the Democrats on my side of the House, and when I do that I am never wrong. [Applause.] The only time I worry is when I am in the minority, especially of my own party, and then I usually say to myself, "You are wrong." In all, 165 or 170 Democrats followed the leadership of Mr. RAYBURN and voted for the House bill, so that a proper bill, with or without the "death sentence", might be brought out of the conference. I knew I was right, and I have no apologies to make.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. For a question.

Mr. RICH. If the chairman of the committee was right in that vote, then the President of the United States must have been wrong when he demanded the "death sentence".

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know about that, and do not believe it. I have not any information or knowledge that the President had any wishes in the matter. We hear a lot of rumors around here. It is a gossipy place.

The present rule, Mr. Speaker, for the consideration of the T. V. A. amendments is an open rule, although not as open as the rule for the consideration of the utility bill. The same unreasonable objections may yet be made as to this rule—that it is strangling something, that it is prohibiting or forbidding a record vote on something. That is not the truth. Nor was it the truth as to the public-utility bill, all the incorrect statements in the newspapers to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

I am opposed to the rule and the bill which the rule brings forward for consideration.

The obvious purpose of the bill originally was to strengthen the hands of the Tennessee Valley Authority in its case which will eventually reach the United States Supreme Court.

Already the Tennessee Valley Authority has spread ruin to many families, for they innocently invested in the bonds and stocks of utilities, and have lost millions of dollars.

This bill and the vicious Wheeler-Rayburn bill have caused a decline in leading public utilities in the past year—by fool legislation, you are impoverishing the people and seriously retarding business recovery.

During the past year and a half the people of this great country paid as much in processing taxes as all the homes in the United States paid for electricity in 1934. The tax on a single cigarette will pay for a 60-watt electric light for 3 hours. The cost of government, Federal, State, and local, now absorbs about 28 percent of our national income. Who will pay the taxes if you kill business and destroy income? This bill is an effort to bring about public control of all the utilities in the United States, in spite of the fact that the industry contributes over $250,000,000 in taxes to the Government each year.

I am opposed to the Government embarking in business—it is un-American—it is opposed to our form of government—it is a long stride toward socialism. Imagine a government of the people competing in business with its own people.

If you pass this bill, you will destroy the Commonwealth & Southern Co., which produces one-third more power than than they are now using, and make it impossible to ever pay dividends to thousands that own stock in that and other companies. What equity can there be in using the funds of all the taxpayers for the purpose of destroying the business of some of the taxpayers?

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANSLEY. Not now. The Authority will destroy all power and light companies in the States that the Tennessee Valley Authority operates. Like many of the new-deal projects, it helps with one hand but destroys with the other.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is now making a wasteful duplication of existing plants at the expense of the taxpayer. It will strike a withering blow at coal mining and railroads. It will throw a quarter of a million miners and laborers out of work.

The testimony given before the Committee on Military Affairs during the 5 months of the hearings by the officials of the Authority and their proposals in the form of Senate 2357, amending existing law, justifies the conclusion that the Tennessee Valley Authority has exceeded the powers delegated to it, and at the same time they attempted to obtain additional powers to extend its activities.

There is no indication of what the cost is going to be. Its program will commit the United States to large expenditures to furnish electric power to communities far removed from the Tennessee Valley.

The Authority, in its program for dam construction for generating electric power, for which they have no market, have disregarded the plans of the engineers of the Army providing for navigation dams, and propose to build higher dams, increasing the cost 75 percent.

For 2 years the Authority has experimented in the production of fertilizers. It is still in the experimental stage. Although much money has been spent on the construction of furnaces, no fertilizer has been sold, the Authority undoubtedly looking upon the development only as a power proposition.

Let us for a moment look into the future. The Tennessee Valley Authority, Boulder Dam, the determination of the President to develop power from the St. Lawrence will permit a hook-up of Government power lines that will not only compete but will destroy the investments of the people in existing power stocks and bonds.

I beg of you to leave the Tennessee Valley Authority as it is today and do not strengthen this fool project and make it more difficult to unscramble, for it will be unscrambled some day.

What right has our Government to create for itself a huge holding company when the President and his "brain trust" propose in another bill to deny to our citizens the same privilege? Benjamin Franklin said "experience is a dear school, but many will learn in no other."

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

[Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to state that I shall support this rule. There are not many rules offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] that I have supported in the past, particularly gag rules, but I think this is a wide-open rule, and should be supported.

I would say also that in the proposed lobby investigation I should like to read in some of the newspapers where some of the feudal barons, the Power Trust lords, have been, or will be, summoned to appear before the committee as well as certain men who are associated with the Roosevelt administration. We have heard much from friends of the Power Trust who are clamoring for the scalps of Mr. Charles West, liaison officer for President Roosevelt, and Messrs. Cocoran and Cohen, Presidential legal aides. I would much rather, for instance, see Mr. Wendel Wilke, formerly of Akron, Ohio, formerly a prominent Democrat, now the chief lobbyist for the Commonwealth & Southern Edison Co., in their lobbying here in Washington, appear before the committee to investigate the real lobbying efforts of the multimillionaire Power Trust in this country. That trust should be given full credit for the victory which it won last week and for the defeat that President Roosevelt suffered at the hands of the power octopus.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. I want to say a word about the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who says that he has filed a petition and is now asking us to sign that petition so that the soldiers' bonus may be paid. I ask the gentleman from New York how much he has done to see that the soldiers had their bonus paid and I ask the gentleman from New York if he voted for the Patman bill in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Not now.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is not in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I should like to know if it is not a fact that the gentleman voted against the Patman bonus bill every time it was passed in this House. On one occasion he was absent at the time the bill was passed. What right has he, when he voted against the Patman bill consistently and persistently, to file a petition and ask Members of this House, who have voted for the soldiers and gone down the line for the soldiers, to ask them to sign this petition.

I am not criticizing the gentleman's own record in the World War. I am condemning his record of opposition to the immediate cash settlement of the adjusted-service compensation certificates. Invariably he praises and eulogizes World War veterans and then votes against them. That record speaks for itself.

H. R. 8632, a bill "to amend an act entitled 'An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes', approved May 18, 1933", outlines five fundamental premises that should be endorsed and approved by the House of Representatives, by every Member who has at heart the welfare of the citizens menaced by floods of the Tennessee River, who has in mind the reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley, who thinks of the proper development of agricultural resources and industrial facilities of the Tennessee Valley, and who manifests an interest in the national defense of the country by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, in the State of Alabama.

The vast majority of Members of this House represent to a greater or lesser degree our basic industry, agriculture; therefore, there is no question but that those Representatives of these agrarian sections should welcome the opportunity to support a Government-owned plant that can be used economically and advisably for the manufacture of fertilizer and nitrates and for the more efficient and more economical growing and production of farm products. Finally, every Member of this body who does not wear the stamp, brand, and insignia of the plundering utility holding companies as personified by the Insulls, the Morgans, the Dohertys, and the Mellons, should embrace with open arms this added opportunity to vote for cheaper electric energy and power to the millions of consumers of electric energy, the home owner, the home renter, the farmer, the small manufacturer, producer, and business man. I say "added opportunity" because there has just been witnessed in this House a shameful and shocking spectacle of power and corrupt political influence wielded by the Public Utility Trust and the superpower lobby that brought about the ignominious defeat of the Roosevelt-Wheeler-Rayburn utility bill on July 2, 1935.

To those Members who either through mistaken motives, misguided purpose, or allegiance to these millionaire utility cracksmen and burglars voted against the President and the people, I plead with you to avail yourselves of this opportunity to right yourselves with the Roosevelt emancipation program for utility-service consumers and to square yourselves with the voters back home.

I have carefully scanned the committee report, consisting of 12 pages of explanation of the bill. In that report, I am sorry to state, I find no hearty, unqualified, enthusiastic endorsement of the bill by the Committee on Military Affairs. I find 14 pages devoted to "Compliance with Ramyseyer rule." Then I find the "Supplemental views of certain members of the committee" on the bill who state that they voted to favorably report this bill so that the House should have the opportunity to discuss and amend it, as well as vote for or against its enactment into law.

These Members state that they are heartily in accord with all attempts to improve the Tennessee Valley along the lines recommended by President Roosevelt and adopted by the Seventy-third Congress. They frown, however, upon the provisions of this bill, uniformly believing that the passage of said bill will retard rather than advance the program now under way. We find we are unfortunately in the same position as we were in regard to the Rayburn-Wheeler bill. The President of the United States was for the Wheeler bill. The chairman of the committee [Mr. RAYBURN] was for the Wheeler bill. The public was for the Wheeler bill. Many free and independent Members, undominated by any power trust, were for the Wheeler bill. I was for the Wheeler bill, but the Wheeler bill went down in defeat in the hands of the Power Trust. The purposes of certain members of the Committee on Military Affairs are most commendable and should receive the thanks of all. Their names are listed herewith: Hon. LISTER HILL, Hon. EWING THOMASON, Hon. CLARENCE W. TURNER, Hon. MAURY MAVERICK, and Hon. PAUL JOHN KVALE.

The supplemental views herein outlined are followed by the "supplemental views of Mr. KVALE and Mr. MAVERICK"; and in these views will be found the gist of the argument, the crux of the issue, the meat of the morsel so greedily sought for by the avaricious Power Trust and utility holding-company pirates. There are 10 pages of material covering the views of the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. KVALE and Mr. MAVERICK, respectively. It will pay you to carefully read and consider these views. If you are one of those Members who honestly believe that the natural resources of the country belong to all the people instead of the overprivileged few, then you will agree with these gentlemen, as I agree, that certain amendments which will be offered to the bill when it is read under the 5-minute rule should be adopted.

Returning to the committee report I note that the same old fears of constitutionality are stressed in this report, so I assume that through the course of this debate we will hear much about the Constitution and the nine men in black. I desire to reiterate the statement that I have often made on the floor of the House, namely, that on any paramount issue the people can divide usually on two sides; on one side of the issue will be found those who are for the common people and on the other side will be found those who are for the vested interests. I am loathe to believe that those Members who might be suspected of being on the side of the vested interests in this particular case, on the side of the holding companies and the Power Trusts, use the Constitution merely as an alibi or a cloak to shield their servility to those vested interests. Yet, I am constrained to remark that when any legislative issue cuts a clear line of cleavage between the millions of common people who create all the wealth and ultimately pay all the taxes, and the vested interests, the aristocracy of money, too often the Constitution is stretched and warped for the sole benefit of the moneyed aristocracy.

To those who fondly believe that the future welfare of this great Nation of ours should be based upon the Supreme Court decision in respect to the "sick chicken" case, I would say that the Committee on Military Affairs have been most painstaking in charting the course of those legislators who swallow without batting an eye and consume in toto the Constitution as written 156 years ago. It is agreed that under the basic act of May 18, 1933, the authority created by Congress rests upon two basic constitutional powers, namely, the regulation of interstate commerce and provisions for national defense.

The unquestioned constitutional prerogative of Congress to regulate navigation and to provide for flood control in navigable waters and the improvement of navigable water, not as emergency measures but for permanent policies, rest upon premises so broad that none can deny the right of the Representatives of the people in this instance. When the Tennessee Valley Authority Act was passed in 1933 Congress was definite in its purpose that the creation of that agency should fit in as an integral part of a permanent national-defense policy. Not so many weeks ago the House of Representatives in its wisdom adopted a number of salutary amendments to the McSwain war profits bill. Some of these amendments included the conscription of wealth and the services of industrialists and of the confiscation of all excess profits. When those amendments were adopted those Members voting for said amendments believed that the legislation being written was constitutional, but because of the provision which drafted men into military service in times of peace, that entire section was later stricken out by a vote of the House, and the bill as finally enacted into law was a bill completely emasculated and quite powerless of achieving the ends sought.

By the same process of reasoning and same logic it can be stated without fear of successful contradiction that Congress has just as much right, just as much precedent to declare that the Government of the United States, composed of all the people, supported by all the taxpayers, possesses the constitutional right and prerogative of producing chemicals such as nitrogen and phosphoric compounds not alone for war munitions and explosives but also for the betterment and improvement of agricultural commodities which would be just as valuable in times of war, foreign invasion, and for national defense as in the war munitions themselves. Many of us believed when we passed this bill in 1933 that the cost of fertilizer to the farmers of the country would be materially reduced, that they would be cut in half. Many of us knew that the farmers have been robbed by the Fertilizer Trusts for decades. We felt that this was the only method in sight to reduce that cost. As a consequence, we hailed the enactment of this legislation with enthusiasm, and today I feel that if for no other reason than this one the amended bill should be enacted into law.

I am happy to note that the chairman of the committee expresses the hope and belief that the Tennessee Valley Authority would eventually prove to be an effective yardstick to also measure the cost of producing electric energy by water power owned by all the people. I contend that it not only establishes a yardstick but it also establishes a mammoth Government-owned property for the generation of electric power that will be made available to millions of our citizens at less than half the charges and tolls now collected by the privately owned utility overlords.

Again I urge you to not only read but to carefully study the aforementioned views of certain members of the committee. Such reading and study will convince you as it convinced me that the bill, if adopted as written, will result in a complete and bloody emasculation and castration of the principles, premises, and policies laid down in the original enactment of the Tennessee Valley Authority. It will result in another victory that will be paid for in the toil, sweat, and blood of the millions of consumers of electric power, light, and current. On the other hand, if certain amendments are adopted, then it will be a bill of which we can be proud. It will be a bill that we can point to with pride; it will be a bill with which we can go to our constituents and say, "We come to you with clean hands, with hands that are not soiled nor smudged by the tarbrush of the public-utility holding companies." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. McLEAN. This resolution will bring before the House for consideration a bill which is entirely out of time. It provides that on the adoption of the resolution it shall be in order to move the consideration of Senate bill 2357, the purpose of which is to amend Public, No. 17, of the Seventy-third Congress, better known as "the act creating the Tennessee Valley Authority." The bill, except as modified by Senate amendments, was drafted at the instance of the Tennessee Valley Authority, for the single purpose of extending and liberalizing the powers of the Board, and to legalize certain irregularities to which attention has been directed by court proceedings. It is impossible to determine the proper disposition of this measure without taking into consideration the legislation under which the Authority is acting and that proposed and pending in Congress at this time.

A few days ago when the second deficiency bill was pending I made some observations on this subject in which I pointed out that the Tennessee Valley Authority has defied the mandate of Congress and has exceeded its authority, referring particularly to sections 22 and 23 of the act under which they are operating. I pointed out that this Board was created for the purpose of taking charge of and operating the Government facilities at Muscle Shoals, to build the Norris Dam, and make a plan for further development to be reported to the President to be transmitted to Congress, in order that Congress could legislate intelligently and authorize such activities as seemed proper; that, in spite of this provision of the law, the Tennessee Valley Authority had proceeded with a program of development and dam construction far beyond the authority which Congress had granted or had the power to convey, and that they had ignored the method of financing provided by Congress, under which their expenditures were to be limted to $50,000,000, and had spent or obligated the Government to a program which contemplated the expenditure of hundreds of millions. It is my contention that Congress should deny the Board further consideration until it complies with the provisions of the law under which it is acting, and comes to Congress in a frank and sincere manner with a program for the development of the Tennessee River Valley which, to quote the act, "will assist Congress in controlling the extent, sequence, and nature of the development", and, therefore, the pending resolution should not be adopted.

The answer of the Tennessee Valley Authority to this argument is that they have by statements before the Appropriations Committee made such a report and outlined such a program. This, of course, is untrue. If it were true, there would be no occasion for the differences of opinion that have arisen between members of the Board of the Authority and Senator McKELLAR over the location of dams and which dams should and should not be constructed at this time. At best it is not the orderly procedure which Congress embodied in the act of 1933.

If, however, sufficient Members of the House are so favorably inclined to this undertaking that they are willing to adopt the suggestions of the Authority and condone all the irregularities and disdain for Congress practiced by the directors of the Authority, and they feel that some legislation should be passed, this bill in its present form is far better than the bill as it passed the Senate, but the time allowed for its consideration under the rule is wholly insufficient. This activity has been going on for 2 years, over $100,000,000 has been spent, and $34,000,000 more authorized; Congress is charged with knowledge of all that is going on under the direction of these men who are its creatures and agents, and should take ample time to gain sufficient actual knowledge to vote intelligently before further powers are granted. The responsibility for the success or failure of this undertaking is the responsibility of Congress; Congress is charged with full knowledge of all the expenditures made and obligations created by the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Authority recognizes this fact when it suits its pleasure or advantage to do so; otherwise it holds Congress in contempt and arrogates to itself full legislative authority.

Instead of this resolution and the adoption of any legislation along the lines of either the Senate or the House, two things should be done: There should be adopted a resolution similar to the resolution introduced by me, and which has been pending in the Committee on Rules since April 26, authorizing a committee to inquire into the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority and to make known to Congress just what has been accomplished, what money has been spent, what the program is, how far it is going to go, the nature, sequence, and extent of the improvement, and the approximate cost and time of completion; the Authority should be prevented from undertaking any new construction work until it complies with the law and reports to Congress as required by sections 22 and 23 of the act of May 1933.

When members of the authority say the passage of this bill will stop the Tennessee Valley development they pay those of us who criticize the manner in which the activities are being proceeded with too great a compliment. For obvious reasons it would be as futile as it would be foolish to entertain such purpose. No harm can come from postponing further consideration of the pending legislation until we are better informed.

Mr. McGROARTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. McGROARTY. What has the Tennessee Valley Authority cost up to date? What amount has been spent on it?

Mr. McLEAN. If the gentleman will read my observations contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 20 he will there find that I pointed out that, in my judgment, from the various sources, from which they have obtained money, their expenditures and obligations contracted will exceed $121,000,000.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Does that take into account the moneys granted by the President through the P. W. A.?

Mr. McLEAN. That takes into consideration $50,000,000 appropriated by the deficiency act; $25,000,000 assigned from the P. W. A. fund; $1,000,000 given for the invested capital of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which was incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware; $10,000,000 appropriated by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; $300,000 that was granted to the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives; and obligations which Dr. Morgan admitted before the committee had been contracted without any authority from the Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak in favor of this rule. This is a fair rule and gives opportunity for full consideration by the Congress in a sufficient amount of time. However, I want to rise here today to say that the board members of the T. V. A. have never been contemptuous of Congress, and have always answered fairly and freely everything asked of them. It is said that they have not told anything. That is not so. Here are 3 full books on the subject of the Tennessee Valley Authority, 2 from the Military Affairs Committee, and 1 from the Appropriations Committee. Various committees have taken hundreds of pages of testimony for week after week and month after month. It has been before the Congress all this time. I do not say this impolitely, but Mr. McLEAN himself asked probably one-third of the questions asked in the hearing before the Military Affairs Committee, and he says in his minority report that he is opposed to the bill and the entire philosophy of government behind it. In other words, gentlemen on the Republican side of the Chamber are absolutely opposed to this bill. They are trying to put the bill in such a way as to cripple it and make it impossible of execution.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. They are not only in opposition to this bill, but they state their opposition to the principles of the original legislation which is now on the statute books?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes. They are opposed entirely to the philosophy of the bill. But I want to read something that the Republicans said when they were in power. This comes from the United States Department of the Interior under Ray Lyman Wilbur during the reign of Herbert Hoover. Talking about hydroelectric power, they say:

> The place which hydroelectric power holds in irrigation-project income led one project to urge the extension of an existing power plant and others to suggest investigations of the possibilities of hydroelectric development as a source of revenue.

That is what the Republicans wanted when they were in power. Then they go on and say:

> Hence, instead of scrapping the existing power lines and plants, these facilities were in general utilized by local organizations of farmers to retail to their members electricity purchased at wholesale from the Bureau.

That is what they said when they were in power. Those are the things they were in favor of; but now, because the Tennessee Valley Authority is possible of becoming a self-liquidating project and becoming a successful project in raising the standard of living in six or seven States, and probably the whole United States, they are opposed to it.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The T. V. A. has also reduced the electric light and power bill to the American people about $350,000,000 a year.

Mr. MAVERICK. That is right. I thank the gentleman from Mississippi. I also want to call attention to what the gentleman stated, that the Tennessee Light & Power Co. was given the prize by the Edison Electric Institute as being the best power company in the United States. That is where they get some competition from T. V. A. That is where the yardstick of the T. V. A. means something. The people need cheap power and are now getting it in the Tennessee Valley due to the T. V. A. Due to the decrease in rates, more power was consumed, and it has not hurt anybody's business.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] spoke of irregularities. Of course, everything was not right; some things were wrong; but Mr. McCarl said he found absolutely no evidence whatever of fraud.

It is time we forgot about the "death sentence" for utilities. Men may honestly disagree on the subject of a utility power company, and I think they may honestly agree on this. This is something that the President of the United States wants, and what I want to say to all of us is: Let us give the T. V. A. a "life sentence" instead of a "death sentence." [Applause.]

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement. Will the gentleman give me the authority for his statement that the Tennessee Valley Authority and development is going to be self-liquidating? Does the gentleman mean that we are going to get all our money back?

Mr. MAVERICK. I do not know whether we are going to get back all the money that was spent there during war times. It would take me a little time to answer the gentleman, more time than I have at my disposal. The self-liquidating features are fully covered in the hearings in questions asked by Mr. WILCOX, of our committee, and other testimony before the Military Affairs Committee and the Appropriations Committee. I am not a prophet, but the sale of power is of a self-liquidating nature; it is not money thrown away; it is not a dole.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, while I was out of the Chamber the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] propounded certain questions to the House and asked what right I had to initiate a petition to discharge the Appropriations Committee from consideration of a resolution to pay the adjusted-service certificates to World War veterans out of public-works funds.

Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to state to the House——

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order, that the gentleman should confine his remarks to the rule under consideration. We have heard a great many statements which had absolutely nothing to do with the subject matter under consideration. I do not think the gentleman should speak out of order.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not press his point of order. I admit I am speaking out of order, but I feel I should be given this opportunity to reply to the statements made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I shall not press my point of order, for I think the gentleman should have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I would rather answer the gentleman first, but I yield for one question.

Mr. TRUAX. Did the gentleman vote for the bonus bill at any time since he has been in Congress?

Mr. FISH. The trouble with the gentleman from Ohio is that he has been here such a short time that he knows almost nothing about the record of other Members of Congress.

Mr. TRUAX. Answer my question.

Mr. FISH. Sit down and I will answer you.

Mr. TRUAX. No; I will not sit down.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I call for order; I ask that the gentleman be required to sit down.

If he wants to do something worth while for the veterans let him sign the petition I have filed at the desk that provides for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

The gentleman has an unfortunate habit of attacking the records of Members of this House without knowing anything about them himself. The fact is that I have voted three times to override Republican Presidents to pay the bonus.

I voted to override the veto of President Harding, President Coolidge, and, lastly, of President Hoover, to permit a 50-percent loan on the adjusted-service certificates. Everybody but the gentleman from Ohio knows that I have been a friend of the veteran for the 16 years I have been in Congress. I voted against the Patman bill last year and I paired against it this year, because I am against inflation and printing-press money. That is why I am opposed to it. [Applause.]

If the gentleman from Ohio is impugning my record, I call the attention of the House to the fact that I am a veteran, that I served in the World War overseas while the gentleman from Ohio was raising hogs to feed the soldiers. [Applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; sit down.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield. Again I say to the gentleman, sit down. The gentleman is nothing but a chocolate soldier, a cream-puff soldier, now masquerading as a friend of the veteran.

Mr. Speaker, I started this petition in good faith and with no reflection on those who voted for the Patman bill. I hope that those on the Democratic side who voted for the Patman bill will sign this petition so we can pay the adjusted-service certificates before we adjourn, but we cannot do this without the help of the Democrats. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of a bill that in my opinion is going to have a far-reaching effect upon the American Nation.

Eighteen months ago we established the T. V. A., to be used as a yardstick in the United States in the measurement of utility rates; and now they have come back to us and asked to be converted from a yardstick into a 100-foot chain. [Applause.] This, my colleagues, is a fine example of the trend of bureaucracy in the United States today. In 1932, shortly after I was elected to Congress, I received a copy of a book entitled "Our Wonderland of Bureaucracy", written by a former distinguished and able Member of this House, Mr. James M. Beck. As I read that book I began to wonder, and being a very strong Democrat and knowing that Mr. Beck was a very ardent Republican, I doubted the authenticity of a great many of the statements in that book; but I am here to make the statement to my colleagues today that after having been a Member of Congress since that time I do not doubt one single word in that book. [Applause.]

We are today face to face with an example that transcends any that Mr. Beck portrays in his book. Here is a Board which has been set up by an act of Congress to administer the affairs of the T. V. A., which we have given a certain territory to work in which to work and a certain amount of money to do this work with. Now they come back to us wanting more territory, more money, as well as extraordinary and unreasonable power. They are asking for the right to buy and dispose of real estate in their own name. They are asking to be free from the control of the Comptroller General of the United States. They are asking to be allowed to go throughout the United States and compete with private business. They have bought in the Tennessee Valley a herd of cattle, 25 cows and 1 bull, for which they have paid on the average $372 apiece.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. The bull cost $950.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman has referred to certain prices paid for these cattle down there; and coming from an agricultural section, I want to say that the herd-upbuilding project of the Tennessee Valley Authority is one of the finest things they have undertaken, even though it is one of the smallest. [Applause.]

Mr. FADDIS. I may say to the gentleman that it might be a fine thing, but it is not what we established the T. V. A. for. [Applause.]

The original intention of the T. V. A. was to promote the national defense, to provide cheap fertilizer, and to be used as a yardstick to measure utility rates, and not to engage in a lot of theoretical enterprises to satisfy the whims of some academic college professor. [Applause.]

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman may be correct in his statement; but if the gentleman had flown over the South as I have, and had covered hundreds of miles of territory that I have covered and not seen a single cow but a lot of hound dogs coming from underneath the cottages or shacks down there, he would be glad to see a dairy cow here and there to combat the undernourishment that exists down there.

Mr. FADDIS. May I say to the gentleman that I have not flown over the South, but if I wanted to make a proper investigation I would not fly over the territory. I would go down through the byroads and highways to make the investigation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, coming from the South, I resent the insinuation of the gentleman from Minnesota. I am here to boast that we have as fine dairy cattle in the State of Tennessee as there is in Minnesota, or anywhere else in the Union. While I am strong for the T. V. A., I cannot permit to go unchallenged this unwarranted aspersion on the people of Tennessee.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And may I say that we have as fine cattle in Kentucky as they have in Minnesota or anywhere else?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, in addition, the Board that wants to be freed from the Comptroller General's Department is renting houses in connection with the T. V. A. that cost almost $8,000 for $20 a month. They are renting houses that cost almost $16,000 for $30 a month. Any man who knows anything whatever about the real-estate business knows that you must realize at least 1 percent a month out of real estate before you are able to make a penny upon the investment. I have always been taught in connection with enterprises that any man who is able to manage an enterprise must be one who is able to take care of the pennies; and if he does take care of the pennies, the dollars will take care of themselves.

The Comptroller General of the United States has made the statement that there is no fraud or dishonesty in connection with their dealings; but no man of any intelligence whatsoever could look over the report of this Board and fail to note that there is a great deal of incompetency reflected therein.

Mr. Speaker, when we pass this bill for the further guidance of this Board which we have set up, it is incumbent upon us as guardians of the money of the taxpayers of the United States to see that in their further dealings they are surrounded by regulations which will not permit the practices that have been carried on in the past. Unless we insure protection of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States from further incompetency, we are not doing our duty as Members of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN] for the authority of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas that the income from the power sold by the T. V. A., if amortized at the cost apportioned to that part of the plant devoted to the manufacture and sale of electric current, will be self-sustaining, may I call the attention of the gentleman to the testimony of two members of the Board.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. That was not the situation. The gentleman from Texas made quite a clear statement to the effect that it had been established that the T. V. A. was going to be self-liquidating.

Mr. WILCOX. In answer to the statement and doubt expressed by the gentleman from New Jersey in reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Texas that this plant would be self-liquidating, I call attention to the testimony of two members of the Board, Mr. Lilienthal and Dr. Morgan. I have been greatly interested in the T. V. A. development for several reasons, not the least of which is the establishment of a true yardstick by which the American people can determine the equity of power rates being charged by private utility companies. In my opinion one of the greatest services which has been or can be rendered by the T. V. A. is the establishment of a real true yardstick. The evidence shows that we have established such a measure. The members of the committee will recall that I devoted practically all of my time in committee hearings interrogating witnesses as to the rate bases and as to what was included in those rate bases in order that we might determine whether or not the rates charged actually pay the cost of production or whether the taxpayers of the balance of the country were paying a deficit involved from the sale of electricity; I call the gentleman's attention to the testimony of Dr. Morgan as reported on page 80 of the transcript of the hearings, in which I asked these questions and Dr. Morgan made these answers.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WILCOX. I am going to place in the RECORD several excerpts from the testimony on this point, but just now I read one question and answer. I asked Dr. Morgan this question:

On the point of your amortization and your depreciation reserves, is it true that insofar as that portion of your investment is concerned, which deals with the manufacture and sale of electricity, that at some period, 43 years, I believe, your returns on your present base will have paid for your investment?

Dr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. As well as paid the operating costs?

Dr. MORGAN. That, of course, assumes that the policy of interference is not permanent. We can be interfered with in such a way that we cannot operate in a normal manner, and that would make more difficult the normal amortization.

Mr. WILCOX. Assuming that you are permitted to go along with your program, charging your present rate base or changing it in case conditions should change, but on the same set-up of depreciation and amortization and the same set-up of charging delivery costs, the manufacture and sales expense, taxes, and all other things, at the present rates the property will pay itself off in a period which you set up?

Dr. MORGAN. Yes; and that is in contrast to the private utilities, who are making no amortization and who 40 years from now will have old properties which are unpaid, as in the case with the streetcar company.

From these questions and answers it can very readily be seen that the rates charged by the T. V. A. not only pay all operating costs but that these rates will completely pay for the plants in a period of 43 years. Not only that but even after paying all these costs the people of that section are now getting electricity at one-half of what they previously paid for it.

EXCERPTS FROM THE TESTIMONY OF MR. DAVID E. LILIENTHAL, A MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY, AS DELIVERED BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND REPORTED IN THE TRANSCRIPT OF THE HEARINGS HELD BEFORE THE COMMITTEE IN MARCH, APRIL, AND MAY 1935

On pages 29 and 30 of the hearings of March 28, 1935, Mr. Lilienthal testified:

Mr. WILCOX. What is the rate per kilowatt-hour charged to the rural user?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The basic Tennessee Valley Authority rate which is charged in the situation that I have described is 3 cents for the first 50 kilowatt-hours, 2 cents for the next 150 kilowatt-hours, 1 cent for the next 200 kilowatt-hours, and 4 mills in excess of 400 kilowatt-hours.

Mr. WILCOX. The basic rate is 3 cents?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It is a simple block rate; the maximum kilowatt rate is 3 cents.

Mr. WILCOX. The maximum rate is 3 cents?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILCOX. You deliver the power to the house, having provided the lines to bring it to his house, and your maximum rate is 3 cents for the first block of kilowatt-hours, which includes amortization and the cost of the extension line, and depreciation on equipment?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. No; the amortization is set up separately in this Alcorn County arrangement.

Mr. WILCOX. Where do you get the money to amortize the cost of that?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Every member of the association, every consumer, in addition to this basic rate, which provides for the cost of electricity, pays 1 cent per kilowatt-hour for not to exceed 100 kilowatt-hours, a maximum of $1 a month, as a means of quickly amortizing the investment.

In comparing these rates with those previous charged, I can furnish typical bills to certain kinds of users.

That 1 cent has been included, which is really not a payment for current, but a partial payment for property.

Mr. WILCOX. In other words, you simply finance the extension and he pays it back on the basis of the power that he uses?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That would be one way to explain it.

Mr. WILCOX. And you get that money back? You simply finance the cost of it, and get it back from the consumer?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is it. Interest is paid immediately, currently, and then the repayment of investment proceeds at once, from the first time the consumer begins to use electricity.

Mr. WILCOX. And this rate that you are charging includes depreciation, interest on investment, taxes, and all of the other things that ordinary rate-making bodies take into consideration as the basis for rate-making?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. All of the elements of costs necessary to consider in an undertaking of this kind.

Mr. WILCOX. And you still make a profit of 38 cents?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The association does. I call the Representative's attention to the fact that the Authority furnishes power at wholesale, in bulk, at some place in the county, and the county association then distributes it and charges the retail rates. The T. V. A. charges the association the wholesale rate.

Mr. WILCOX. What I am trying to get at is the fact that, with all of these charges, the rural consumer is still able to procure his power at 50 percent of what he previously would have had to pay, and this rate yields a very considerable profit—38 cents out of every dollar.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Exactly.

Mr. WILCOX. And that is made off of the sale of this electricity at a rate less than 50 percent of what he previously paid?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is correct.

Chairman Morgan calls my attention to the fact that this rate schedule, which begins at 3 cents, is, at its bottom step, a 4-mill rate for very large domestic consumption.

* * * * * * *

[From pp. 73, 74, and 75 of the transcript]

Mr. WILCOX. Those of us who have had more or less experience with utility rate-making and determination of a fair return on fair value have been somewhat confused from time to time by various regulations of the public-utility rate-making bodies as to what constitutes fair value and a reasonable return on fair value.

Do I understand that the rate which you make yields to the T. V. A. a return which includes not only the actual cost of production but in that figure you have included depreciation charges on what you consider to be the fair present-day reproduction cost of your equipment, less depreciation?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes. It produces on the basis of the estimated revenues of the communities that have indicated a desire to purchase this electricity a surplus of $436,000 a year over expenses, including interest charges, depreciation, and retirements.

Mr. WILCOX. Now, those who oppose in thought the public ownership of utilities have constantly made the charge that publicly owned utilities have the unfair advantage of not having to pay taxes.

Have you made a provision in your rate base which would offset that item?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes. Congress, in the act, estimated that, at least to begin with, 5 percent of the gross revenues would be a fair amount to pay to the State of Alabama, and later the State of Tennessee, by way of taxes. But in order to avoid any question the Authority has set up in its accounts for taxes, in addition to the 5 percent on gross revenues provided by law, the difference between 5 percent and 12½ percent which at the time was the latest information as to the average percentage of the gross revenues which the utilities of the United States as a whole paid in taxes. That is an item of $240,000 a year on generation. It is set up on the books to furnish information that may be desired in comparing these rates with other rates, but, of course, only 5 percent is actually paid.

Mr. WILCOX. To set aside, out of your gross income, an amount equivalent to the amount required to be set aside for taxes by a public utility?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is correct, and, in the case of local communities, those communities likewise are required either to pay, themselves, taxes—that is to say, to take from the revenues from electric-light operations an amount that would be paid if a private utility were operating and to pay it into their general funds and relieve the tax burden to that extent. The rates to consumers, therefore, contain that item of taxes on their distribution system, as well as the percentage to which I have referred, which is included in the wholesale rate paid by the municipalities to the T. V. A.

Mr. WILCOX. What percentage do you set up in your valuation for depreciation?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It is an item of $137,000 a year, on the basis of retirement in 43 years. That is on the sinking-fund method, at 3.5 percent interest rate, and it runs about $138,000 a year. That is a composite—in other words, the component depreciation rates vary on generators and turbines and physical structures. Those various rates are the components of the composite rate, on a 43-year basis.

Mr. WILCOX. You set up a depreciation reserve which in 43 years will completely replace your plant on present-date value?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is substantially correct.

Mr. WILCOX. Including lands, and everything else?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I doubt whether lands are treated as depreciable. Land values are amortized, but not depreciated.

Mr. WILCOX. Is that amortization set up also in your rate base?

The point that I am trying to develop is whether or not by reducing the rates to the consumer of this particular vicinity, you are giving them a low rate at the cost of the taxpayers of the balance of the country, or whether or not in making your rate base, you have used the same things that would be required of a privately owned concern in fixing a fair rate?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The surplus constitutes an amortization reserve intended completely to amortize the investment. That is in addition to anything that private utility does. As you know, the utility practice is to refinance, not retire securities, and that is causing a lot of trouble now.

* * * * * * *

[From pp. 78, 79, and 80 of the transcript]

Mr. WILCOX. There is one other question that I want to ask on that rate base. You said that you set up an amortization fund and also a depreciation reserve. Do I understand that both are charged in your rate base?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Charges against revenues; yes.

Mr. WILCOX. Of course, your rate base is a rate which you prescribe that will pay all of your operating costs, taxes, tax reserves, depreciation reserves, amortization reserves, and all other charges, and leave some reasonable profit?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Of course, all of the profit goes to amortization.

Mr. WILCOX. You are not operating for a profit?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. That is right.

Mr. WILCOX. Your rate is fixed at a sum which will give you a return including all of these items which we have mentioned—amortization, depreciation, and so forth?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes. I would like to call your attention, however, to the fact that the wholesale rate which we have been discussing is, of course, only a small portion of the total cost of serving electricity. Most of the expense is occasioned by the distribution within towns, and that part is furnished, generally speaking, not by T. V. A. or any Federal agency, but by the towns, like the town of Tupelo or the county of Alcorn. They are fully separated from the Federal Government.

Mr. WILCOX. As I explained a moment ago, the point that I was trying to develop here was that I had heard some criticisms from various sources that the United States Government is engaging in unfair competition with privately owned utilities, in that you can make a very low rate because of the fact that you do not have to include in your rate base many of the things that privately owned utilities would have to include, and I am trying to develop whether or not that criticism is well founded, or whether you include in your rate base the things that a private utility would have to include.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The Representative probably has heard the story about the great favoritism to T. V. A., because, for example, we receive land-grant railroad rates lower than those charged to private concerns.

Just to illustrate the ridiculous nature of that kind of criticism, the difference between the railroad transportation costs which we pay because of the land-grant freight rates and those that would result if we did not have that privilege was three ten-thousandths of a cent per kilowatt-hour. Likewise, in the use of the frank, which is often cited, the fact is that the T. V. A. pays postage on all bills sent directly to customers.

Mr. WILCOX. You pay your postage?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We pay postage on bills to consumers.

Mr. WILCOX. Do you enjoy any other privilege that would serve to reduce your cost of operation?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We do not have any holding-company charges, for one thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILCOX. I was going to ask you about that.

* * * * * * *

[From pp. 830 and 831 of the transcript, hearings of May 23, 1935]

Mr. WILCOX. Yesterday, when it looked as if I might not get back today, I left with Mr. Lilienthal a series of questions that I think he can answer perhaps in one answer.

Mr. Lilienthal, when you were on the stand before, I asked you something about your rate base, and you explained it briefly at that time. It appears that a good many people have not fully understood your answer, and I want to ask you about your rates and what is included in your rate base.

As I understand, you have two rates for power—a wholesale rate which applies to municipalities and to utilities and farm organizations, and the like, to whom you sell power at wholesale for the purpose of resale.

Then you have a retail rate at which you sell power directly to consumers.

If your rates are to be used as a fair measure, a yardstick, as we have been using the term, necessarily you must have included in that rate the sort of charges that a private utility would make, including a reasonable profit. That is, if that rate is to be used as a yardstick to judge the rates of private utilities.

I want to ask you what you include in your rate base for your wholesale rate?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. In the wholesale rate, the operating expenses; the expenses of operating the plant and the other facilities related wholly to power are included.

In other words, there is a charge for interest on the present value of existing investment at Wilson Dam, as the law expressly provides, of the property devoted to power operations.

There is a provision made for depreciation, so that at the end of the useful life of the facilities there will be a fund available with which to replace the property new.

There is an item of taxes, which is divided into two parts. One, a 5-percent tax on the basis of gross revenues provided expressly by the act of Congress and an account—not a payment but an account, since there is no further obligation to pay taxes on wholesale operation—of 7½ percent of the gross revenue, in addition to the 5 percent, making a total of 12½ percent of gross revenues chargeable to taxes.

Those are the major items that have been included in determining what the rate shall be.

Mr. WILCOX. Replacement of worn-out machinery?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. As depreciation; yes, sir.

Mr. WILCOX. In other words, your rate is sufficient to pay your operating costs, interest on the value of the property used and useful in the production of electric current, 12½ percent of your gross revenue to offset taxes, which would be paid by a private utility, and a reasonable depreciation to replace the entire property devoted to the production of electric current at the expiration of its useful life?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes. In addition to that there is on the basis of estimates of probable volume of business—and, of course, it must be an estimate, because we took the property over without a market—on the basis of estimates of probable volume of business there is available in addition to those items of expense a surplus in the neighborhood of a half a million dollars a year.

Mr. WILCOX. What does your retail rate include?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. The retail rate, for the most part, is the one that is charged in a contract between the Authority and purchasers at wholesale; there are some instances of direct operation, particularly farms in isolated communities. But on the whole it is a rate charged not by the T. V. A. but by contractors with the T. V.A., and that rate includes by the express provisions of the contract this: It requires the municipality to devote its revenue to operating expenses. It requires it to set up adequate depreciation, take care of the interest on its bonds devoted to the electric operations, and to provide adequate amortization for its bonds.

* * * * * * *

[From p. 833 of the transcript]

Mr. WILCOX. There is one other question, Mr. Chairman. Have there been any reductions in rates charged by private utilities in this same territory as the result of the competition afforded by the T. V. A.?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. What the reasons were I am not certain. But the fact is that in the States in that area, of which there are eight that would be directly affected, there were 30 companies that during this period reduced electric rates, totaling $7,067,000.

Mr. WILCOX. In this territory since the T. V. A. began its operations?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein excerpts from the testimony of Mr. Lilienthal and Dr. Morgan on the subject of the rate base.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for this purpose. This rule is a good rule, and this bill, with proper amendments, is a good bill, but the thing I want to call to the attention of the House is this: The Members who have given long years of study to this subject will not be permitted to address the House on this matter at the present time, because a sufficient amount of time has not been allotted for debate. The chairman informs me that the members of the committee will absorb practically all the time. It seems to me that hereafter when a bill of this importance comes before the Rules Committee a certain amount of time should be given to the committee members, and a certain amount of time should be given to the other Members of the House who are not members of that particular committee. I believe this is a matter that should be considered.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] I may say that when application was made to the Rules Committee for consideration of this bill, practically everybody from the Committee on Military Affairs suggested 4 hours, and the Rules Committee, on its own initiative, increased the time to 6 hours.

As to the division of time, many different methods have been used in the past, but years ago the Rules Committee found it was not practical to divide the time between proponents and opponents of a measure but settled upon a practice which has continued for years, under Republican administration as well as Democratic administration, that the time be divided equally between the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member, with the understanding that the fair thing to do is to divide the time equally between those in favor of the bill and those opposed to it. All the Rules Committee can do is to follow the usual practice of dividing the time between the chairman and the ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8632) to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8632, with Mr. DRIVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to permit me to proceed for the 10 minutes without interruption, in order that I may review very briefly the situation that has presented itself to the committee and to the Congress with reference to this legislation at this session of the Congress.

It is a matter of common knowledge that legislation relating to this general subject was in the committee for several months. I introduced a bill that was prepared by the representatives of the Tennessee Valley Authority, at the request of the President of the United States, known as "H. R. 6793." Before this bill had the full consideration of the committee the Senate passed a bill which came to the House and was referred to the committee. There were other bills pending before the committee relating to some phases of the general subject of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Finally, after extended hearings the committee, by a very close vote, to wit, 13 to 12, voted to lay all of these bills on the table.

Then, after the matter had remained in this situation for some time, at the suggestion of the President, I invited all Democrats to join me in a conference to see if we could agree upon a bill to be reported from the full committee.

As a result of this conference I introduced the bill (H. R. 8527), but when that came before the full committee, as it must, the bill was so amended that it was deemed desirable to introduce another bill incorporating all of the amendments that had been made to the bill (H. R. 8527), and this new bill became the present bill (H. R. 8632) and it was ordered reported by the committee by a very close vote, to wit, 13 to 12, without amendment. So the bill is here before the House.

We heard a very interesting statement a little over a week ago by a distinguished gentleman that a certain bill reported by a committee was an orphan. Well, this bill is no orphan. It might have had too many fathers, but it is not an orphan.

The committee directed me to report the bill, and the committee did not say what part of the bill, by my report, I should recommend the House to adopt and what part, if any, I should recommend that the House amend. I reported the bill as it was ordered to be reported by the 13 members of the committee who had directed me to do so, and I am here trying to be a good soldier, trying to represent the majority of the committee, and I have brought the bill here for your consideration.

Now, I am authorized to say by this majority who voted this bill out that they request the House, in Committee of the Whole, to consider this bill from end to end, to vote upon such amendments as a majority of the Committee of the Whole may see fit to adopt, but not to undertake to strike out the entire bill following the enacting words, and to insert the language of any other bill drawn anywhere or in any other body, but to consider this bill from end to end, and then, after you have considered it and after you have amended it, as in your wisdom you see fit, of course, it will be up to you to decide whether or not you want to support the bill as it will then be amended.

But whatever the Committee of the Whole does with this bill I will still be for the bill. I was for the bill that I was asked to introduce, and did introduce—which the President asked me to introduce. I was for the bill which my Democratic colleagues asked me to sponsor. I was for the bill that the majority of the committee ordered me to report, and I will be for this bill which the Committee of the Whole shall recommend to the House to pass, and I will be for the bill the House will pass. I am that sort of a Democrat.

I say it is in the interest of orderly legislation to consider this bill line by line and section by section, and pass on it irrespective of what may have been done anywhere else, whatever may have been said in any other legislative body—let this House act on its own judgment in reference to this matter.

Now, as to the paternity of the bill, if anybody must assume it let it rest on my shoulders. I take the full responsibility. This is neither an orphan child nor an illegitimate child; it is the product of what? It is the product of parliamentary government. Parliamentary government means, if there is a difference of opinion, that these differences shall be compromised—first in the committee and then in the legislative body itself.

No one who subscribes to that doctrine in government can expect to have his way with reference to the details of legislation. I have never had my way, and I do not expect to, but will lay my cards on the table.

Now, I want to say one thing, and that is that I have a fealty higher than party fealty, a fealty higher than committee fealty, and that is the fealty to the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] I will not trifle with my oath to support the Constitution.

I have some pride in the Tennessee Valley Authority. I will during the course of this general debate tell something perhaps about the origin of the Tennessee Valley Authority. It has been described as the "brain child" of this man and the "brain child" of that man. I will tell something about whose "brain child" it is and who gave it a name when it was legislatively christened by the Congress of the United States. I will tell this at the proper time.

I have practiced law now for nearly 40 years, and I cannot claim innocence of the meaning of the Constitution of the United States. If it is proposed here to inject into this bill provisions which were in the bill I was requested to introduce and did introduce, I would be obliged under my oath, having since studied it, and perceived in my judgment that it contravened the provisions of the Constitution of the United States—I would be opposed to it.

I have stood here, my colleagues, and have taken that oath eight times that I would support and defend the Constitution of the United States. I declared that I did it "freely and voluntarily without any purpose of evasion or mental reservation."

The T. V. A. must come under two provisions in the Constitution. One is national defense and the other is the regulation of interstate commerce.

And there is nothing else in that Constitution upon which you can hang it. If it is proposed here to make the Tennessee Valley Authority a merchant for buying and selling retail distributing systems of electricity and electrical power, I will have to say that within my judgment that is too remote from the constitutional power to regulate commerce. [Applause.] It is too far from the act of deepening a channel or building and operating locks. I believe under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that it is a part of the regulation of interstate commerce to put a power wheel in a navigation dam that is built to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I am sorry I cannot yield. I have had to notify all that I wish to make an uninterrupted statement. I believe it is within the power of Congress to provide that the power generated at this dam, which was built to regulate interstate commerce, is itself within the scope of proper regulation of interstate commerce shall be sold, but when it is proposed to go not a step further than that, but many steps further than that, and say, here is a hundred million dollars with which you can buy or build a distributing system in order to create a market and then sell parts of that distributing system as you see fit to this and that city, to this and that municipality or farming district, I say with all solemnity of one partly responsible for the paternity of this original act, in a measure, for which I fought for 13 years, that I think that that is going too far. [Applause.] I must uphold the Constitution which I swore to defend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am one of that group, numerically representing at least a third of this House, which labors under the disadvantage of not having had the benefit of the opportunity to listen to the discussion of Muscle Shoals and, incidentally, the Tennessee Valley Authority, which has been held in Congress for so many years. I am also of that smaller group which has come to Congress since the enactment of the Tennessee Valley Authority legislation at the first session of the Seventy-third Congress. When the original McSwain bill was taken up and hearings were commenced thereon before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, I was an interested and unprejudiced listener. Such conclusions as I have reached with respect to the necessary legislation undertaken to be accomplished by H. R. 8632 are the result of a calm, dispassionate consideration of the subject matter after hearing all the testimony and studying the hearings heretofore had, which culminated at last in the enactment of the T. V. A. Act.

It is to be regretted that every Member of Congress has not had the opportunity to familiarize himself with the situation as it now obtains and with all the various elements leading up thereto. In what I have to say I shall attempt to direct your attention to some of the matters and things which have struck me forcibly as being especially deserving of our consideration in connection with the action to be taken on the measure now before us.

Some things have been said about the treatment accorded in committee hearings to those who appeared in favor of the original or Senate bill. I believe that a careful reading of the testimony refutes any statement to the effect that anybody was treated unfairly or in any manner to which any justifiable exception may be taken.

I wish to take this occasion to pay my respects to Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, who heads the T. V. A., and to his associates. In anything I may say I do not wish to be misunderstood or as intimating that they are not 100-percent honest and sincere in what they are undertaking to do or in what they have done, however mistaken or misguided I may believe them to be with respect to their construction of the law under which they are operating, their usurpation of unwarranted and undelegated authority, and, as I see it, their failure to comply with the intent and purpose of Congress and the strict and unambiguous letter of the law.

They are right in believing that a great responsibility rests upon them and that there is a wonderful opportunity to render a great service to humanity; but like all idealists, however, they have scant use for those who oppose them or their ideas. Being absolutely honest intellectually and actually, having decided what ought to be done and how it should be done, their conclusions become a conviction which renders them impervious to any suggestion that they are wrong, and inclined to be intolerant of anything and everything with which they do not agree. I do not say this unkindly. I am appreciative of the enthusiasm and almost religious zeal which actuates them, as they undertake to make come true a dream of Dr. Morgan's for the betterment of humanity, in the accomplishment of which, in my judgment, their zeal and enthusiasm has led them to ignore the fact that as a Federal agency created by an act of Congress it was their obligation to carry out the intent of Congress as specifically provided in the act, and that they would be held responsible for their failure so to do. While they hitch their wagon to a star, they should drag at least one foot along the ground. They have assumed great liability as well as responsibility in the construction which they have given to the law.

The policy which they have pursued is explained by the fact that the estimable gentlemen have construed the law to mean, and are laboring under the obsession, that as a board they are above and beyond the law; that they are responsible to nobody. This may be an exaggeration, but to me their testimony discloses such a state of mind. In this I believe they are wrong. To urge that they should not be held as any other Federal agency to a strict accounting is to admit that Congress unlawfully delegated to them power and authority for the unlimited and uncontrolled expenditure of the taxpayers' money. There can be no greater fallacy. The friends of the original act cannot wish to be so understood. I am not undertaking to discuss the question as to whether or not it was wise or unwise at this time to establish the policy of experimentation or to authorize the expenditure of so many millions of dollars to carry out the provisions of the T. V. A. Neither am I undertaking to discuss the legal questions which are involved in the original act.

It is time to protest and to protest vigorously against such a policy as is being followed, for without accountability there can be no stability and we would be plunged into a bottomless sea of speculation. Only a bold prophet would dare to predict what might happen unless some action is taken now. We must not overlook the fact that the Board may not always be composed of men of such high purpose and integrity as now constitute it. Without an audit and the strictest financial supervision and the knowledge that both of these impend, an opportunity is offered to dishonest men to use the power and authority given them under the act in such a way as to create a debacle and a scandal beside which Teapot Dome and like episodes will shine as does a candle against the searchlight in the lighthouse in New York Harbor.

If the imposition of these regulating and restricting amendments will retard rather than advance the great program under way, I suggest to you that it should be retarded rather than advanced, unless such advancement is had under the supervision of and with responsibility for reporting to Congress as was originally intended by the original act. Congress knew what it was doing when it provided that the program should not go on without its approval. It proposed to know what was being undertaken. I do not know why it is highly objectionable to either the President or the Board that the law should be complied with. Why should they oppose the regulation, restriction, and limitation as well as supervision, all of which are for the protection of the people of this country and for the conservation of their money as against unwise or unwarranted or reckless spending? If you were on the Board and charged with the responsibility with which its members are now charged, you would insist that such amendments as are proposed in this bill were enacted, solely for your own protection as against the tongue of slander and to avoid even the appearance of evil.

What is the great program that is now under way? Have you been informed? Has it had your approval, or, have you turned over to this Board and to the President the key to the Treasury, disregardful of your sworn duty and without knowledge of what has been done or is planned for the future? If properly to protect the taxpayer, and at the same time, in their own interest to hold the Board to strict accountability, the program about which we know nothing has to be retarded, it must appeal to responsible and sensible men that such necessary delay, if any, as may be involved, should not be avoided but sought in the interests of all concerned.

There must be some well-established limitations and restrictions in order that the stability of the project may be guaranteed. To such restrictions and limitations as Congress sought to impose in the original act the administrators demur, deny their responsibility, and ignore the plain letter and the spirit of the law. To correct this situation is one of the purposes of this act.

It should be understood by the proponents and friends of the original act that one is not necessarily opposed to it and all its ramifications because he insists upon the administration and enforcement of it according to its very terms.

The integrity of no man or group of men is impugned or attacked because it is insisted that an accounting be had and rendered showing how the funds are going to be or have been expended. It is not to be taken as a hostile intent or attitude to the original act because one insists that in his judgment those charged with its administration have exceeded the authority delegated to them by Congress.

So the act—H. R. 8632—which we are now considering, among other things, is proposed for the purpose and with the intent forcibly to remind these gentlemen of the responsibility which rests on them to check their unwarranted usurpation of powers not delegated to them and to make impossible a further extension of their improper use of authority which is delegated under the act.

Among other provisions in the original McSwain bill to which we of the committee objected are those in section 2, which can only be construed as validating the acts of the Board in constructing the Wheeler and Pickwick Dams, the authority for the construction of which, so far as I can ascertain, never has been granted by Congress. This same section also grants in advance a blanket approval of any and all plans which the Board may have in mind looking toward the building of more dams, power houses, transmission lines, and any and all navigation projects without any limitation as to the expense to be incurred or any knowledge as to what any or all the plans may be or when the projects will be commenced or completed. Could you logically vote to so centralize power and authority in the Board or to validate what has been already accomplished and is being undertaken in contravention of the statute as it has already been construed by one judge and by many others who are competent to construe such laws?

Then when you look at sections 5, 7, and 9 you are bound to discover that therein and thereby they undertake to broaden and extend the powers of the Board far beyond any granted by the original act, and in so doing to avoid the effects of the recent decision of Judge Grubb.

The original act creating the T. V. A. entrusted the Board with the responsibility for the operation of the Government-owned properties at Muscle Shoals and the Cove Creek Dam. Congress reserved the right to and has insisted that the administrators should make a report, based upon careful study, as to plans for future development, and to proceed thereafter only so far as Congress should determine. Congress reserved to itself the right "to regulate, guide, and control the extent, sequence, and nature of development that was to be advanced by this authority through the expenditure of public funds—section 22, Public 17, Seventy-third Congress.

Can anything be plainer or more unambiguous? Yet these plain provisions of the statute have been purposely disregarded. The Board has gone ahead to commit the Government to the expenditure of many millions for many projects, irrespective of cost and without the submission of plans to Congress as is required by the law. It is their program, the Board's, covering navigation, flood control, soil erosion, town planning and building, reforestation, the construction of dams and all necessary incidentals for electrical power production, and the sale and distribution thereof, that they have followed, not that of or approved by Congress.

Have you Members of Congress seen any report as to what their plans are? Do you know how much all these things are going to cost, or how long it will take to complete the program, or what we will have to show for the money of the taxpayers that they are unauthorizedly spending? As representatives of the taxpayers, having reserved the right to pass upon the wisdom and expediency involved in a program which by the terms of the act was to be submitted to you for your approval or disapproval, are you content that your mandate be disregarded and that no report has been made? Are you going to vote to validate what has been done or is to be done without your knowledge or consent and in defiance and contravention of the expressed will of Congress?

Concerned to find out for myself exactly what Congress had in mind when after protracted hearings it finally enacted the T. V. A. Act, I studied the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs had during the first session of the Seventy-third Congress. I commend to your consideration the following excerpts from such hearings found on pages 30, 42, 45, 50, 51, and 52 of the printed volumes thereof:

Page 30:

Mr. JAMES. According to the bill, so far as I have read it, the Board is only authorized to construct the Cove Creek Dam, and that would mean, including what we have now, about 150,000 horsepower. I am not able to discover from the language of the bill authority for the construction of any other dam down there.

Mr. HILL. If you will turn to page 19, line 8, in the section providing for the construction of the Cove Creek Dam, you will find this language:

"They shall have like power to construct other dams and power houses and navigation projects in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and for that purpose may exercise the right of eminent domain."

Then, in at least two other places in the bill you will find provisions dealing specifically with the right of eminent domain in connection with the construction of these other dams.

Mr. MONTET. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill.

Mr. JAMES. Do you mean to say they would not have to come to Congress with that?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They would have to get an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. Do you think there is a general grant implied there or a specific grant, to incur additional obligations?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I think so.

Mr. LLOYD. It has not been specifically mentioned.

Mr. HILL. I think that under these words the Board could build any dam it saw fit to the Tennessee River or its tributaries.

Mr. RANSLEY. Has the gentleman figured on the cost?

Mr. HILL. That would depend upon how much was required. Outside of the $50,000,000 worth of bonds, every other dollar would have to be obtained from Congress. They would have to come to Congress for that.

* * * * * * *

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee and the chairman to this language on page 28, as follows:

"SEC. 28. The President shall, from time to time, as the work provided for in this act progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section and for the especial purpose of bringing about in said Tennessee Drainage Basin in conformity with said general purposes (1) the maximum amount of flood control; (2) the maximum development of said Tennessee River and its tributaries for navigation purposes; (3) the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal lands; (5) the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; (6) the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin; and (7) the economic and social well-being of the people living in said river basin and all adjacent territory."

Now, as I understand that, the President shall from time to time submit legislation to Congress which shall be referred to the appropriate committee. Is that the way you understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. If that is done, that is a safe and sane way. The other proposition of turning this over to somebody to go ahead and develop 3,000,000 horsepower on the Tennessee River, without coming back here for approval, and so forth, is an entirely different proposition. There is a good deal of difference between that and the language that I have just read, in that each year we have always got the matter under control. Not only does the Appropriations Committee have the matter under control but the appropriate legislative committee, whichever it may be. The other proposition would be entirely different.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. This language here is nothing but a signboard. It does not grant the President any power. The President could do that without any such language.

Mr. JAMES. It says here that the President shall——

The CHAIRMAN. Shall submit suggestions.

Mr. JAMES. Not suggestions, but——

The CHAIRMAN. Recommendations.

Mr. JAMES. Shall recommend to Congress such legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. But Congress does not have to enact the legislation.

Mr. JAMES. No; we do not have to, but we would have a chance to pass on it. The other way we would not have a chance to pass on it. These gentlemen who form this Board, once they were confirmed, would be able to go ahead and do as they pleased.

Mr. THOMASON. They would need appropriations, though.

Mr. MAY. What Mr. James has in mind is that this vests in the proper congressional committees the power to determine the methods and provide the legislation to do what they are supposed to do, as they go along, whereas the other proposition was to appropriate a certain amount of money on which there would be no strings except supervision.

Mr. JAMES. I do not object to the $60,000,000 proposition, but my objection is to a proposition where they might be able to spend a billion dollars or $2,000,000,000 without consulting us.

Mr. MAY. I think this is a wise provision.

* * * * * * *

Page 50:

Mr. TABER. Mr. Goss, if you will look on page 30 of the bill before the committee, section 28, following what I have just read, provides:

"The President shall, from time to time, as the work provided for in this act progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section and for the especial purpose of bringing about in said Tennessee Drainage Basin in conformity with said general purposes (1) the maximum amount of flood control; (2) the maximum development of said Tennesseee River, and its tributaries, for navigation purposes; (3) the maximum generation of electric power consistent with flood control and navigation; (4) the proper use of marginal lands; (5) the proper method of reforestation of all lands in said drainage basin suitable for reforestation; (6) the most practical method of improving agricultural conditions in the valleys of said drainage basin; and (7) the economic and social well-being of the people living in said river basin and all adjacent territory."

Mr. GOSS. That is practically the language of the Norris bill.

Mr. TABER. It is a little more elaborate.

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Section 29 provides:

"That all appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized."

It would not take another authorization bill of any description to provide for the reclamation of that whole valley.

Mr. JAMES. Where do you find any authorization for reclamation?

Mr. TABER. In sections 28 and 29.

Mr. JAMES. All it says is that the President shall recommend to Congress, and he would first have to come to Congress, and the bill would go to the appropriate committee and be reported out.

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. It would require additional legislation all the way through.

Mr. TABER. Certainly it would for any appropriation; there is no question about that. I am not raising any such question as that. It would require an appropriation.

Mr. JAMES. And it would require legislation.

Mr. TABER. Just an appropriation. It would require no other legislation. This would be sufficient authority for any appropriation within the scope of sections 27 and 28.

Mr. MONTET. For anything and everything whatever.

Mr. TABER. Absolutely.

Mr. JAMES. Not under section 28.

Mr. GOSS. It says in section 29:

"That all appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized."

That is the entire act; that covers the whole act—"are hereby authorized."

Mr. TABER. That is broad enough to cover anything that is hinted at in this bill.

Mr. MONTET. The bill hints at everything, does it not?

Mr. TABER. Very nearly.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 24 of the Rankin bill, or the Norris bill, is the same as the language in section 28 of the bill before the committee.

Section 28 provides:

"The President shall, from time to time, as the work provided for in this act progresses, recommend to Congress such legislation as he deems proper to carry out the general purposes stated in said section."

He can rcommend legislation; that is the same thing, under the bill I have introduced.

Mr. TABER. He could recommend legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not an appropriation.

Mr. TABER. But you have already, by section 29, authorized all appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. And all the legislation he has to recommend, with that section 29 in there, is the appropriation.

Page 52:

Mr. MAY. You mean to ascertain the amount of the appropriation necessary.

Mr. TABER. That is all he has to do under the rules of the House with this language here.

Mr. JAMES. I am sure that the chairman did not intend anything except that the President should have the right to send a message to Congress proposing legislation, which would be referred to the appropriate committee, the legislation after passing both Houses of Congress to be signed by the President.

Mr. MAY. The Constitution provides for that.

Mr. GOSS. You would have to amend the bill and knock out section 29.

Mr. JAMES. I think section 29 only means where something specifically authorized under this bill such as the enlargement of machinery at the dam, and nothing else.

The CHAIRMAN. The section, which is section 24 in the Rankin bill, is nothing more than a pathway making a suggestion for future action. It is not a paved road over which appropriations may proceed, but an indicated course of future development. It may mean nothing if the President never acts on it, or if he does act on it, it may mean the culminating in actual legislative authority to do something along that line. It would have to proceed in the usual legislative way, and if there is any doubt about that, I will certainly encourage an amendment to make it effective only to that extent.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. If you were Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and a point of order was made that the appropriation was not authorized by previous legislation, your view is now that you would hold it to be in order and the point of order not well taken?

Mr. TABER. On that question I would answer "Yes."

The CHAIRMAN. We will tighten that up so that you and all other Members of the House would have no doubt about it, whoever might be in the chair.

Mr. TABER. That helps some.

* * * * * * *

In my judgment, the express intent and purpose of Congress was to reserve to itself the right to approve or disapprove the plans to be submitted by the Board, and by so doing to keep its hand on the control against wasteful, extravagant, or unnecessary expenditure of the people's money.

You should support H. R. 8632, because it modifies and restricts the further unauthorized proposed extension of the powers heretofore usurped by the Board and curbs, regulates, and controls its activities beyond shadow of doubt, as Congress originally intended should be done.

The T. V. A. should be required to put its financing on the same open, aboveboard basis as is now required of public utilities generally; be prohibited from the sale of surplus power and chemicals below production cost; be required to account for its expenditures; be subject to a rigid system of auditing, such as it will have under the control of the Comptroller General. Then and only then its yardstick may mean something. It does not now; it is misleading, and its friends know it as well as do I. The Board should render a full account of its stewardship; take Congress into its confidence with respect to its plans; cease to arrogate to itself a nondelegated power and authority; lay all these things before Congress for its consideration in order that Congress may exercise, as it reserved to itself the power to do, the right to regulate, guide, and control the extent, sequence, and nature of development that was to be advanced by this Authority through the expenditure of public funds. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER], a member of the committee.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER].

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Chairman, let me say that I am fully in accord with the sentiments expressed by the able and conscientious lawyer who is the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House in the opening statement which he made this afternoon. The committee has labored many, many hours in the preparation of this bill which it brings to the House, and most of us feel that we have brought to you a bill which is in accord with the Constitution and one which will be upheld by a test or any test that may be made of its constitutionality.

The Government during the World War laid the foundation for the development upon the Tennessee River which is now taking place. Under the National Defense Act of 1916 the President was authorized to establish a plant for the production of nitrates or of the products needed for munitions in war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

Under this authorization the President ordered the commencement of the construction of a dam and certain improvements which came to be known as "Muscle Shoals."

Since that legislation originated in the Military Affairs Committee, all subsequent legislation relating to the Tennessee River development has been referred to the committee.

For many years following the war efforts were made by private interests to acquire the plant and improvements instituted and erected by the Government. These efforts were always frustrated by those who believed that the cause of national defense and the navigability of the Tennessee River should be in the hands of all of the people rather than some private monopoly.

Those of us who voted to bring out of the committee the original Tennessee Valley Authority Act approved May 18, 1933, were of this same mind, and I believe that it is the opinion of all or nearly all of the majority members of the House Committee on Military Affairs that we wish to preserve, through Government ownership and operation, the future development of the Tennessee River for the purposes of national defense, improve its navigability, and provide for proper flood control therein.

We have had long and extended hearings before the committee upon a bill similar to that passed by the Senate, and we have read carefully the decision of Judge Grubb, which enjoins the doing of certain things by the Government agency known as the "Tennessee Valley Authority" created by the act of 1933.

This decision of the district court has been submitted to the circuit court of appeals for review, and it is expected that it will be argued before the Supreme Court of the United States at its next term.

Briefly, Judge Grubb restrained, first, consummation of the contract under which the Tennessee Valley Authority proposed to acquire electrical distributing properties from the Alabama Power Co.; second, restrained various Alabama municipalities from buying power from T. V. A. and from negotiating loans from any Government agency to finance construction of electric plants as outlets for T. V. A. power; and third, restrained the Alabama Power Co. from acting as an agency of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc.

The meat of the decision is contained in the following two paragraphs:

The United States is a government of enumerated powers conferred in express terms or by necessary implication on it by the Constitution. No power is conferred on it to engage in any private business, unless incidental to some power specifically granted. The power to produce, distribute, and sell electric power or any other commodity generally is not in terms granted, and must be connected with a granted power in order to exist. In this case it is sought to be connected with the power to improve navigable rivers, the power to provide for the national defense, or the power to make needful regulations concerning Government-owned property. The Government has the right to create electric power to aid its operations under any one or all of these granted powers. It also has the implied right to dispose of any surplus power not used for the named purposes to prevent waste. It has no power to produce and sell electric power except as incidental to a granted power, as in case of the disposition of such surplus. This is especially true within the limits of a State of the United States. If the program of the Tennessee Valley Authority involves only the salvaging of excess or unused electric power produced in aid of its operations in improving the navigation of the Tennessee River, or in relation to its operations at the Wilson Dam or the nitrate plants, there located for the national defense, or for the benefit of lands owned by it in the Government reservations at or in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, its right to dispose of such excess electric power cannot be questioned. This implies the existence of a surplus in its legitimate operation, and the power of disposition would be so limited. If its program is more extensive and amounts to an engaging in and carrying on, independent of the question of surplus power and without relation to a granted power, the general business of producing and selling electric power within the limits of Alabama, it is ultra vires of the power actually conferred or that could have been conferred by Congress on the Tennessee Valley Authority by its act of incorporation.

The solution of the question depends upon the extent of its program in this respect. If a substantial relation is shown between the granted power and the surplus, it is enough. If there is no substantial relation between the granted power and the creation of the surplus electric power, the courts should declare the creation and disposition of it, unauthorized. The distinction is between a salvaging of unused or excess power created in aid of operations under a constitutional power and so incidental and related to it, and an engaging in the production and sale of electric energy, as any other utility would do, independently of any constitutionally granted power and unrelated to it. A corporation created by Congress would have no greater authority to do this than would the Government itself. It would be the instrument of the Government and its functions restricted to what was within the power of the Government.

None of us but realize that the Federal Government, under the Constitution, is one of delegated powers. Unless there has been specific authority given to the Federal Government or incidentally through powers specifically granted, can there be any extension of such delegated power, and then only such as may be said to logically follow and be a necessary adjunct to the carrying out of the enumerated power or powers.

Following this intensive consideration of the whole subject, your committee rewrote the original bill and now presents to you H. R. 8632 as the product of its labors. It has taken great care to recommend only such a measure as the committee thinks to be within the powers of Congress to enact under the Constitution.

The bill which it sponsors is more limiting in nature than the Senate bill, but is not such as to tie the hands of the Authority in the further lawful, orderly, and sound development of the entire project. This despite articles appearing in the press to the effect that the House bill will cripple T. V. A. If soberly and carefully analyzed, it will be found that it will have no such effect.

In the judgment of the majority of the committee, it is high time to limit the activities of this Corporation, make it amenable to the accounting methods enforced upon other departments and agencies of Government and to bring its activities clearly within the scope of the Constitution.

Sections 1 of the Senate bill and of H. R. 8632 are identical, this merely broadening the modes of procedure in condemnation suits.

Sections 2 of the bills do not differ materially, except that the House bill sets forth that the Authority shall be guided by the report of the Chief of Engineers, dated March 15, 1930—House Document No. 328, Seventy-first Congress, second session—and authorized by act of Congress approved July 3, 1930—Public, 520, Seventy-first Congress. This section of the House bill further directing the T. V. A. to include in its next annual report its directors' recommendations for the unified development of the Tennessee River system. These changes are designed to have the T. V. A. take advantage of the extensive research of the Army Board of Engineers and to lay before Congress its plans so that the country may know what further developments it contemplates.

Sections 3 are the same, except that the House provision contains this additional language, "but no land shall be conveyed on which there is a permanent structure heretofore or hereafter built for the United States or the Authority." There is no reason why parcels of land, no longer needed for the project, should be held and the Board, with the approval of the President, may dispose of such excess land, but an exception is made in the House bill when the land has been developed by the erection of a permanent structure thereon. In such instance the further express authorization of Congress to dispose of the land should be required.

Sections 4 of the two acts differ. The Senate bill authorizes the Board to experiment in the production of chemicals and other modes and methods for the extermination of noxious weeds and the destruction of plants injurious to agriculture, while the House act does not permit the Board to experiment in the production of chemicals, but limits its experimenting to the extermination of noxious weeds by means of the application and use of chemicals.

In both drafts this section takes into account the importance of checking the inroads of soil erosion.

Sections 5 and 6 of both bills are the same.

Sections 7 of the two proposals are different. The authority granted under the Senate bill to the Board to acquire, within transmission distance from any dam where power is generated, any existing distribution facilities and incidental works, including generating plants and interconnecting transmission lines, and to dispose of them to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations, is of doubtful constitutionality.

On the other hand, section 7 in the House bill directs the Board to aid, wherever possible, States, counties, and municipalities in the purchase of power and the acquisition of the facilities for its distribution.

Sections 8 of the contemplated acts differ somewhat in that the Board, under the House bill, is directed to keep accounts not only of data relating to electrical energy but to the production of chemicals necessary to national defense and useful in agriculture.

This provision of the House bill is considerably broader than the Senate proposal. The same section in the Senate bill provides that a complete account of the total cost of generating, transmission, and distribution facts shall be kept according to the uniform system of accounting for public utilities accepted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Upon investigation by the House committee, it was found there was no system of public utilities accounting accepted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and the Military Affairs Committee substituted a provision to the effect that a complete account of the total cost should be kept, according to such uniform system of accounting for public utilities as the Federal Power Commission has and if it had none, then it is empowered and directed to prescribe such uniform system of accounting.

It is to be hoped that under this provision and the one contained in the latter part of the House bill, subjecting T. V. A. to the check of the General Accounting Office will result in making the Tennessee Valley Authority a real yardstick for the measurement of the cost of the production of electric power and remove and eliminate the criticism which one reads in such leading journals as the Chattanooga Daily Times and other papers over the country, that the T. V. A. yardstick is but a rubber yardstick.

The House bill section also contains a provision that after July 1, 1937, the Authority shall not sell surplus power or chemicals produced by it annually below the cost of the aggregate production for each year. In other words, this gives the Board 2 years in which to assemble its plant, put it on an operating basis, and then it will be required to sell all of its power and chemicals produced in any one year at not less than the total cost of production in any one year.

Sections 9 of the two bills differ considerably. The Senate bill authorizes an issue of $100,000,000 in bonds, which is an increase of $50,000,000 over the provision of original section 15 of the act. This additional money was to have been used under the provisions of section 7, which contained the amendment to section 12 (a) of the original act.

You will remember that under the Senate draft, the Authority is given power to acquire existing distribution facilities, interconnecting transmission lines, and so forth. House section 7, which in this speaker's judgment follows constitutional lines, witholds any grant of power for this purpose, thus eliminating the necessity of the authorization of additional bonds.

The House section also limits the rate of interest to be paid upon such bonds to 3 percent annually, while the Senate provision permits payment of interest up to 3½ percent.

Sections 10 of the two bills are nearly identical, slight changes in phraseology constituting the only differences.

Section 11 of the Senate bill is deleted from the House bill. Its constitutionality is seriously in doubt and the provisions of section 2 of the House bill, authorizing construction of dams, enumerated in the report of the Army Board of Engineers, is ample for all public necessity.

Section 11 of the House bill and section 12 of the Senate bill are not the same. The language of both sections is practically identical to the end of the Senate section. The House draft then adds a provision to the effect that no real estate shall be acquired or held by the Authority except what is actually necessary to carry out plans and projects decided upon requiring the use of such land.

The Authority is then given power to dispose of such land, after advertisement, at public auction, to the highest bidder. There is no reason why the Authority should go into the real-estate business, and if land is no longer needed or necessary to its purposes it should be disposed of. Private owners will pay taxes thereon. T. V. A. does not.

Section 12 of the House draft is identical with section 13 of the Senate bill.

Section 13 of the House bill is new matter and needs little argument. The Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority is a creature of government. Its funds come from the people of the United States. It has already received and expended millions of dollars. It has not been held accountable to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, which is the section relating to purchasing by Government authority from the lowest responsible bidder.

This section provides that after July 1, 1936, section 3709 shall be applicable to purchases of the Authority; that accounts of all transactions involving receipts or disbursements shall be reported to the General Accounting Office at such times and in such substance and form as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States. In other words, this section places disbursements by the Corporation under the wing of the Comptroller General of the United States.

Section 14 of the House draft is new. It is not included in the Senate bill. Briefly, this section provides that the Board shall build no duplicating transmission line, and if it deems the acquisition of such line necessary, it shall first negotiate for the use or purchase of such duplicate, parallel line, and in the event of failure to agree upon a satisfactory price, it shall acquire it through condemnation.

Senate section 14 gives the Authority the same jurisdiction and power over the Cumberland River and Cumberland River Basin as it now has over the Tennessee River and the Tennessee River Basin. In the opinion of the House committee, it would be unwise to extend T. V. A.'s authority until we are confronted with what measure of success attends its present undertaking.

House section 15 is merely a saving clause, providing that should any one or more of the sections of the act or parts thereof be held unconstitutional, such holding shall not affect the validity of other parts or sections of the act.

So much for the variances and differences which exist in the Senate and House bills. It is the sincere, profound, and thoughtful judgment of the majority of the House Military Affairs Committee that the House draft in nowise hamstrings the Tennessee Valley Authority, nor was the committee motivated by any such desire when this bill was drafted. As I said in the beginning, it is the result of the taking of much testimony, careful consideration of judicial opinions, and the desire to continue T. V. A. as a public agency under the limitations imposed by the Constitution of the United States.

We are writing permanent legislation. The development of the Tennessee Valley is a work of lasting nature. It was not designed for the emergency to put people to work. When we legislate for it we plan for the future.

Needless to say, the residents of that portion of the country—some 2,000,000 in number—are bound to realize much good during the prosecution of this great work and thereafter. Numbers of them have had the advantages of employment not given to less-favored sections of the country, and in addition the entire population should in years to come enjoy the use of the surplus electric energy generated at a very low cost. This should be a fair cost.

There is no reason why all the remainder of the people of the United States and the bulk of its taxpayers should subsidize what has been termed a "socialistic experiment" so that 2,000,000 people may have cheap power delivered to them largely at the expense of the rest of our population.

We come to certain unescapable conclusions in this matter. When we read the testimony of the idealists who constitute the board of T. V. A.; when we review their public utterances, we realize they vision the development of a vast power Utopia in the Tennessee Valley. National defense was a minor detail with them. Until they became involved in litigation they gave no thought of cooperating with the War Department in its plans for the use of industry in a possible emergency.

Here is what Mr. Lilienthal, one of the directors, said in an address at Chattanooga, April 21, 1934:

> Although we are bending every effort to greatly increase the use of electricity in the home and on the farm, it is obvious that only a large scale industrial expansion will absorb the great pool of power which is thus being created. As we lay our plans for developing this cheap power in great quantities, it seems to me to be mandatory that we also lay plans for utilizing it in an industrial expansion program.

As late as October 31, 1934, Mr. Lilienthal stated at Birmingham, Ala.:

> But industries don't set themselves up in a region automatically. There must be some organizing force, with technical and research facilities. We believe it is appropriate that some of this technical and research work should be undertaken by T. V. A. as an agency of all the people.

By letter, dated May 26, 1934, Mr. Lilienthal wrote Mr. W. C. Keeley, vice president National Carbide Corporation, making a specific offer to supply his company with firm power for a period of 10 years beginning January 1, 1935.

If there is to be created this huge supply of electric energy just how is it to be disposed of? The population in the area, the domestic customers available, can utilize but a small portion of the total to be generated if we let these gentlemen proceed under a blanket authorization with no responsibility to Congress or the people. First thing we know the manufacturers and business men of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and other States are going to be told of the cheap power, the tremendous advantages which will accrue to them if they will move their plants and manufacturing facilities to the Tennessee Valley or at least establish branch operations there.

Then what will we do in industrial centers of the North, with our laboring population endeavoring to hold their homes with present unemployment further increased by the migration of industry to the utopian Tennessee Valley. And remember, they must have an outlet for this power; if they are not able to increase industrial activity sufficiently in the area, the next step will be the construction of distribution lines to large centers, such as Louisville, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, and others where T. V. A. power will come into competition with privately produced energy.

What I have said is not visionary; it is just what we may logically expect. I could go on and talk at length of some of the extra activities which this Tennessee Valley Authority has found time to engage in and invest the public's money in, but I shall leave that to others.

The expenditures by the Federal Government for T. V. A. are mounting into the hundreds of millions of dollars. Let us place this venture on a fair and proper business basis, as this House bill seeks to do. Let this agency conform to the law requiring the letting of contracts to the lowest bidder; let it make an accounting annually according to the rules, regulations, and forms prescribed by another governmental agency, the Federal Power Commission; let it be held under the accountability of the office of the Comptroller General of the United States; and let it be an aid and a helpmate to private business and enterprise rather than an agency of destruction to private initiative.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS].

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I think if there is anything to honest and conscientious work on the part of a committee in drafting legislation to bring before this House, there has been an honest attempt on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs to draft a bill that will do justice not only to the Board in control of the Tennessee Valley Authority but also to do justice to the people of the United States. In addition to the great volume of evidence that has been taken before our committee in former years, in addition to the knowledge that the distinguished chairman of this committee and other members of the committee have had at hand, we have this year twice held extensive hearings upon this matter. All of the members of the Board were present at those hearings. The statement has been made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] that this Board had freely furnished the Congress with information. I wish to state that this Board has not freely furnished Congress with information, but that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs dragged from the Board all the information that they received, and it was given most reluctantly. There is no reason in the world why they should not have complied with the provisions of the original act to report to the Congress of the United States in full regarding their activities, but they have not done so. They are an agency set up by the Congress of the United States in order to administer the affairs of the Tennessee Valley Authority 2 years ago, but so far they have failed to fulfill the requirements of that act by reporting to the Congress. With that and other ideas in view, the Committee on Military Affairs, after a great deal of labor and after a great deal of dissension among the members of the committee, finally came to the position which all legislation must finally reach, a compromise upon this subject. I repeat, that in reaching this compromise I feel that we have brought out a piece of legislation which is just to the Tennessee Valley Authority Board and just to the people of the United States.

Two years ago, as those of you who were at that time Members of the House will remember, the Committee on Military Affairs, after months of hearings, reported out legislation and it was passed on the floor of this House. At that time I was very enthusiastic about the T. V. A. I still believe it is a wonderful project for what it was set up to accomplish; but, sad to say, 2 years ago that legislation met the fate of a great deal of other legislation. It went to the Senate, and in conference we had the present T. V. A. bill crammed down our throats. At that time I did not realize the seriousness of this occurrence, but in listening to the testimony before the committee and in studying the activities of this Commission and noting the effect upon the country as a whole I am quite well satisfied how serious it was 2 years ago, when the House of Representatives allowed the Senate bill to be rammed down our throats in conference.

There is no reason in the world why the Tennessee Valley Authority should ask to be free from the control of the Comptroller General of the United States. Why should it, any more than any other department in connection with this Government, ask for special privileges that not another bureau enjoys? Why should it be granted the right to buy and dispose of real estate when not another bureau enjoys that right? If the War Department wishes to dispose of a parcel of land the size of a blanket, it must come before the Congress of the United States and receive permission to do so. So it should be with every bureau which the Congress of the United States sets up to be the servant of the people. That is all this or any other bureau is. Why should any bureau be set up in the United States to socialize industry? Why should they be allowed to send their agents into various industrial sections of the United States, into my section and into your section and the other man's section, to induce industry to move into another section of the United States?

We all grant that might be very favorable to the section into which this industry moves, but it is bound to be very detrimental to the section from which the industry is taken. It is only robbing Peter to pay Paul, at the very best. There can be no sound business sense in connection with a policy that carries on in that manner.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is my friend thoroughly convinced that the Tennessee Valley Authority, despite denials, has been soliciting industry in my State and in his State to move down into the Tennessee Valley?

Mr. FADDIS. I think there is not a particle of doubt in the matter, although I am free to say we cannot fasten upon the Board the fact that they are actually doing so; but certainly the situation is one that makes it very easy to do, and certainly we know that some influence is soliciting industry to move into that section.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Even if it has not been done, that would be the inevitable tendency in developing potential production beyond the present capacity of industry to absorb?

Mr. FADDIS. Absolutely. There could be absolutely no other result except that.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman recognizes that it was developed in evidence before our committee that direct communications and solicitation had been made by the Tennessee Valley Authority to the Union Power Co. to move their plant from West Virginia down into the Tennessee Valley?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; I believe that is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On page 24 of the hearings, Mr. Lilienthal makes this statement:

> In the first place, the law under which we operate puts upon us a duty to market this power; not only to generate it but to dispose of it. This waste is not to continue.

If the Government furnishes the money with which to build the dam and with which to install the generators and the water creates the power, how does this bill provide that the power shall be disposed of?

Mr. FADDIS. The House bill, as we have written it, does not allow them to go out and force competing companies out of business. It provides that when they desire to acquire property they must do so through condemnation proceedings. Have I answered the gentleman's question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. The information I want is what provision is there in the House bill, which we are now considering, for the disposition of this electricity after it is produced.

Mr. FADDIS. None, as I understand the bill. We cannot reach out and provide a potential market ahead for that power any more than we can for any other commodity.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, does this bill contemplate that Congress shall provide the funds with which the Authority can produce electricity and then leave the production of the electricity hanging there in the air? Does it propose that the Authority shall dispose of this electricity at the bus bar, for instance, at wholesale, to private interests which extend their lines into the bus bar, or does this bill propose that the Authority shall acquire transmission lines from the bus bar to the different communities throughout the different States as far as they may reach? In other words, just what does this bill propose shall be done with the electricity to be produced insofar as the T. V. A. is concerned?

Mr. FADDIS. This bill does not provide against the sale of the electricity when it is produced.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does it provide for a wholesaling of the electricity at the bus bar?

Mr. FADDIS. No; not specifically; not according to my understanding of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does it provide for a retailing of the electricity on transmission lines by the T. V. A.?

Mr. FADDIS. Not specifically. Under the bill they are allowed to dispose of their products. That is left to the jurisdiction of the Board.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under what conditions; under such provisions as the Board may set up?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, the bill is based upon the fiction that there is to be no electricity manufactured except as it develops as a surplus; and, this being true, the bill does not go into the detail of the disposition as inquired about by my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. FADDIS. No; that is an impossibility; that is far in advance. This bill merely provides that the Board may go ahead and complete the development which has already been started.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that consists of the building of certain dams, the installation of certain generating machinery, and the experimental production of fertilizers.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; the experimental production of fertilizer and the control of obnoxious weeds; it also provides a 9-foot channel to Knoxville.

Mr. CRAWFORD. From the mouth of the Ohio River to Knoxville?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But it does not in any way go into detail as to the marketing of the electricity which is to be generated.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Was not the main purpose originally that of national defense with the disposition of surplus electrical power a secondary matter?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; exactly.

Mr. SHORT. The Authority, however, has paid very little attention to the feature of national defense, but has made the fundamental purpose one of development of electrical energy.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes. I was going to touch on that in a minute. That was one of the reasons I was fundamentally interested in the original bill, and I still believe that it is entirely justified in that respect; but the Board has neglected the original purpose of national defense and has developed it along lines to suit these new theoretical fancies. They want to run wild on the buying of cows for $372 apiece, and fine bulls for $900 apiece, and paying other fancy prices for flocks of fine chickens. They let men drive "U Drive It Yourself" cars when they could travel cheaper by train. There are instances where men have taken "drive yourself" cars at a cost of $45 when the trip could have been made by train at a cost of about $16. They are forgetting the original purpose of the act. They even wanted to get away from the yardstick idea.

This bill as written by the committee is an attempt to put the reins on this fanciful, theoretical Board and bring it back into the channels laid out for them 2 years ago. [Applause.] I ask the members of this committee to suport the House bill as written.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], a member of the committee, 10 minutes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise, and on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. RANKIN and Mr. MAY.

The question was taken, and the Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 6, noes 67.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact there were 30 or 40 Members on the other side of the aisle who did not vote, and that there is a quorum present.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is dilatory.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky 20 minutes in addition to the 10 minutes already yielded him.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that those of you who have to remain to be punished by me for 30 minutes will not hold me responsible. When I came to Congress 5 years ago, and for many years theretofore, the chief subject and chief topic of discussion in and out of Congress was the subject of national defense as related to a project called "Muscle Shoals." For many years the question at issue in the Tennessee Valley was the question of whether the Government of the United States should provide for the common defense and general welfare of the country by the creation and operation of a war plant known as "Muscle Shoals."

Mr. Chairman, since I have been in Congress and since the enactment of the original T. V. A. Act, the subject has changed entirely. It is no longer a question of Muscle Shoals. The question before the country today is the question of a national power policy. The issue has been diverted, I should say, from the proper, legitimate, constitutional functions of the Federal Government, that of national defense, flood control, and navigation, to that of engaging, or having the Government of the United States engage, in a proprietary business within the domain of a sovereign State.

During the 5 years which I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, I have deemed it an honor and a privilege to serve under the leadership of the distinguished statesman and scholar from South Carolina, the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee. [Applause.] During all of the hearings held by that committee on every bill for all of these years he has been uniformly just, fair, and liberal to every member of the committee. He has treated me with courtesy at all times; and in the heat of argument with respect to the power policy of the present administration, he has never at any time undertaken to limit the right of a single member of that committee. He has brought to this House the committee's bill, and he has brought here a bill which I am going to support as a member of the committee, if it is not amended, although I am against the idea of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this measure not because I am willing to see the practices and principles, as they call it, of the Tennessee Valley Authority inculcated and promulgated into the hearts and minds of the people of this country but because I know that it is the first good attempt on the part of a committee of Congress to draw the lines on a bunch of bureaucrats that have gone mad and run wild with the people's money. I am supporting it solely and only upon that ground and the ground that it possibly cures the unconstitutionality of the original act. I am going to undertake, in the few minutes I have at my disposal, to show the Members of the House who are willing to stay here and listen to me that if the amendments that are proposed to be attached to this bill are adopted, the bill immediately becomes an unconstitutional measure and will not be entitled to the support of a single man or woman upon the floor of this House who still regards their oath of office.

That is the first step that they took; and what is the purpose in the hearts and minds of the directors of the Tennessee Valley so far as this bill is concerned? They came to the committee and said to us in substance in plain, unbroken, unmistakable, and unquestioned English that the judges of the courts of this country had stayed their hands in engaging in a commercial enterprise in connection with the sale, distribution, and marketing of electricity throughout the South, either by retail or otherwise, and that they did not propose to have that right restricted or taken away from them. David Lilienthal, the chief counsel of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the electrical engineer in charge of the electrical branch of the Corporation told the House Military Affairs Committee in open session and in a spirit of defiance that "we want this legislation to make clear our rights in order that we may circumvent the opinion of Judge Grubbs, a judge of the United States District Court in Alabama." I say if Judge Grubbs had held, as he did, that the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority in engaging in the power business and proposing to crush and stamp out of existence every industry that impeded its way were ultra viries acts and beyond the authority of the Tennessee Valley Authority, we as Members of Congress ought to have the courage of conviction and ought to have enough respect for our oaths of office to defer this legislation until the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court of the United States determines what their rights are. But the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority are not willing to await the sanction of the court. They say, "We will go on anyhow, and we ask the Congress of the United States to override the decision of the court and give us the necessary authority." That is where we started.

Mr. Chairman, I am not only opposed to the Tennessee Valley Authority as an institution upon its conduct and acts in the past but I am fearfully alarmed for the future of the Federal Government of the United States, and particularly the States, and I am dreadfully alarmed for the safety of democracy in this great Republic of ours. I fear that we have already gone farther than we can ever hope to come back from so far as legislation in this country is concerned.

We are verging closely onto a dangerous and deadly state socialism and ultimate Government ownership of all public utilities.

Why am I fundamentally opposed to the activities of the Tennessee Valley Authority? I say that everything it has done and everything it proposes to do is the most vicious sort of paternalism, that it is contrary to the fundamental principles of liberty, and it is a throttling and divesting of the States of their sovereign rights by the Federal Government.

What have they done? What are the evidences that the Tennessee Valley Authority is overriding the powers of the States? They have had thrust through the Legislature of Tennessee, the law-making body of the people of that sovereign State, an act of the general assembly surrendering the rights of the State public utilities commission to control and regulate utilities and turning it over to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The State has the right to grant to a certain utility within its jurisdiction a franchise for 20 years. They have granted to power companies in every municipality, in every town, and in every county seat of Alabama and Tennessee this right, yet the Tennessee Valley Authority says that "We and not the public service commission of the State will regulate your rates. We will say how you shall operate. We will say what you shall charge." If the States, counties, and municipalities do not submit, what do they do? Then they apply to the Public Works Administration in Washington for funds. To do what? To enable each municipality to go out and construct a plant and put it in competition with the private plants. Then the Tennessee Valley Authority comes to Congress, after some 300 or 400 municipalities have taken the taxpayers' money to build like plants for themselves in the various communities, and says, "We want you to authorize us to spend $100,000,000 more to construct transmission lines in order to bring the electricity into these towns", thereby destroying the business of the people who have put money into these private plants and who own the certificates of stock of the private concerns doing an electrical business.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this unjust principle of taking the people's money to destroy private business and put it out of business. That is what the Federal Government proposes to do by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Another thing, did you know that when Russia decided it was going to commandeer and supervise all business that

Russia got a Stalin as a czar and a dictator? Did you know that when Germany decided she would take over industry and control the activities of the people within the states, she got a dictator, and when Italy decided she would restrict and control industry she got a Mussolini, and it has led to dictatorship in all of the countries where it has been resorted to, and this thing is the first vicious, open, notorious effort upon the part of the Government of the United States to establish a powerful bureau and finance it with taxpayers' money to destroy the businesses of the people within the States? [Applause.]

Oh, it leads to dictatorship. It leads to the mailed fist instead of the great doctrine of democracy that declares that all men are born free and equal and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among which is the right of life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. It is contrary to the teachings of Thomas Jefferson and it would be infamous in the sight of Andrew Jackson if he were living today, and I am wondering how it is that Tennessee statesmen, if you please, can sit in Congress and tolerate the tearing down of the great doctrine of State rights for which their fathers and their forefathers fought.

Oh, this is no little institution. It has terrorized Members of Congress. It has boasted of their defeat on the issue of the T. V. A. in several States, and it has not only done this, but, at an expense of $40,000 of the taxpayers' money, last week they had the Governors of three States toadying after them like a lot of pug dogs following a bulldog to the circus. [Laughter.] Oh, yes; the Governors of States surrendering, if you please, the doctrine of local self-government to Federal bureaus.

I wonder if I have any authority for this position. I wonder if I can give you some authority that will count for anything in the House of Representatives. I am standing by the President again, as I have in the past, and I wonder what he said about States rights and the doctrine of local self-government in a great radio address over a coast-to-coast network on March 2, 1930:

> It was clear to the framers of our Constitution that the greatest possible liberty of self-government must be given to each State. That is what we call the doctrine of home rule, and the whole spirit of the Constitution is to carry this great principle into the relations between the National Government and the government of the States.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. I wanted to make a point of order against the gentleman reading, and I should like to know if the gentleman wants to go along with the President on States rights, if he is willing to go with the President on the T. V. A. bill which is now before us.

Mr. MAY. I am going with the President on the fundamental principles and letting the details take care of themselves.

There is another thing I am here to oppose. I am objecting to a lot of Communists and wild sons of wild jackasses, if you please, capturing the Democratic Party and carrying it into captivity and then demanding the surrender of the great principles taught by Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson as a ransom to get it back.

I wonder if the President can stand with me today again as he stood in 1930 when he said this:

> The conduct of public utilities, of banks, of insurance, of business, of agriculture, of education, of social welfare, and a dozen other important features—in these Washington must not be encouraged to interfere.

This is from the same radio address. But what else? Why, the President of the United States is the greatest believer in State rights and constitutional government there is in Washington today, and I am standing with him on that doctrine.

> The United States Constitution has proved itself the most marvelously elastic compilation of rules of government ever written. The preservation of this home rule by the States is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country.

I wonder if there are any other dangers or breakers in this institution. Why, we have undertaken to say to them that when you establish a yardstick you must establish an honest yardstick, you must establish a fair yardstick, you must establish a yardstick that is 36 inches long and not 24 inches, you must establish a yardstick that will stick itself, and how do they propose to do it? They take a $46,000,000 power plant and write it down to $19,000,000. They take a steam plant that is worth $12,000,000 and write it down to $1,500,000.

These write-downs are made by a Government bureau while they are jumping on the private utilities for write-ups. They are writing down in order to establish an honest yardstick and they say that we will figure our electric power based on these investments and not on the actual investments.

Now, what would have been the other side of the picture—and I want some of my colleagues who are going to propose amendments allowing them to do these things to answer this question: If the Alabama Power Co., if you please, had gone around the country and sold 7-percent or 6-percent or 5-percent stock and gathered out of the pockets of 300,000 investors $46,000,000 and put it in the Wilson Dam, could they have written it down and refused to pay the interest on it? No.

But the Tennessee Valley Authority says, "Write it down and not put it at $46,000,000, which it cost."

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman does not insist that the Government has not the same right as private utility companies to write under cost in order to try to get by?

Mr. MAY. No; I am in favor of putting the Government of the United States on a level; I should like to put it on the square. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. Is it the gentleman's position that all the cost of navigation and flood control should be carried into the original cost in making the yardstick, or should there be a reasonable deduction for those things?

Mr. MAY. I think there ought to be a separation in the proper proportion. I think this is not a fair proportion between electricity and navigation and flood control.

I take the position that the Federal Government has no power or authority under the Constitution to go any further than to produce with the Wilson Dam enough power to operate the locks necessary to control the floods and assist navigation. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. I think that is the gist of this matter, and I am sure the Membership of the House would be delighted to have the gentleman discuss that particular phase of the question.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. The fact is, when a public utility built a dam on private streams, like the Keokuk Dam, it was not permitted to make deductions for navigation and flood control.

Mr. MAY. Not at all; the whole thing, investing $25,000,000 in putting in the dam that contains locks to control floods and regulate the passage of vessels they have to charge it all to electricity, but here is another phase where the yardstick gives 20 inches instead of 36.

Now, I want to further answer my friend from Illinois. I am going to answer him in the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Ohio against Helvering. In discussing the right of the Federal Government to engage in proprietary or commercial business, the Supreme Court of the United States said:

> The police power is and remains a governmental power, and applied to business activities is the power to regulate those activities, not to carry them on.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is interesting, but what I want is a discussion by the gentleman with facts and figures to the effect that the cost of manufacture of fertilizer and the cost of navigation and the cost of flood control should not be separated from the cost of power in order to make a fair yardstick.

Mr. MAY. They should not be deducted from the amount of invested capital upon which they are required to earn a return in determining what is a fair rate between a private utility that cannot deduct them and the T. V. A., which undertakes to do so.

Mr. ARNOLD. Do I understand it is the gentleman's position that in making this a basis for determining the cost of manufactured current the Government should take into consideration and include all the expense that is there for navigation, for flood control, and for the manufacture of fertilizers in addition to that feature particularly applying to power?

Mr. MAY. Yes, I do; and, in the first place, I say this to the gentleman, that they testified before our committee and took a flat-footed stand that they were not selling any fertilizers or going to sell any; that they did not contemplate it; and, on the other hand, their chemical engineer said that the plant was now entirely obsolete and worthless for that purpose, and the whole problem is this: They have determined to go into the business of producing, manufacturing, distributing, and selling electricity to the disregard of national defense and flood control or navigation.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Oh, I cannot yield further; my time is limited and I want to discuss another matter.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. MAY. I have just declined to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Just for a short question.

Mr. MAY. Very well.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Is it not a fact that Mr. Lilienthal stated that the T. V. A. is spending more money in developing electrical energy than on all the rest of the projects put together?

Mr. MAY. That is true; but not only that, but it is being done in a territory where the evidence shows that there is already a surplus of 38 percent more than the present needs of the entire valley.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And is it not a fact that the Army engineers stated that so far as flood control is concerned it would not reduce the floods in the Mississippi more than one one-thousandth of an inch?

Mr. MAY. That is the testimony of the Army engineers; but Dr. Morgan stated about 2 feet, I think, or 1 foot.

On this constitutional question of the right of the Federal Government through the T. V. A. to engage in proprietary business within a State I want to read what the Supreme Court of the United States said in the case of South Carolina against United States.

> Certain it is that if the responsibility of a government usurping the ordinary business of individuals, driving them out of the market, and maintaining place and power by means of what would have been called, in the heated invective of the times, "a legion of mercenaries" had been in the public mind, the Constitution would not have been adopted, or an inhibition of such power would have been placed among Madison's amendments.

That is conclusive of the fact that the Tennessee Valley Authority has no constitutional authority to go down into Tennessee and Alabama and engage in the business of distributing electricity as a constitutional right, and the Congress has no power to grant them that right.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Not now. As to amendments that will be proposed, we have restricted them to selling power, and that the surplus only, and to sell it after a certain date at not less than cost, and the amendment that will be proposed will be to let the reins loose and allow them to go out and acquire local distributing systems, transmission lines, in their own way, to resort to the power and authority and control by going to them and saying, "If you do not yield to us and sell, we will get public-works funds and put you out of business", as it did to eight different municipalities in northern Mississippi. They yielded under the pressure of destruction of their own property, and the Tennessee Valley Authority is asking this Congress to take away from the private owner of a private utility the right and authority to have a jury impaneled to pass on the value of his plant and equipment, but to leave it to the Board of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In other words, in violation of the Constitution that guarantees due process of law, they say, we will set up an institution where the purchaser shall fix the price. Why, Mr. Chairman, market price has been defined by the courts time and again to be "a price at which the seller who wants to dispose of his property but is not obliged to do so will take, when offered by one who desires to purchase but who is not obliged to do so." In the face of that wholesome rule, in the face of that fundamental principle of law, the Tennessee Valley directors have gone down into northern Mississippi and they have coerced the Alabama Power Co. into turning over to them under a contract made last January, a year ago, eight different distributing systems that cost the power company $2,700,000, and they are taking it over at $680,000.

I wonder if this has any significance to this House, and for fear some of my friends on this Committee may question the accuracy of my statement, I call attention to what Mr. Morgan said before the House Committee on Appropriations, when he was asked by one of the members of that committee if they had not in fact through coercion of those people secured the sale of the franchises by duress, and he said they had.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] has expired.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the interruptions of the gentleman from Kentucky, I yield him 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. I thank the gentleman.

The Constitution, prohibiting as it does, the Federal Government going into business within the domain of a sovereign State, would prohibit the operations of the T. V. A. to the same extent. You and I, when we were sworn as Members of this Congress, could not open our mouths to say one word until we had put up our hands and said unto God that we would do what? Protect, not circumvent; defend, not defy; preserve, and not destroy the Constitution of the United States, yet we hear it said that regardless of that oath we must accept the provisions and let the courts pass upon it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If this policy is pursued and carried to its logical conclusion, will it aid business recovery or retard it? Will it aid unemployment or add to it?

Mr. MAY. If it is possible to aid recovery by destroying the property of 280,000 stockholders and an investment of $600,000,000, and throw out of employment forever, so far as that industry is concerned, 75,000 working people, then I say to my colleague from Kentucky that it is a recovery measure; but if, upon the other hand, we can say to the people, "We are going to destroy outright a billion dollars' worth of investment in the stocks of the power companies, and we will put 400,000 employees on the Government relief rolls and take them off of private pay rolls—take out of taxation and out of the realm of revenue production $600,000,000 worth of property and deprive the Treasury of the taxes that come from it—I call it a destruction program rather than a construction program and one that will retard recovery rather than aid recovery. I have no interest in the power companies in Tennessee, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, or Georgia, but I want to see justice done; and if the United States Government can do this kind of thing there, they can do it anywhere.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. At the same time the Senate bill is asking for $100,000,000 to extend hydroelectric power. We have a bill before the Congress to spend $320,000,000 to take coal mines out of production; so that the more money we take out of the taxpayers' pockets to develop hydroelectric power the more money we will have to take out of those same pockets to retire coal mines?

Mr. MAY. Yes. But that is not all. I think there are some men here who remember that last winter a year ago we passed an act called the "National Industrial Recovery Act." Under section 7 (a) of that act we struck down unfair competitive practices in every business from the smallest to the greatest. We said that cutthroat competition must go. Yet we say we will turn loose the T. V. A. to engage in cutthroat competition with private industry, as a bureau of the Government, in violation of the very principles by which we throttled and took control of all industry in this country from one end to the other. [Applause.]

Mr. GREGORY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. GREGORY. A question was propounded by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] with reference to the Guffey coal bill. I understand the gentleman is for that bill, is he not?

Mr. MAY. I am for that bill, provided when it appears on the floor of this House it has the unconstitutional features out of it that I think are in it now.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Would the gentleman mind telling us what those features are?

Mr. MAY. One feature is that it provides a penalty of 25 percent on the sales price of your coal at the tipple as a means of coercing and forcing the coal company to submit to the provisions of the act; punitive and coercive. That was declared unconstitutional in a hundred cases, and if the gentleman wants to know them I can give them to him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Kentucky 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. May I go a little further in answering the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GREGORY]? I want to say to my colleague from Kentucky and to the amiable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD] that the difference between the Tennessee Valley Authority bill and the Guffey coal bill is that the T. V. A. has as its object and purpose the destruction of investment; and the Guffey coal bill has as its objective and purpose the preservation of a great industry that employs 600,000 men in this country. One destructive and the other constructive. I want my party to belong to the construction crew and not the wrecking gang.

Mr. ARNOLD. May I suggest to the gentleman that I was simply thinking of those two bills from a constitutional aspect?

Mr. MAY. I hope the gentleman continues to think about it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Can the gentleman tell us what effect this T. V. A. measure will have on the coal industry?

Mr. MAY. My colleague from Kentucky desires to know what effect this bill will have upon the coal industry. I will take as my witness Dr. A. E. Morgan, and I will tell you that although they built 350 plastered and electrified houses at a cost of $10,000 and more each to establish a housing plant at Norris Dam, when they get through with it, with from $36,000,000 to $40,000,000 invested, it will employ 20 men on the dam. The same amount of money invested in coal plants would employ 30,000 men and would feed 30,000 families. Besides, Dr. Morgan says the coal industry is doomed and must go.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Speaking of the Guffey coal bill, I want to inquire if the gentleman favors that portion of the bill which provides for the spending of some $300,000,000 to buy submarginal coal land?

Mr. MAY. I am opposed to that feature of the bill for the reason that it is going to open up some more T. V. A. activities and the sale of a lot of cheap mines to the Federal Government for good money out of the Treasury. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I have seen and heard a good many strange things on the floor of this House during the 5 years I have been a Member, but I have never yet heard so many mean things said about a bill and then hear the gentleman who said them say he was going to vote for the bill. He has openly and vigorously opposed this legislation both in and out of the committee. I admire his frankness. He has done it on the floor and in letters and newspapers. Not only that, but may I say that if this bill now before the Committee is so vicious and so unconstitutional as the gentleman claims it to be, then I submit in all fairness that the original bill which passed 2 years ago was much more unconstitutional. If you refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that session, page 2341, you will find that my friend from Kentucky, for whom I feel the deepest and most sincere attachment, voted for the bill. Then if you will go a little further in the same session of Congress, you will find that when the conference report came back to the floor of the House on the 17th day of May 1933, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] again voted "aye." This is not said in a spirit of criticism but only stating a fact. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct the gentleman's statement inasmuch as it is utterly incorrect. I did not say unqualifiedly that I was going to vote for this bill. I said that if this bill was not amended, I was going to vote for it because I did not think it contained unconstitutional features.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman is going to vote for the bill as brought in here by the committee.

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON. That is more than the gentleman did in the committee.

Mr. MAY. Yes; I voted against it in the committee.

Mr. THOMASON. In other words, the gentleman's position has changed again.

Mr. MAY. No. I voted against it in the committee, and I am against what the Tennessee Valley Authority asks here.

Mr. THOMASON. I think, my friends, we might just as well let the lines be drawn early. I noticed the gentleman received loud and even prolonged applause by our good friends on the Republican side, for whom I have a great admiration on account of their frankness; but let me remind you that in 1917, when the World War was on and there was a great man down in the White House, the question of national defense came up, and it seemed to be the rather unanimous policy of the Members of this House at that time, if you will read the RECORD, that there had to be something done in the way of building a plant for the manufacture of munitions. That was the instigation and inception of the Muscle Shoals project. In the very limited time the chairman has assigned me I cannot go through the entire history of this development. Suffice it to say that after the armistice came and that great investment was left idle at Muscle Shoals, agitation began as to whether there should be tacked onto it the question of flood control, the prevention of soil erosion, the production of fertilizer, and such things that very well could be conducted in times of peace. And so on down through 17 or 18 intervening years we have continued to fight over this issue. Along came Mr. Coolidge and gave it a pocket veto; along came Mr. Hoover and gave it a direct veto. It remained for the man who now sits a mile down Pennsylvania Avenue in the White House, together with a friendly Congress 2 years ago, to say that the Tennessee Valley should be developed for the American people as it ought to be. [Applause.]

One of the very first sentences the gentleman from Kentucky uttered—and I have for him a sincere esteem and affectionate friendship, because we came here together and we sit next to each other on the committee—was the statement in substance that we might just as well determine what the national power policy is going to be. For my part I am ready to meet that issue. The rivers and the water-power sites of this country belong to the people and not to the power interests [applause], and I will say further that, in my judgment, since he wants the lines formed and the issues drawn, he may rest assured one of the great issues of the campaign next year will be this question. Way out in the front line leading the forces, and if necessary ready to die in the front-line trenches on behalf of the people as opposed to selfish interests, will be a man by the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.] As for me, I am going down the line with him. Not only that, but I believe this Congress will back him in that position. If they will not, I think the people will see to it that there will be a Congress that will. When argument and reason fail, the cry always goes up that it is unconstitutional. Do not forget there is a welfare clause in that sacred document. Also, do not forget there was no electricity until 50 or more years after the Constitution was written.

Talk about destroying private property, there has been no effort of that kind. As I say, I have no time in which to recount the history of this project, but it is not so material anyway. That is a matter of record. Suffice it to say that 2 years ago Congress by an overwhelming majority settled the policy to be followed, and I do not believe we will now reverse that action. The T. V. A. had not even organized; they had not got started until the attack began. The President in his effort to get competent men who knew something about the subject, went over into Ohio and picked a great engineer and educator by the name of Dr. Arthur E. Morgan as chairman of the Board.

He had built more than 50 water-power plants with never the breath of suspicion against his name or a question about his ability and integrity. Another man selected was another Morgan from down in Tennessee, who had been president of the University of Tennessee for years, fighting all the time the battles of the down-trodden farmers of that soil-eroded country. Another one was a young chap from up in Wisconsin by the name of Lilienthal, who had made a success as a public-utility commissioner. When the T. V. A. was organized, I understand the President did not ask their politics or religion. He wanted to know if they were capable of doing the job. They had scarcely begun until war was opened upon them, and it has continued ever since. They have been criticized and cross-examined as if they were under indictment.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Members on both sides of the aisle, if they want to be fair about this matter, read the hearings that were held on this bill before our committee or read the hearings held by the Appropriations Committee on the deficiency bill. You will not find a breath of suspicion against any of these men. I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, they are doing a big job in a big way. Maybe I am a little partisan; maybe I am a little prejudiced on this question; but it is my honest, sincere conviction that no government in the history of the world has ever undertaken such a constructive program as this one. [Applause.]

Not only that, but it is just the beginning. I call to this battle, since my friend from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] has issued the challenge, all of my friends from the Northwest, up in the Grand Coulee country, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and his colleagues with their "Quoddy" project, and all of those Members from the western country with reclamation projects who have been endeavoring to secure for their people cheap power and cheap electricity. I summon you to the conflict. In my humble opinion the greatest possible development in America today is putting cheap electricity into every home in this Nation. [Applause.] Next to water it is the greatest necessity of modern everyday life.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. At whose expense would the gentleman put that in?

Mr. THOMASON. I would put it in at the expense of a fair, just rate, no matter who pays the bill. I would put it in reach of every home. This Government is not undertaking to sell that power down there directly to consumers but is increasing the consumption to such an extent that the price has already been reduced from 40 to 50 percent.

Mr. Chairman, in this country there are but 4 percent of the rural homes that have electricity. I believe Denmark boasts of some 60 percent. Talk about your slums! I know city slums are bad and we must eradicate them, but I know of no people in this land who suffer the drudgery and hardships of the average run of country people. I do not mean the plantation owner, the rich farmer, or the man who has a fine home in the country. I am talking about the man who has a little home out in the country, or the tenant farmer, with no running water, no sewerage, and no electricity. His wife and children know nothing but a life of drudgery. They have no electric lights or churns, no electric milkers, no refrigeration, no power for their barns, no radio, no nothing in the way of modern conveniences that we enjoy. Why, Mr. Chairman, this program itself has in mind the bringing of cheap electricity to 5,000,000 country homes in America. Tell me that is not constructive? Who would tear it down now? The gentleman from Kentucky seemed to take violent umbrage at a statement that I wrote myself. I hope I do not display the feeling about this bill that the gentleman does.

Mr. MAY. Since the gentleman has mentioned my name, will he yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman says that we have not given this concern the power to sell electricity in the country. I call the gentleman's attention to the power granted under section 2.

Mr. THOMASON. The gentleman will have to ask a very brief question.

Mr. MAY (reading):

> And shall have power to acquire or construct power houses, power structures, transmission lines, navigation projects and incidental works in the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and to unite the various power installations into one or more systems by transmission lines.

Mr. THOMASON. I see what the gentleman is getting at. The bill provides for the sale of electricity to municipalities and some 27 municipalities have by an overwhelming majority voted that they want this power. The gentleman talks about destroying private property. Why, the stockholders were tickled to death with it, and still they talk about "bamfoolizing" the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who signed the statement in the report that I was for the Senate bill. In fact I wrote the statement that the House bill would retard, rather than advance, this great program. I said it in committee, and there was no deception about it. In spite of that, in a circular letter that the gentleman sent out to every Member of the House, he saw fit to close with this question, "What is retarded, except deceit, confiscation, and tyranny?" My friend has not only invited but provoked the argument.

Mr. Chairman, there are three or four important amendments which are going to be offered to this bill by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who is not only the ranking Democrat on the committee, but he has lived loyally and faithfully with the Muscle Shoals and T. V. A. projects every since their inception and ever since he came back from France and was elected to this House. I hope the members of the committee will support the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] when he offers these amendments, because I undertake to say that he and the other members of the committee will be able to convince anyone who is unprejudiced that they are just and meritorious. One of the amendments is in reference to selling power at less than cost. What new business in the history of America that is being run on a big scale did not start out probably by selling their products at less than cost of production?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentlemen advocate that here in view of the codes?

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. I was greatly interested in the statement the gentleman was making a few moments ago relative to his belief that water-power sites should be owned by the people and not by private interests. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the course of these hearings it developed that the Aluminum Co. of America has already acquired practically the entire course of one of the main tributaries of the Tennessee River?

Mr. THOMASON. Let me tell you about that.

Mr. WILCOX. That is one of the principal criticisms of this report.

Mr. THOMASON. Instead of 5 minutes, I wish I had 20 minutes to discuss this matter. This is not only a contest, Mr. Chairman, between the people and the Power Trust, it is more than that. It is also a contest between the people and the Aluminum Trust. The reason I say this is this: The Aluminum Trust, headed by Mr. Andrew Mellon, thinking they had gobbled up all the power sites on the Little Tennessee River, woke up to find there were some other brains in this country, and I have respect for brains, even if they are called "brain trusters." The Tennessee Valley Authority has gone up into the Little Tennessee River Basin and bought two little sites up there, which it is claimed they paid entirely too much for, but, nevertheless, they fixed it so that the Aluminum Trust could not absolutely control the flood waters as well as all the power on the Little Tennessee River. Was there anything so bad about that?

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. McGROARTY. Is it not a fact that the Authority is buying aluminum in preference to copper?

Mr. THOMASON. I cannot answer that.

Mr. McGROARTY. It is true.

Mr. THOMASON. I do not think that is material, but I do not know. Mr. Davis, the head of the Aluminum Trust, came before the committee. He seemed to think it was all right for his company to have a monopoly, but it was all wrong for T. V. A. to try to protect the rights of several million people.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to break the gentleman's line of thought, but if the gentleman will do so, I am very much interested, as I am sure other Members are, to hear the other three amendments that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] proposes to offer.

Mr. THOMASON. That is what I hoped I would have time to discuss; but, of course, the gentleman will appreciate that my time is very limited.

One is with respect to the matter of selling power below the cost of production, the other is on the matter of their disposing of these tracts of land which they bought in the Little Tennessee River Basin in order that the Aluminum Trust may not have a monopoly, not only on the flood waters but on the power in that basin, including every power site in the Tennessee Valley, and the other is on the matter of turning all accounting over to Comptroller General McCarl, for whom I have sincere admiration. However, do not be misled about that. When you read the hearings you will find that when the Tennessee Valley Authority was set up Dr. Morgan went to McCarl and said, "We want your office to have a check on our affairs"; and Mr. McCarl sent 10 of his expert men down there, and they checked every dollar of that money.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I must decline to yield for just a second.

Not only this, but Mr. McCarl himself later came before the committee and said there was not the slightest evidence of fraud in any transaction they had had, and yet some of my friends would want the Tennessee Valley, if they had to buy a $10 roll of wire, to come here to Washington and take it up personally with Mr. McCarl and take 3 or 4 months to do it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. MAY. If there was nothing wrong in the past about the Authority being put under the Comptroller General, and if they are spending money at the rate of $2,000,000 a month, and have already spent $101,000,000 and propose to spend two or three hundred million dollars more, why does the gentleman oppose putting them under such regulation?

Mr. THOMASON. I want them thoroughly checked and double checked, but when they are building a big dam and the flood season is near I do not want the T. V. A. directors, just to satisfy some people who want to wreck this whole program, to have to come to Washington to get Mr. McCarl to O. K. every forty or fifty dollar item that may come along.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Is it not true that a representative of the General Accounting Office, who is in the field now and on the scene of actual operation, stated that they are steadily falling behind in the work of keeping up with their audits?

Mr. THOMASON. Absolutely; and do not be misled about this talk about buying a dairy herd about which there is so much exaggerated talk. They have 15,000 people employed in this valley now, and 85 percent of them came off of relief. They started the little town of Norris, and those houses cost from $2,200 to $7,000 or $8,000. They are renting these cheaper houses to the workers and giving them decent houses with electricity and sewerage and running water for $22 a month. There are 4,000 people in this model community and they bought a little dairy herd, and like they do in my country, where we raise registered Herefords, they went out and bought registered cattle, paying the average price that any stockman pays in this country for good cattle when he wants to build up a good herd. That is just pure bunk, and that is all there is to it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the Congress has been talking about the Tennessee River ever since James Monroe was President of the United States. It was not, however, until the year 1916 that, under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson, the great dam and nitrate plants were built at Muscle Shoals on the river, the Government investing $150,000,000 in the project.

As I sat here this afternoon and heard my good friends the Republicans applaud with such glee the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] I could not but remember that during the 12 long years the Republican Party was in power in this country, in spite of our pleas, our petitions, and our entreaties, the Republicans refused to do one single thing with the great project on the Tennessee River. Those 12 years of Republican rule so far as the Tennessee River is concerned is a skeleton of disappointment, defeat, and disaster.

In 1932 there came in this country a peaceful revolution, and the people elected as their President Franklin D. Roosevelt. He went down to the Tennessee River and made a personal inspection of that great valley and the great project at Muscle Shoals.

He then went to his home at Warm Springs, Ga., and from there he issued a statement to the people, through the press, in which he outlined the great development of the Tennessee River and the Tennessee Valley, to the end that we might have there flood control, navigation, national defense, reasonable electric power, soil conservation, agricultural rehabilitation, and regional planning—that we might have there a great laboratory, not only for the benefit of the people of the valley but for the benefit of all the people of the United States. When he became President, Mr. Roosevelt sent to Congress a special message asking Congress to pass legislation to carry out the plan.

So the great plan that is now being carried out has been well called "the brain child of Franklin D. Roosevelt." But, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] so truly stated, the legislation embodying that plan had hardly been passed by Congress before a campaign was started by the selfish interests of this country to thwart and defeat the plan. Throughout the country there has been a whispering campaign undertaking to destroy the T. V. A.

Periodicals and the press under the influence and control of selfish interests, which have heretofore exploited the resources of the country for their own selfish benefit, have kept up a drumfire of criticism against the Tennessee Authority program. On all hands we hear whispers, misstatements, and all kinds of misinformation, cunningly conceived and calculated to undermine the program of the Tennessee Valley Authority. My friends, those who would strike down and defeat Franklin D. Roosevelt would strike down and defeat the Tennessee Valley program. Those who would wipe out and undermine the great plans of Franklin D. Roosevelt would wipe out and undermine the great program in the Tennessee Valley, because there is nothing in the plans of Mr. Roosevelt that is dearer to his heart, nothing that he contributed more to bring into being than the great development in the Tennessee Valley.

This afternoon on the floor we have heard much talk about Hitler and Stalin and Mussolini and dictatorship from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] because Franklin D. Roosevelt has seen fit to establish this great program in the Tennessee Valley. Mr. Roosevelt is waging a battle to conserve for the people of this country those great riches and resources which God Almighty intended should be used for all of our people and not for the benefit of a few favored ones, and history shows that whenever any man has waged the battle for the people he has been denounced and condemned.

In the days of George Washington there were those who hurled their anathemas of malignity at him and cried out that he wanted to be king, but he held fast to his course and he laid deep and strong the foundations of our Nation. When Thomas Jefferson was fighting the battles of the people there were those who denounced him as a radical and a demagogue, but he kept the faith, and he made this Government of ours in truth a democratic government. In the days of Andrew Jackson there were those who villified and sought to defame him, but he held to the ridge pole and we know his part in keeping the Government, a Government of all the people. There are those today who would denounce and villify Franklin D. Roosevelt, but let me say to you that the glory of Franklin D. Roosevelt will shine with the stars when those who seek to denounce and defame him will have gone down to "the tongueless silence of dreamless dust." [Applause.] The wonder is not that there have been some mistakes in the program of the Tennessee Valley Authority, but the wonder is that there have been so few mistakes.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has gone forward with the construction of its dams and in not one single instance has it spent one dollar or done one single thing that the Congress of the United States did not appropriate for or authorize. Why, the Tennessee Valley Authority is even criticized on this floor because it did not exercise the authority given to it in the basic act to issue $50,000,000 worth of bonds. Instead of issuing those bonds as it could have done under the basic act the Authority said, "No, we will go to Congress, we will lay our plans for these dams before the Congress and then let the Congress decide whether or not the dams should be built", and when it has built these dams, the Authority has strictly followed the law so far as the allocation of cost among navigation, flood control, national defense, and power is concerned. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] criticized the Tennessee Valley Authority because it wrote down the original cost of the Wilson Dam. If it wrote down that cost, it did so in response to the clear mandate of the Congress. The Congress wrote into the basic act that the Tennessee Valley Authority should fix the present value of the Wilson Dam. The Congress wrote that into the law because the Congress knew that the original cost of the Wilson Dam was far too great. The dam was built on a war basis.

It was built under one of those cost-plus contracts, and it was built over several years of time and there were 12 different appropriations made, with all kinds of unnecessary delays, and we paid far too much for the dam. Furthermore, in 1930, when the Congress adopted the United States Engineers' report for the Tennessee River dam-construction program the Congress then and there said that so much should be charged for navigation, so much for flood control, and so much for power; and the Congress even went so far as to say that if private power companies built dams on the Tennessee River the Government of the United States should pay to the private power companies the part of the cost of the dams which should be allocated to navigation and flood control.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In allocating these costs, has the Tennessee Valley Authority submitted any evidence which shows that the cost that shall be allocated to the cost of navigation will be set up in the capital structure, on which they will base transportation charges when the Tennessee River becomes navigable?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Sure. They have figured all of that out, and if the gentleman will take time to read the hearings before the congressional committees, he will find they have worked out that whole proposition. I do not want to be discourteous, but I cannot yield any more.

In the building of the different dams on the Tennessee River the Tennessee Valley Authority, acting under the direction of the President, has saved the taxpayers of the country millions of dollars by adopting a high-dam plan instead of the low-dam plan approved by Congress in 1930. In 50 years the saving in the cost of maintenance and operation of the dams alone would be $50,000,000, and in 100 years the saving would be $100,000,000. In the cost of construction the Tennessee Valley Authority has saved the taxpayers some $350,000 a year, or over a period of 100 years some $35,000,000 by building the high dams, and in its construction of the Norris Dam and the Pickwick Landing Dam the Tennessee Valley Authority has increased the power value of the Wilson Dam alone to the taxpayers in the amount of some $2,200,000 a year. We see the Tennessee Valley Authority has proceeded on a sound business basis, saving millions of dollars to the taxpayers of the country.

It is nothing new for the Government to build dams. We have spent $140,000,000 constructing dams to make the Ohio River navigable. We bought the Cape Cod Canal. We have put dams in rivers, and we have improved harbors everywhere. The only difference between the Tennessee Valley development and these other projects is that in the other projects we have not gotten one single dollar back to the taxpayers, and we never will get a single dollar for the taxpayers, whereas in the Tennessee River development we will get the interest on our money, and we will get back every dollar we have invested.

Gentlemen have spoken of destroying the property of the stockholders of private utilities. You will recall that the greatest boom that ever happened to life insurance in this country was when the Government established war-risk insurance. It made the people of the United States insurance-minded, and they bought and bought and bought insurance, and instead of destroying these private power companies where the Tennessee Valley Authority has come in competition with them, the Tennessee Valley Authority has so largely increased the business and the load of the private power companies as to offset any business that might have been taken away from them.

Mr. STARNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. STARNES. Is it not a fact that in connection with that industry during the past year the Tennessee Electric Co. made the greatest increase it has ever shown in its history?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Absolutely. The Tennessee Electric Power Co. is that private company with which the Tennessee Valley Authority comes more largely and more directly in competition. What happened? The Tennessee Electric Power Co. has increased its business so much, sold so much more electric power than it had been selling, that that increase has practically offset any loss of business.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Not just now. The Edison Electric Institute, just a few weeks ago, gave the so-called "Coffin medal" to the Tennessee Electric Power Co. as having the finest record of any power company in the United States.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. I hope the gentleman will be courteous enough to allow me to preface my question with a short statement. The gentleman realizes, of course, there was a million dollars appropriated by the T. V. A.——

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Oh, I cannot yield for a statement.

Mr. MAY. All right.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. That is about the Home and Farm Authority. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation loaned $1,000,000 to the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which was a corporation set up separate and distinct from the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Electric Home and Farm Authority has financed the purchase of electric equipment and appliances that must be had, such as electric refrigerators, electric irons, electric stoves, and the like, and the Electric Home and Farm Authority has rendered as much service to the private power companies, has helped them as much in their business as it has the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. MAY. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAY. Is that not the very reason the Tennessee Electric Power Co. was able to gain this prize, because it had Government money to buy the notes of the people who purchased electric equipment?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No, no. That was only a small factor. Why, the Tennessee Electric Power Co. increased its business an average of 200 kilowatt-hours per customer per year, while the average increase throughout the country was only 35 kilowatt-hours per customer per year.

I cannot yield further. I do not want to be discourteous, but my time is short.

In the town of Athens, Ala., the Tennessee Valley Authority reduced rates 45 percent. What happened? There was an increase of some 300 percent in the consumption of electricity. The gross revenues of the city of Athens derived from the sale of power after it started getting its power from the Tennessee Valley Authority were greater than they had been when the city was generating its own electricity, in spite of the 45-percent reduction in rates.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. That would not have happened had it not been for the Authority which loaned the people the money with which to buy equipment.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Oh, yes. The Electric Home and Farm Authority did help, but let me say to the gentleman, the bill that we passed extending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation carried an authorization of something like $100,000,000, as I recall, that we might have the Electric Home and Farm Authority not only down in Alabama and Tennessee, but throughout the country. If there is any one thing that I want to try to impress upon this Committee, it is that that project down in Alabama and Tennessee is not a local project. Franklin D. Roosevelt is not interested in it because it is helping the people in Alabama and Tennessee, but because it is there setting an example, and a yardstick that will be of benefit to the entire Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am going to vote for some bill and I hope the gentleman, before he gets through, if he can, will reserve a little time to discuss the four amendments he is going to offer, because my mind is open, and I am sure the minds of some of the others are open.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] discussed, as I recall, three of the amendments. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts heard him. The fourth amendment, which to my mind is a very important amendment, would strike section 14 from the bill. Section 14, as now written in the bill, provides that if the Tennessee Valley Authority needs a transmission line to distribute or dispose of any of its power, if there be a private power line it has to first go and negotiate with the private power company and try to buy that line. Then if it cannot buy that line, it has to go into court and condemn that line. In other words, the Tennessee Valley Authority cannot distribute one single kilowatt of power without first negotiating to buy a private line and then going into court and going through all the long delays and harassments of court action, which would mean that the Tennessee Valley Authority would likely be tied up in court anywhere from 3 to 10 years without being able to distribute a kilowatt of power.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman spoke of the yardstick. I simply wanted him to make perfectly clear the fact that unless the amendments proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Alabama are adopted, all talk of a yardstick is futile.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman is absolutely right. Unless these important amendments are put on this bill then this House had better throw the bill in the waste basket.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I submit with all due courtesy to my friend from Kentucky, that there is no better evidence of my statement that the bill should not pass without the amendments than the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MAY, himself has stated on this floor this afternoon that he would vote for the bill if it comes up for passage in its present form.

Mr. MAY and Mr. ARNOLD rose.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky, having mentioned his name.

Mr. MAY. I wish to correct any erroneous impression of my attitude; I want the House to get it straight.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot yield for this purpose; the gentleman can secure time to make his position clear.

Mr. MAY. I want to clear up the idea that the Electric Farm and Home Authority——

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I have spent all the time I can on that. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. We are very much interested in the amendments the gentleman expects to offer. Would not the gentleman be so kind as to put them in the RECORD today so we can make a study of them in the morning?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Yes, I shall be pleased to put in all the important amendments so they will appear in tomorrow's RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert these amendments in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman has discussed the yardstick established by the T. V. A. Is it not a fact that the record discloses that since the establishment of the T. V. A. rates in this vicinity privately owned utility companies have voluntarily reduced their rates to a point that has already saved to the people of those four States more than $7,000,000 this year?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman is absolutely right. The first thing the Tennessee Electric Power Co. did when the Tennessee Valley Authority arrived there was to make a 20-percent reduction in its rates. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we have seen this afternoon certain gentlemen attempt to throw a scare into some members of the committee by declaring that we were trying to take industries from other States and establish them in Tennessee and Alabama. Let me say again, and as emphatically as I can, that this is neither the purpose nor the intent of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and no Member can arise on this floor this afternoon and name a single industry that has left any other section of this country to go into Tennessee or Alabama on account of the cheap rates of the Tennessee Valley Authority. On the other hand on November 7 last, Mr. Wendell Wilkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Power Co., which is the holding company of the Tennessee Electric Co., the Alabama Power Co., and the Georgia Power Co., speaking at Birmingham, Ala., stated that the Alabama Power Co. had brought industries from Northern, Western, and Eastern States into Alabama, and boasted of the fact that during the last 10 years the Alabama Power Co. had brought 245 industries into some 143 different cities in Alabama. Mr. Wilkie in his speech emphasized the fact that the Tennessee Valley Authority had not brought and could not bring a single new industry in Tennessee or Alabama.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has an industrial section, sure; but what is this section for? This section is to develop those things which are indigenous to the great valley and which we are in such large measure today importing from foreign countries. We have in the valley such things as kaolin, out of which ceramics are made. We have pulpwood, that we are now importing in vast quantities from other countries; we have manganese. And, Mr. Chairman, as is well known, we are just entering into the era of the use of light metal in the field of transportation, an era in which manganese will play a tremendous part. We have in northern Mississippi and in Arkansas bauxite from which aluminum is made. A great part of the aluminum we use in this country today comes not from the aluminum plant on the Little Tennessee River but from Canada. These are the things the Tennessee Valley Authority would develop—not taking industry from some other section of this country—just as the development of the water powers of the West at Boulder Dam, at Grand Coulee, at Bonneville, at Fort Peck will not take industry from the South.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard much about the Comptroller General; the papers are full of alleged charges of his with reference to the Tennessee Valley Authority. Let me read you what the Comptroller General said. These are his words to the Committee on Military Affairs:

I think it is premature for you to question me with respect to these exceptions. I think it is unfair to the Authority, and I think it unfair to me. I think the Authority should have an opportunity, and must be given an opportunity, to answer that.

Those were some exceptions he had noted where there had been not 1 but 20,000 transactions. Why, that is his business; that is what he does all the time—note exceptions to the financial transactions of all the departments of the Government—and to seize upon exceptions which the Tennessee Valley Authority had had no opportunity whatever to explain or justify was most unfair.

We have heard much and we will hear more about cows, pigs, and hogs during this debate. The men operating the Tennessee Valley Authority are pretty sensible men; they have some common sense. When they started to construct the great Norris Dam, far away from Knoxville or any other city or town, they built a city to house the workers, just as any big private construction company would have done, and along with that city they operated a big mess hall.

They bought some hogs and then said: "We will take these pigs and feed them the garbage from the mess hall and later we will eat the hogs." They bought some chickens and said they would eat them. They bought some cows, and they paid a pretty good price for those cows; but when they bought those cows they bought them not only for the purpose of furnishing milk, butter, and cream for the mess hall, but also to encourage the people locally in the breeding and raising of high-grade cattle on their own farms and for their own homes.

Surely the Tennessee Valley Authority should not be criticized for adopting what everybody recognizes today as being the proper system under which you work part of the time on the construction job and the other part of the time you do your farming at home.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to have here a little pamphlet that was issued about 60 days ago. It is called "Aluminum at Alcoa." I do not want any of you gentlemen to be prejudiced against our cause, because I am going to call Mr. Andrew W. Mellon as a witness in our behalf. Here is a little bulletin published by his company and here is what it says. Alcoa is the town of the Aluminum Company on the Little Tennessee River.

In planning Alcoa and developing it into an attractive residential place, Aluminum Company of America recognized that the leisure hours of people who work are just as important to their well-being as the conditions under which they work. The company considers it a high compliment that the great Government agency, the Tennessee Valley Authority, is now doing in a large way many of the forward-looking things which have been carried on at Alcoa for a number of years on a more modest scale.

Among these, aside from the building of a community in which comfort and health shall be paramount, is the diffusion of agriculture and industry. At Alcoa 45 percent of the employees reside on farms and do part-time labor in the aluminum plants, with the remainder of their time free to engage in agriculture.

In bad times as well as good, employees' interests must be safeguarded in an intelligent manner if an industry is to succeed.

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Under leave granted to extend my remarks, I insert herein the four necessary amendments to which I have referred, together with comments thereon.

AMENDMENT BY MR. HILL OF ALABAMA

Page 8, line 4, strike out all after the period, beginning with the word " after ", to the end of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of this act that, in order, as soon as practicable to make the projects self-supporting and self-liquidating, the surplus power shall be sold at rates which, when applied to the normal capacity of the Authority's power facilities, will produce gross revenues in excess of the cost of production of said power.

COMMENTS ON AMENDMENT

This amendment is a substitute for the last sentence of present section 8, which now reads as follows:

After July 1, 1937, the Authority shall not sell the surplus power or chemicals produced by it annually below the cost of the aggregate production for each year.

This one sentence would completely destroy the electric and fertilizer programs of the Authority.

No private company could ever begin to sell power or chemicals if it had to charge the first customers the entire cost of the whole plant designed to serve many more customers. As to the annual cost, that cannot be determined until the year is past; it would therefore be impossible to determine in advance whether the Board was complying with the law.

This provision at one stroke repeals all of the law as it now stands, which provides for experiments in new forms of fertilizer, concerning which the Authority has made substantial progress and is now in production. Clearly no research program for cheaper forms of fertilizer as is provided for by existing law can be carried on if the Corporation is required from the very beginning of its operation to cover the full cost of production, such costs including research expenditures. Such provision would force the T. V. A. to produce a presently known and proven commercial product and abandon research, thus terminating the most promising development in the field of new and improved plant food in the past quarter century.

Moreover, it is obvious that as to the electrical program this provision would merely open the door to endless litigation involving all the perplexing and vexatious questions of fair value which for so long have obstructed the efforts of the public to secure reduction in electric rates.

This alone should be enough to defeat the proposal.

It is well known that the private-utility interests have followed the practice of harassing with protracted litigation practically every venture by the public to set up their own electric plants. This provision is an invitation for such attacks against the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In order for any electric current to be sold, it is of course necessary to make contracts. The present Tennessee Valley Authority Act provides for such contracts with States, counties, municipalities, nonprofit organizations of farmers and other citizens, and with private companies.

The new provision would prevent the making of a single contract because it would not be possible to determine the actual cost until after the end of the year. Is it conceivable that any municipality or other customer would make a contract for the purchase of current and build a plant for distributing it if the cost of power were entirely unknown and could be changed the year after an expensive plant were constructed? Thus, by its terms, this provision defeats the carefully deliberated provisions of the original act.

In proposing an alternative provision, we have gone as far as is possible in meeting the spirit of this provision of the bill without destroying the power and fertilizer programs of the T. V. A.

AMENDMENT BY MR. HILL OF ALABAMA

Page 11, line 23, strike out all of section 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 13. That section 9 (b) of said act of May 18, 1933, being Public Law No. 17, Seventy-third Congress, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(b) All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, except for personal services, made by the Corporation shall be made after advertising in such manner and at such times sufficiently in advance of opening bids as the Board shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and opportunity for competition: Provided, That advertisement shall not be required when, in the judgment of the Board, (1) the public exigency requires immediate delivery of the supplies or performance of the services; or (2) repair parts, accessories, supplemental equipment, or services are required for supplies or services previously furnished or contracted for; or (3) the aggregate amount involved in any purchase of supplies or procurement of services does not exceed $500; in which cases such purchases of supplies or procurement of services may be made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen: Provided further, That in comparing bids and in making awards the Board may consider such factors as the bidder's financial responsibility, skill, experience, record of integrity in dealing, ability to furnish repairs and maintenance services, the time of delivery or performance offered, and whether the bidder has complied with the specifications.

"The Comptroller General of the United States shall audit the transactions of the Corporation at such times as he shall determine, but not less frequently than once each governmental fiscal year, with personnel of his selection. In such connection he and his representatives shall have free and open access to all papers, books, records, files, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other things, property, and places belonging to or under the control of or used or employed by the Corporation, and shall be afforded full facilities for counting all cash and verifying transactions with and balances in depositaries. He shall make report of each such audit in quadruplicate, 1 copy for the President of the United States, 1 for the chairman of the board, 1 for public inspection at the principal office of the Corporation, and the other to be retained by him for the uses of the Congress: Provided, That such report shall not be made until the Corporation shall have had reasonable opportunity to examine the exceptions and criticisms of the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office, to point out errors therein, explain or answer the same, and to file a statement which shall be submitted by the Comptroller General with his report. The expenses for each such audit may be paid from moneys advanced therefor by the Corporation, or from any appropriation or appropriations for the General Accounting Office, and appropriations so used shall be reimbursed promptly by the Corporation as billed by the Comptroller General. All such audit expenses shall be charged to operating expenses of the Corporation. The Comptroller General shall make special report to the President of the United States and to the Congress of any transaction or condition found by him to be in conflict with the power or duties intrusted to the Corporation by law."

COMMENTS ON AMENDMENT

Section 13, as now written in the bill, would hamstring the operations of the Authority.

The present Tennessee Valley Authority Act provides for a comprehensive audit of all Tennessee Valley Authority transactions by the Comptroller General. Such independent audit is consistent with businesslike operations; it compares with the independent audits which private business corporations subject themselves to, but is far more searching. But the audit provided in the present Tennessee Valley Authority Act is very different from the control contemplated by this bill. Indeed, it provides for control of T. V. A. by the General Accounting Office more far-reaching and rigid than that to which any Government department is now subjected. Under the proposed bill every transaction of the Tennessee Valley Authority, every claim by or against it, could be held up for weeks and months while the Comptroller's auditors, accustomed to auditing the operations of ordinary Government departments, sought to judge transactions involving wholly unfamiliar business and engineering problems. The work and methods of operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority are necessarily very different from the regular Government departments.

The work of dam building is scheduled like clockwork for a period of 2 years or more. A delay of a month or more may mean being unprepared for high water and may cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. Such delay would necessarily result from the control provided in section 13 of the bill. The Authority estimates that the additional cost of work now under way which would result from the delays necessarily incident to this proposed change would amount to millions of dollars.

This provision of the bill is entirely inconsistent with the purpose of the original T. V. A. Act.

In proposing the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority the President had definitely in mind an effort to secure on public work the efficiency of private enterprise. He said:

I therefore suggest to the Congress legislation to create a Tennessee Valley Authority—a corporation clothed with the power of government but possessed with the flexibility and initiative of a private enterprise.

The purpose of the Congress in passing the original act was well expressed in the report of the House conference committee recommending the acceptance of the conference report. The conference committee said, "We intend that the Corporation shall have much of the essential freedom and elasticity of a private business corporation." It was the clear hope of the President and the intent of the Congress that the Tennessee Valley Authority should be free from that extra cost of doing Government business which results from routine Government procedure.

That this aim is entirely proper is clear from the language of the Supreme Court in holding that the expenditures of the Emergency Fleet Corporation are not subject to the approval of the Comptroller General. The Supreme Court said:

Indeed, an important, if not the first reason, for employing these incorporated agencies was to enable them to employ business methods and to conduct their operations with a freedom supposed to be inconsistent with accountability to the Treasury under its established procedure of audit and control over the financial transactions of the United States.

With its freedom to exercise judgment and discretion, the Tennessee Valley Authority has made a remarkable record of high wages and good living conditions, combined with remarkably low costs and rapid construction on two of the largest dams ever built by man. Seldom has any great engineering work been built as rapidly and as economically. The engineering profession and the engineering press of the country have been unstinted in their praise of this accomplishment.

The Comptroller General, in his testimony before the Military Affairs Committee, regarding the 20,000 transactions covered by his report, involving millions of dollars, said:

I certainly have found no fraud. If I had, I would have been up here long ago.

He also said:

I think it is premature for you to question me with respect to these exceptions. I think it is unfair to the Authority, and I think it unfair to me. I think the Authority should have an opportunity, and must be given an opportunity to answer that.

Until the Tennessee Valley Authority has had opportunity to review this report with the Comptroller, it is grossly unfair to revise the policy requested by the President, emphasized and approved by the Congress, and approved by the Supreme Court.

The amendment which I am proposing in lieu of this provision of the bill meets all reasonable requirements and at the same time preserves the policy of the original T. V. A. Act. The chief complaint of the Comptroller General has been that the Authority has not conformed as rigidly as he believes it should to the law requiring competitive bidding in purchases by Government departments. In view of the somewhat unique character of the Authority, as described above, it would be impracticable to apply the existing law to its transactions. However, the amendment which I propose is modeled after this law and other existing laws with such slight changes as are necessary to meet the special requirements of the Authority.

The proposed amendment also substantially reenacts that provision of the present T. V. A. Act which now provides for a comprehensive, independent audit by the Comptroller General. At the same time, in line with his own suggestion that it was unfair to discuss his report publicly before T. V. A. had an opportunity to answer it, an express proviso is added in order to assure the T. V. A. of such opportunity to answer.

AMENDMENT BY MR. HILL OF ALABAMA

Page 14, line 1, strike out all of section 14.

COMMENTS ON AMENDMENT

Section 14 should be stricken from the bill because otherwise the private power companies surrounding the dams, and not the general public, will be the sole beneficiaries of the public investment in the Tennessee Valley.

The present T. V. A. Act of May 18, 1933, authorizes the T. V. A. to build transmission lines between its dams in order to maintain and regulate the supply of current from Wilson and other dams on an efficient and stable basis. It also authorizes T. V. A. to build transmission lines as the means of bringing the public property developed at its dams to a market. The proposed amendment, however, as set out in section 14 of H. R. 8632, restricts the T. V. A. by providing that it may not construct such transmission lines which substantially parallel the transmission lines of existing utilities, but that the Authority must first negotiate for the purchase of such existing lines. In the event of failure to reach an agreement for purchase, it is then required to condemn them. The proposal in effect removes the Authority's existing power to build transmission lines.

In practical effect the section would destroy any possibility of Tennessee Valley Authority construction of transmission lines, as long as the power companies wish to block the sale of Tennessee Valley Authority power. Endless litigation would be sustained by selfish interests on the basis of this provision.

Suit would first be brought against the Corporation on the ground that lines which it proposed to build "duplicated" existing lines, even though the existing lines were small and unimportant and the claims unsupportable. Where negotiations had been tried, suits would then be brought on the ground that they had not been adequately pursued.

Experience with condemnation of utility properties convinces us that when the stage of condemnation was finally reached the proceedings would drag out for from 3 to 10 years. Meanwhile prospective Tennessee Valley Authority customers, the municipalities and counties and other organizations which now seek Tennessee Valley Authority power, would suffer such delays that they could make no definite plans for such purchase; in practical effect their desire to get the power would be defeated.

Utility companies will undoubtedly seriously endeavor to establish in condemnation proceedings that the properties taken should be valued on the same excessive and inflated valuation basis which they have utilized in fixing rates. The inevitable tendency of condemnation proceedings will thus be to require in effect that the consumers shall be permanently burdened with the inflated capitalization.

Moreover, in view of the fact that this provision fails to define what constitutes duplication, it might be impossible for the Corporation even to use its own power in constructing its own dams because in building lines to the sites of such dams it might be held to be duplicating existing facilities.

In short, the effect of this section will be to compel the Tennessee Valley Authority to sell all of its power to those private power companies, particularly the Alabama Power Co. and other subsidiaries of the Commonwealth & Southern Power Co., which have lines to or in the vicinity of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and thus to perpetuate the private monopolistic condition which for so many years has burdened the Government at Muscle Shoals.

AMENDMENT BY MR. HILL OF ALABAMA

Add a new section to the bill, to be known as "Section 15", and to read as follows:

SEC. 15. That said act of May 18, 1933, being Public Law No. 17, Seventy-third Congress, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding after section 26 of said act a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 26. (a) The unified development and regulation of the Tennessee River system requires that no dam, appurtenant works, or other obstruction, affecting navigation, flood control, or public lands or reservations, shall be constructed, and thereafter operated or maintained across, along, or in the said river or any of its tributaries until plans for such construction, operation, and maintenance shall have been submitted to and approved by the Board; and the construction, commencement of construction, operation, or maintenance of such structures without such approval is hereby prohibited. When such plans shall have been approved, deviation therefrom either before or after completion of such structures is prohibited unless the modification of such plans has previously been submitted to and approved by the Board.

"In the event the Board shall, within 60 days after their formal submission to the Board, fail to approve any plans or modifications, as the case may be, for construction, operation, or maintenance of any such structures on the Little Tennessee River, the above requirements shall be deemed satisfied, if upon application to the Federal Power Commission, with due notice to the Corporation, and hearing thereon, such plans or modifications are approved by the said Commission as reasonably adequate and effective for the unified development and regulation of the Tennessee River system.

"Such construction, commencement of construction, operation, or maintenance of any structures or parts thereof in violation of the provisions of this section may be prevented, and the removal or discontinuation thereof required by the injunction or order of any district court exercising jurisdiction in any district in which such structures or parts thereof may be situated, and the Corporation is hereby authorized to bring appropriate proceedings to this end.

"The requirements of this section shall not be construed to be a substitute for the requirements of any other law of the United States, or of any State, now in effect or hereafter enacted, but shall be in addition thereto, so that any approval, license, permit, or other sanction now or hereafter required by the provisions of any such law for the construction, operation, or maintenance of any structures whatever, except such as may be constructed, operated, or maintained by the Corporation, shall be required, notwithstanding the provisions of this section."

COMMENTS ON AMENDMENT

The original McSwain bill contained a specific section designed to protect the interests of the public in the unified development of the Tennessee River system. The above amendment is suggested in order to take the place of this section of the original McSwain bill, which is entirely omitted from the present bill.

The only substantial objection to the original provision was made by the Aluminum Co. of America. This company is undertaking to control completely the Little Tennessee River. Its representatives stated at the hearings that when their plans for a series of dams were finished they could absolutely control the flow of that stream. The Little Tennessee is one of the larger tributaries of the Tennessee River in a region of heavy rainfall. If the Aluminum Co. can control it without any requirement of cooperation or coordination, it will be in a position to dictate conditions to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

At present that company is absolutely without effective Federal supervision in the building and operation of dams. With a series of large dams below, it is essential that the safety from failure of up-river dams be insured by adequate Federal inspection, as provided in this proposed amendment. Under existing law neither the Federal Power Commission nor the Army Engineers can effectively protect the interests of the United States in this regard. The Aluminum Co. is a private kingdom in itself.

It is an engineering fact that if private interests can build dams in the river and its tributaries when and as they please, can operate such dams without regard to the paramount public interest in the water resources, the efforts of the Government through the Tennessee Valley Authority may be largely thwarted, and the value of its dams for navigation, flood control, and power will be seriously impaired.

Unless such private dams are required to be built and to be operated in harmony with the series of Government and other private dams, the improvement of navigation and the control of floods will be menaced. For example, unless some control is exercised over private dams they may withhold water in dry seasons when water stored in reservoirs should be let out in the interest of navigation. In the same way uncontrolled private operation can interfere with the requirements for flood control and the safety of citizens and property over a large area.

A purpose of the present Tennessee Valley Authority Act is to promote unified development of the Tennessee River system. In line with this policy and in order to avoid domination by the Aluminum Co., the Tennessee Valley Authority has already taken preliminary steps in the region of the Little Tennessee to protect the public interest. We believe, however, that comprehensive and specific legislation like that contained in the Senate bill is required to meet the situation adequately. This amendment follows the Senate bill, except that a provision is added to avoid any possible adverse effect which the Aluminum Co. might claim by giving it a right to appeal to the Federal Power Commission from any requirements of the Authority.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to voice my sentiments, as I always have, against the Government being in business. I think when the Government of the United States goes into business in competition with its own citizens it is doing one of the greatest injustices to this country and to its people that it is possible to do. It makes no difference whether we speak about the Tennessee Valley Authority or any other Government project. So far as I am concerned, I have always opposed the Government being in business, and I hope I will have the ability and the nerve to continue my opposition to the Government being in business, no matter of what kind or form. I think we are socializing this country today. We are not only socializing it but we are Russianizing it, and since the President recognized Russia a year or so ago I think he has been trying to pattern after them.

Mr. Chairman, we are today discussing the Tennessee Valley Authority. I want to make a prediction today, as I did a year or two ago when the House voted for the Tennessee Valley Authority. I thank my lucky stars that I voted against the proposition at that time. As I said before, I want to make a prediction, and that is that we will find the Tennessee Valley Authority will be one of the greatest boomerangs and one of the greatest monstrosities that has ever befallen the American people. We are spending the money of the taxpayers of this country to develop a project which is going to ruin individual citizens and the States of this country, who are paying the taxes and who will have to pay the bills created for the benefit of two of our States, namely, Tennessee and Alabama. When we think of the States of Tennessee and Alabama receiving 5 percent of the gross earnings of the Tennessee Valley Authority we may realize that this is one of the greatest injustices that has ever fallen on the other States of this country—a ridiculous custom to establish.

Mr. Chairman, why should the States of Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, or any other State, tax their people to go down into Alabama and Tennessee and build this great monstrosity which will sell power at less than cost? The operation of T. V. A. taxes the people of every State because they want to benefit the people of two or three States at the expense of the taxpayers of every other State. I cannot for the life of me see why we should do that, and, as far as I am concerned, I do not intend to vote in favor of such a proposition. It is wrong in principle besides being unconstitutional.

When the Tennessee Valley Authority was created 2 years ago by the Congress of the United States, it was through the persuasion of the President, Mr. Roosevelt, and Senator NORRIS. Mr. Roosevelt's responsibility is going to be the responsibility of the taxpayers of my State, and I want them to know who is responsible for this monstrosity, this socialistic business. When I think of the Members of Congress doing those things that are directly against the welfare of the people of their States, then I know where else to place the responsibility as well.

When we authorized this $50,000,000 corporation, the question arose in my mind where, why, and when will the corporation dispose of these bonds. Why have they not done so up to this time? The reason is because nobody will buy the bonds. No one wants the bonds of a Government corporation, because they know that the Government's business is run for less than cost, and eventually the corporation will go out of business unless the Federal Government continues to pile in money in order to keep it up. This happens to all political corporations operating business. We have spent, under the Public Works Administration, $25,000,000. The committees of Congress have granted $50,000,000; the Emergency Relief, $1,000,000; the R. F. C., $10,000,000; and they have turned over the earnings of the corporations amounting to over $548,000. All of the money that has been expended down there since the creation of this Authority runs well over $86,000,000. With the $150,000,000 we already had invested in there it seems to me eventually we will have more money invested in the Tennessee Valley Authority than anyone in this Congress or in any past Congress ever dreamed of having invested there. And we have just started to spend money on the T. V. A. It will be a drain on the Federal Treasury for years to come.

The statement is being made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that if the power interests of this country would charge the same rates as are charged in the Tennessee Valley Authority the people of the States of Pennsylvania and other States would save so much money. There is nothing that does me more good than to note that the gentleman from Mississippi is in the Chamber at this time, because if he were absent I would not want to make these statements. The statement which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] makes about the savings to the people of the various States is one of the greatest fallacies and one of the most absurd statements that anyone could possibly make. There is not a word of truth in the statement, because of the fact that he bases his whole premise on the fact that he would charge the same rates as the Tennessee Valley Authority, which throws the whole thing out of the realm and bounds of good, sensible business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I will yield after I conclude my 3 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman ought to yield.

Mr. RICH. I am going to yield just as soon as I get through making this statement. I want to show why the statements of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] are incorrect, why they are in error.

The Tennessee Valley Authority does not know how to figure costs. It refuses to allow a proper system of bookkeeping to be established. When we said we were going to make that a yardstick, it seems to me we made nothing but a toothpick. No share of the overhead or the general expense of the Federal Government, as figured by good business, is reckoned with.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I do not yield until I get through.

No financing expenses and no interest charges except 3½ percent on part of the investment are figured. They do not have any insurance charge, as the Government carries this risk. They have no State or Federal workmen's compensation expense to pay. They do not figure in this project any real-estate taxes, which every private corporation has to pay, because the Government is not supposed to pay such a tax, because the Federal Government does not pay such taxes. It is wrong in principle. They pay no automobile taxes. They do not have the 3 percent utility tax that a corporation pays. They do not figure on any capital-stock tax which a corporation has to pay. They do not figure on any income tax which the Government charges all other corporations. The Tennessee Valley Authority also gets rebates on freight and express. The Tennessee Valley Authority gets free postage under the Government franking privilege. You know there is no corporation that gets anything like this. They have free use of the Government departments here in Washington. They have free use of Government offices and of Federal offices for use in the operation of the administration here in Washington. They keep the accounts of the Tennessee Valley Authority as they see fit, not in accordance with good business custom. Now, who are these people who are keeping all these accounts and doing all this figuring? Are they men having experience in business, or are they college professors, or inexperienced, unsuccessful people?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. I yield now to my colleague from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I will get time from the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RICH. I want to yield to my colleague from Mississippi and answer his question. Give me 1 minute, so I can yield to my colleague from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I will answer the gentleman in my own time.

Mr. RANSLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania 1 minute.

Mr. RICH. Now, I want to answer the gentleman's questions, because I have always contended they are nothing but fallacies, and I would like to have the gentleman ask me the questions, because I would like to answer them for him.

Mr. RANKIN. If I thought the gentleman could answer any questions, I would not mind asking them, but he has so deliberately misrepresented what I said here that I shall get my time from the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RICH. Then I decline to yield, because I do not believe the gentleman can ask an intelligent question. [Laughter.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, my wailing friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who has just left the floor, so thoroughly misrepresented what I said a few days ago that I take this time to answer him.

In the first place, he jumps on the Tennessee Valley Authority yardstick. I thought the Power Trust would come back at me if I simply used the T. V. A. figures, and I therefore put into the RECORD the amount the people in each State would save if under the Tacoma, Wash., rates. Tacoma has a plant that cost $23,000,000, and that has paid down to $7,000,000. In a few years it will be paid out entirely and will be able to further reduce all electric light and power rates to the people of Tacoma. According to the Tacoma rates the people of Pennsylvania are overcharged $74,907,000 a year.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not know anything about this question. These figures have been in the RECORD for weeks, and have not been questioned by anyone who does know.

With a gross revenue of $1,940,994 the Tacoma plant paid $145,575 taxes last year; gave to the city of Tacoma $200,545 worth of free service, set aside for depreciation $400,053; paid interest on its indebtedness to the amount of $435,322, and still made a net profit of $508,190; and at the same time gave the people of Tacoma the lowest light and power rates in the United States.

According to the Tacoma rates, the people of Pennsylvania are overcharged $74,907,000 a year for electric lights and power.

The people of New York are overcharged $127,618,000 a year.

The people of the State of Ohio are overcharged $47,529,000 every year.

The people of the State of Oregon are overcharged $6,510,000 every year.

The people of the State of Maine are overcharged $5,229,000 every year.

The people of the State of New Hampshire are overcharged $3,459,000 every year.

The people of the States of Vermont and Rhode Island together are overcharged $8,367,000 a year.

The people of the State of Massachusetts are overcharged $37,557,000 every year.

The people of the State of Connecticut are overcharged $14,397,000 every year.

The people of the State of New Jersey are overcharged $39,563,000 every year.

The people of the State of Indiana are overcharged $19,189,000 every year.

The people of the State of Illinois are overcharged $59,261,000 every year.

The people of the State of Michigan are overcharged $33,768,000 every year.

The people of the State of Wisconsin are overcharged $17,787,000 every year.

The people of the State of Minnesota are overcharged $13,911,000 every year.

The people of the State of Iowa are overcharged $11,808,000 every year.

The people of the State of Missouri are overcharged $20,249,000 every year.

The people of the State of North Dakota are overcharged $1,860,000 every year.

The people of the State of South Dakota are overcharged $2,345,000 every year.

The people of the State of Nebraska are overcharged $6,770,000 every year.

The people of the State of Kansas are overcharged $8,954,000 every year.

The people of the States of Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia, together with the District of Columbia, are overcharged $24,762,000 every year.

The people of the State of Virginia are overcharged $9,698,000 every year.

The people of the State of North Carolina are overcharged $11,653,000 every year.

The people of the State of South Carolina are overcharged $6,292,000 every year.

The people of the State of Georgia are overcharged $9,900,000 every year.

The people of the State of Florida are overcharged $8,465,000 every year.

The people of the State of Kentucky are overcharged $8,398,000 every year.

The people of the State of Tennessee are overcharged $10,201,000 every year.

The people of the State of Alabama are overcharged $6,344,000 every year.

The people of the State of Mississippi are overcharged $4,117,000 every year.

The people of the State of Louisiana are overcharged $7,477,000 every year.

The people of the State of Oklahoma are overcharged $8,946,000 every year.

The people of the State of Texas are overchargd $24,922,000 every year.

The people of the States of Montana and Utah together are overcharged $6,589,000 every year.

The people of the State of Idaho are overcharged $2,789,000 every year.

The people of the State of Wyoming are overcharged $1,323,000 every year.

The people of the State of Colorado are overcharged $6,461,000 every year.

The people of the States of Arizona and New Mexico are together overcharged $4,344,000 every year.

The people of the State of Nevada are overcharged $1,046,000 every year.

The people of the State of Washington are overcharged $11,661,000 every year.

The people of the State of Arkansas are overcharged $4,211,000 every year.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I am sorry, but I cannot yield now.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I want to say that I am a Pennsylvanian and I agree with what the gentleman from Mississippi says.

Mr. RANKIN. These figures have been in the RECORD and every Power Trust engineer has been on them and no man who understands the question has up until today questioned these figures.

Not only this, I put in the figures from Ontario and from Winnipeg, Canada.

No; the trouble is the gentleman from Pennsylvania is aiding and abetting the Power Trust in robbing everyone in Pennsylvania who turns on an electric light to the extent of seventy-four or seventy-five million dollars a year.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I do not yield. It does not do any good to talk to him.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has a mind like the pupil of the eye, the more light you pour on it the more it contracts. So I am not going to waste any more time on him. [Laughter.]

Another thing about the utilities in Pennsylvania. As I pointed out the other day, while the Republicans were in control of that State, they passed laws that exempted all real estate owned by these utilities from taxation and, today, they own $100,000,000 worth of real estate in Pennsylvania that is escaping taxation, and this tax is piled back onto the shoulders of the people of Pennsylvania who are paying these enormous electric light and power charges.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I do not represent any power interests of any kind.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not say the gentleman did represent them directly, but when he comes on the floor of this House and attacks this measure and undertakes deliberately to misrepresent the facts as they are in the record, in order to try to keep down this legislation, whether he is conscious of it or not, he is aiding and abetting the Power Trust that is robbing the people of Pennsylvania of from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars a year. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made that the T. V. A. encourages the building of competing electric plants in the Tennessee Valley. This is false.

Although more than 250 communities have applied to the Tennessee Valley Authority for electricity supply, and although many of these have voted bonds with which to construct a competing distributing plant, there is not a single instance in the entire Tennessee Valley region in which competition between the existing private utility and a duplicate municipal plant has taken place. The Authority has exercised its influence to the utmost to this end. Furthermore, although T. V. A. has statutory power to build competing lines, the Authority has not spent a single dollar in this way. Transmission lines and distributing systems have been purchased from existing utilities.

In Knoxville, Tenn., competition will be avoided by the purchase of the entire electric properties of the Tennessee Public Service Co. by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

There has been a deliberate misstatement of fact with respect to the price paid by T. V. A. for the Tennessee Public Service Co.'s property. The facts are a matter of public record and are generally available. The T. V. A. paid dollar for dollar for all the company's useful electric property.

The Tennessee Public Service Co. has been operating its electric properties very profitably and without complaint, except from rate payers, for years upon the basis of a valuation fixed by the Tennessee Railroad and Utilities Commission. The price paid by T. V. A. coincides with this rate base, less an item of $700,000 for property no longer used or useful.

The price paid by T. V. A. was approved as fair by the bondholders' committee. That committee, composed of representatives of large institutions holding the company's bonds, was formed to represent the bondholders informally in this transaction. On July 14, 1934, the chairman of this committee, himself a public-utility operator and also the chairman of the public utilities securities committee of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, made the following written statement to holders of these bonds:

While the committee has no direct personal knowledge on the subject, we are told, and have no reason to doubt, that the existing facilities in and around Knoxville can be duplicated for less than the amount the company is to receive if Mr. Lilienthal's recommendations are adopted.

He also said:

The hope all along has been that Mr. Lilienthal would make good his expressed purpose of dealing fairly with the owners of existing facilities. The informal committee is satisfied that he has.

Institutions represented on the committee referred to include the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., the Washington Trust Co. of Westerly, R. I., the Columbian National Life Insurance Co., and the New Hampshire Savings Bank.

The price paid was fair to the stockholders of the company. These stockholders, preferred and common, cannot reasonably complain so long as a fair price was paid for the properties. To further insure against any valid claim that the transaction was not fair to the stockholders, T. V. A. agreed to assume the remaining term of a contract between the Tennessee Public Service Co. and the affiliated Carolina Power & Light Co., both Electric Bond & Share companies. This contract involved an obligation of almost $800,000 which would have otherwise fallen on the stockholders. A total of almost $3,300,000 of cash and liquid receivables is to be retained by the stockholders, in addition to a street railway and other property.

The T. V. A. rightfully refused to pay for watered stock. The charge from some sources that the deal is confiscatory because common-stock holders receive nothing and preferred-stock holders less than par raises this issue: Are stockholders in a quasi-public enterprise entitled to be paid out on stock which represents no investment and on property no longer used?

The common stock of $5,000,000 represents no equity, and the representatives of stockholders at no time during the negotiations seriously urged payment to take care of common stock. The facts are as follows:

As of December 31, 1933, the total capitalization of the Tennessee Public Service Co. amounted to $18,514,653. As of the same date the valuation of the company's property by the Tennessee commission, upon which it was entitled to earn a return, deducting for working capital, was $12,123,576. This discrepancy led the President to request the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and report. This report submitted to the President establishes—and it is undisputed—that the capital accounts were written up by $4,388,157 between October 31, 1930, and the following day, November 1, 1930, and that the company write-ups altogether total more than $5,000,000, the amount of the common stock.

Without any investment and in the face of a long, unbroken record of liberal dividends, the holding company which had this common stock issued to it, received a total of $846,000 in the four depression years, 1930–33, as dividends on stock representing no investment.

T. V. A. refused to pay for nonuseful property that added nothing to the company's assets. T. V. A. excluded from the rate-base purchase price items to cover superseded electric property amounting to about $700,000. This figure includes an item of $125,000 of property which had already been charged off against the depreciation account, an account which had been furnished from sums paid in by consumers for this very purpose. The balance of the deduction is principally represented by an antiquated and nonuseful steam generating plant, superseded for years by other sources of supply.

In addition to its electric system the company operated a street railway, which was subsidized by electric users. This street railway was in the rate base at $4,042,606. This railway, once profitable, has not recently earned a net return after depreciation. Nevertheless, the electric consumers had subsidized the street railway by paying rates high enough to permit an 8-percent return on the street railway. Sound financial practice in industrial and public-utility operation is to amortize, out of current earnings, investment in obsolete or inefficient properties. Instead of conforming to this principle of good management, this company continued to accumulate millions of dollars in its surplus account which it paid out in dividends, without taking steps to write down the capital value of the street railway or to retire it. There is no obligation on the part of any public agency acquiring the electric property to pay for the street railway property under such circumstances.

The negotiations between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the owners of the Tennessee Public Service Co. were conducted on a basis of the facts, and with an expressed desire on both sides to reach a conclusion fair to investors and the public alike. It was desirable that controversy be avoided and everyone's energy be concentrated upon constructive matters. But the false, unfounded, and hysterical statements and innuendo in David Lawrence's articles were designed to injure the standing of all public utility securities, and lead the uninformed and credulous to sell sound securities at stampede prices. This would enable the insiders to make a clean-up and would be used to discredit T. V. A.

The facts of the Knoxville transaction show that T. V. A., in the words of a leading banker and utility executive, did "deal fairly" and that actual investment in useful property was at all times protected.

Here are typical quotations from the Lawrence articles considered in the light of the actual facts:

1. The T. V. A. ignored both the preferred- and common-stock holders altogether.

The common-stock holders had no equity, as disclosed by the report to the President by the Federal Trade Commission. No company representative ever seriously urged payment to take care of common stock. They put no money into the property, they received tremendous dividends on their watered stock, and obviously T. V. A. should have "ignored" them. The preferred-stock holders retained about $3,300,000 in cash and liquid assets receivables, a street railway on the books at $4,042,000 (which T. V. A. and Knoxville agree they will aid toward profitable operation), and other property which Mr. Lawrence entirely overlooked. Mr. Lawrence makes this ridiculous and entirely false statement:

2. The investors remain. Why should they take punishment? They saved their money and invested it. They had the protection of the laws of the several States and of the Federal Government * * *. And if there is disregard of a large part of the capital invested by the preferred-stock holders and total indifference to all common stock—which represents the opportunity or hope of reward for risks already taken—then what is to become of the whole wealth-producing and tax-paying economic system?

The inference here is that the stock of the Tennessee Public Service Co. represented investment. The facts are that on the night of October 31, 1930, at a time when all other prices had dropped abruptly, this company wrote up its books and issued common stock representing not one penny of investment. Dividends on this water were paid during the depression. On this stock, representing no investment whatever, the people of Knoxville, in the midst of the most desperate depression in the history of the United States, paid dividends in 1930 of $396,000; in 1931, $200,000; in 1932, $200,000; in 1933, $50,000. In other words, the people of Knoxville in these 4 years paid a total of $846,000 to stockholders who had not invested a dollar. In 12 years the return on the common stock alone was $3,388,000.

Third. Mr. Lawrence goes on to say this:

Consumers save, but pay higher taxes. This presumably would be passed on to the consumers. But something else more expensive would be loaded on the consumers. * * * Municipal power plants are usually tax-free. So there must be some way of replacing lost revenue.

The inference here is that T. V. A. plans to operate tax-free. This is misleading, and deliberately so, inasmuch as public records show that T. V. A. pays taxes in the form of 5 percent on its gross revenues to the States in which it operates hydro plants; that where it operates within municipalities or counties T. V. A. is committed to paying to the counties and cities, as compensation for the use of highways and streets, the same amount as a privately owned utility would pay as taxes on the same property; that the contracts between T. V. A. and the municipalities purchasing from it expressly provide that the municipality will pay to the general fund of the city and the county the same amount of taxes that would be paid by a privately owned utility; and that this principle is in actual practice today in the Tennessee Valley.

Fourth. From these false statements Mr. Lawrence goes on to the very height of ridiculousness when he says:

The Roosevelt administration has embarked upon a plan which, if applied to all the utilities of the country, will mean a loss of approximately $7,000,000,000 to the security holders of America.

If the $14,000,000,000 capitalization of the public-utility industry of the country coincides with the fair value of useful property, then, under the Knoxville procedure, the investors would receive dollar for dollar of useful property. If the fourteen billions of securities outstanding are partly water, and not useful investment, the people of the country under decisions of the Supreme Court are under no obligation to pay rates on this structure, and to that extent the value is diminished.

Mr. Lawrence's reckless hint of a $7,000,000,000 loss may be based upon the fact that the preferred-stock holders of Tennessee Public Service Co. will not have a hundred dollars returned on each hundred-dollar share and that this measure should then be applied to the $14,000,000,000 capitalization of the American public-utility industry. But the loss to preferred-stock holders in Tennessee Public Service Co. is due to the fact that about 33⅓ percent of the total capital assets of this company was not in the electric business at all but in the street-railway business. In determining the effect on the electric investor of this transaction as a precedent, obviously investment in street railway has no bearing. Or does Mr. Lawrence think that the electric consumers of the United States should continue to pay a return on street railways, many of which have long since been abandoned or written off against surplus, according to recognized sound financial practice? If this company, having a total net corporate income during only the past 12 years of $5,782,870.27, had made some provision for the depreciation in value and earning power of the street railway out of this sum instead of paying out substantially all of it in dividends, even the street railway would not now be troubling the stockholders. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to go into any historical discussion with reference to the T. V. A., because it is one of the best-known public projects ever undertaken in the United States. It was only a few years ago that our great humanitarian President and a friendly Congress decided upon this great development in the interest of not only the people who reside within the seven States in which this project is located but in the interest of all the people in every State in the Union.

The territory under consideration is located on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, and in area contains 44,000 square miles, or 26,000,000 acres. The Tennessee River is one of the finest streams in the United States. Rising in the mountains of Virginia, it flows a distance of more than 650 miles, through Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, and Kentucky, and on into the Ohio River near Paducah, Ky.

No better place could have been selected in the United States for the beneficial experiments now under way in the Tennessee Valley, and I believe all parties who have accurate knowledge of the location and who are free from prejudice will agree with me on this point.

Some people say we have no right to tax people in the New England States and the States of the North and the West for a project located entirely in the South. This might be true if only people of the South were benefited, but we cannot benefit one section of the country with great public improvement without, to a certain extent, helping all other sections. Under former administrations millions and billions of dollars have been appropriated by Congress and spent on public improvements in all sections of this great land of ours, and perhaps the South has received less consideration than any other section, yet she has paid her taxes to help others, without complaint, to build up and improve this Nation regardless of location of improvement. I have often wondered what would have been the position of the critics of the Tennessee Valley Authority had the project been located in their States or section of the country.

There has been some criticism of members of the Tennessee Valley Authority that they were men of poor judgment, that in their work they have deviated from the spirit and letter of the law, that they have entered into certain developments never contemplated by law, and so forth. They may have departed from the letter of the law in some minor instances, but not the spirit. In so doing, I venture to say their actions were for the best interest of the country and met with the approval of those who are in a position to know what they have done.

Severe criticism was registered against the Authority a few days ago by some Members of Congress because they had invested a few hundred dollars per head in fine-blooded cows in order to give the natives of that section and the thousands of daily visitors from all sections of the United States an object lesson in the production and worth of good marketable, registered cattle as compared with scrubs, such as are now found in various parts of the United States. Dr. H. A. Morgan, one of the most honorable and best-loved men in Tennessee, who has been identified with the University of Tennessee and the agricultural interests of that State for the past 40 years, has charge of this department, just as he had charge of a similar department while connected with the university. Dr. Morgan will be successful in his work with the Authority if let alone and will give to the world an object lesson that will be worth millions to the poor and uninformed farmers of the country who have never had an opportunity of knowing the difference in the value of a scrub and a blooded steer.

I believe the members of the Tennessee Valley Authority are honest men and that their greatest ambition is to make a success of the work the President, through appointment, has given them to do. No other three men in the entire history of our Nation have ever had placed on their shoulders such an enormous burden. The average man has no conception of the magnitude of the undertaking. The uninformed often criticize on false reports of some small expenditure of money without investigating to see whether such expenditure was wise or unwise. Such men seldom see any good in anything and never praise and encourage men for the great deeds they accomplish. Of course the T. V. A. is spending enormous sums of money, but it has not been shown that the expenditures were out of proportion to the work that has been done.

We have heard much in recent years about flood control and we have appropriated billions of dollars for that purpose, much of which has been wasted because it was not spent in a businesslike and systematic way. The T. V. A. proposes to, and will, give the country a practical lesson in flood control by the erection of high dams on the Tennessee River. Had this system of flood control been in existence a few years ago on the Tennessee and other rivers whose waters flow into the Mississippi or its tributaries, untold wealth would have been saved in the Mississippi Valley in 1927. In that disastrous flood I am sure there was more valuable property destroyed at an average cash value than it will take to complete the T. V. A. project. Should the people who happen to live in the great valley of the Mississippi bear all the loss of these disastrous floods that originate in other sections of the country? Of course not! We, as a generous nation, should be willing and anxious to do our part to help our fellow man in all cases of great emergency and distress. It is to be desired that the work in flood control begun by the T. V. A. will not cease until relief is given, not only to the citizens of the Tennessee and Mississippi River Valleys but to the entire country. For this reason alone, there should be no cessation of work on this project until it is finally completed.

There are other reasons, however, why this work should continue uninterrupted. I have often heard it said that the Tennessee River could be made one of the finest streams for navigation in the United States. The erection of dams for flood control will give to the business interests of the country a 9-foot channel from Knoxville to where it empties into the Ohio, a distance, as I have before said, of more than 650 miles. There is much heavy freight along this river, such as lumber, crossties, marble, coal, iron ore, and other valuable metals, that cannot be transported to the markets of the world except by water transportation. The people who own this vast amount of valuable products can never get relief except by Government assistance.

But there is something more to be done. After this stream is made navigable, if we want it to remain so for the use and benefit of future generations, we must stop erosion of the soil near the river. The T. V. A. has recognized this and has already begun the work. The valleys of the Tennessee River are comparatively narrow and the owners of the land along the Tennessee have not only cleared and put into cultivation the bottom lands, but have cleared and put into cultivation the hills along the river. The owners of these hill farms are ignorant of how to protect these lands from erosion. The result is that many of these farms have practically been denuded of the once rich soil that covered the rocks beneath. Years of neglect have wrought much damage. Heavy rains have washed great gullies down the hillsides and deposited silt and rocks in the river bed; thus from year to year the river is gradually becoming less useful for navigation. Under the guiding hand of the T. V. A. this eroded land will be redeemed and the river protected for future and present generations.

So far I have not mentioned one of the most important and disturbing factors connected with the project. After the completion of all the dams contemplated for flood control and navigation what shall we do with the power that can be easily and cheaply generated? This question has given the people more concern than all others combined. Shall we legislate in the interest of the great and powerful corporations who have engaged in the distribution of electrical energy or for the masses of the people who are groping in darkness and who have heretofore, on account of excessive rates, been unable to acquire the luxuries of life flowing from the use of electrical appliances? I do not want to do the power companies any damage if it can be prevented, neither do I want to deprive the masses and poorer classes of their just dues; therefore, I hope the disturbing questions we have had to deal with may some day be settled in a just and fair way to all concerned.

The power companies were not as much interested in the welfare and happiness of the people they served, and others they might have served, before the T. V. A. was established, as they are today. They never thought of reducing excessive rates until they saw the handwriting on the wall. Since the T. V. A. started operations the power companies in many instances have reduced their rates to consumers from one-half to two-thirds of former rates. Now, who is entitled to the difference between their former and present rates, or the power rates and an equitable rate established by the T. V. A.? I, for one, feel like the people are entitled to the benefit of the doubt. I am looking forward to a day when electric energy will sell so cheap that all classes can afford to buy and receive benefits therefrom. I hope to see the day when the farmer who dwells in the valley or on the hilltop may have all the advantages arising from the generation and use of electricity that his brother in the city now enjoys. When we light the byways and the highways of country life the farm question will, to a great extent, be solved.

The reduction of electric rates by the power companies has, in my opinion, already saved the consumers of electricity in the United States more than the entire cost of the Tennessee Valley improvement. To show what is being saved to consumers of electricity where T. V. A. power has been installed, I insert and make a part of my speech two short articles from the Pulaski Citizen and the Tennessee Farm Bureau News.

[From the Pulaski Citizen, Pulaski, Tenn., Wednesday, Feb. 20, 1935]

A COMPARISON

For information of any who may be interested, we present the following comparisons of electric current used in Pulaski, and cost of same, for January 1935, the first month under T. V. A. contract, as compared with December 1934, the last month using current generated by local municipal plant.

Total kilowatts generated in December, 97,900.

Total kilowatts bought of T. V. A. for January, 119,900.

Increase 22,000 kilowatts.
Used for pumping water in December, 13,700 kilowatts.
Used for pumping water in January, 14,400 kilowatts.
Used for street lighting in December, 5,010 kilowatts.
Used for street lighting in January, 6,610 kilowatts.
Used for White Way, lights about the Square, in December, 2,475 kilowatts.
Used for White Way in January, 2,364 kilowatts.
Sold to all consumers, residential and commercial, in December, 65,847 kilowatts.
Sold to consumers in January, 67,197 kilowatts.
Receipts from consumers for December, counting all bills paid, $4,792.47.
Receipts for January, on same basis, $1,899.87.
Total cost of production for December, counting fuel oil, labor, etc., but not counting depreciation on plant or interest on investment, $2,128.18.
Total cost of current bought of T. V. A. for January, $765.70.

It is apparent that the citizens used more current in January than they did in December at a cost of less than half the amount paid for December. At the same time the city received for current sold more than double the cost of all current bought. As heretofore, citizens paid for current used for pumping water, street lighting, and White Way, and got current for use at less than half the former cost. And this without any investment in a generating plant.

Of current produced by oil engines, the selling price was a fraction over 225 percent of the cost of production. Of the current bought at the substation of T. V. A. the selling price is a fraction over 248 percent of the cost.

If a private citizen could make 23 percent more net profit in 1 month by changing his method of doing business, would you say he is justified in making the change? Especially when prospects are decidedly good for still better results in future?

[From the Tennessee Farm Bureau News, published by the Tennessee Farm Bureau Federation at Columbia, Tenn., Thursday, July 4, 1935]

T. V. A. YARDSTICK WORKS, SAYS LILIENTHAL—ATHENS, ALA., WITH T. V. A. POWER RATES, SHOWS NICE PROFIT—GREAT INCREASE IN SALE OF BOTH POWER AND ELECTRIC EQUIPMENT

If the Tennessee Valley Authority was created to establish a yardstick for measuring fair costs of electric power, it has certainly proven itself out, according to David E. Lilienthal, T. V. A. director and general counsel. In an address to members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers on June 22 he cited specific instances of communities that were making handsome profits from the sale of T. V. A. power at the low T. V. A. rates that were established shortly after this body came into existence.

"The American people are not interested in theories", said Director Lilienthal. "What they want is results. The real test of any Government or private activity is: Does it work? * * * You can't stop a fact."

While there are a number of communities that have made T. V. A. rates pay, he made particular mention of results obtained in Athens, Ala., after its first full year of operation with T. V. A. current. "Previously the average domestic rate in the city of Athens", continued Mr. Lilienthal, "was about 5½ cents a kilowatt-hour, which is about the national average for such service. On June 1, 1934, the rates were cut 45 percent. Immediately the consumption of electricity began to increase. People began to buy and enjoy electric-using equipment. Today Athens uses three times the amount of electricity for residential purposes as was used at the time the rate cut was put into effect a year ago.

"The average residential cost per kilowatt-hour in Athens is now 2 cents, as compared to the 5½-cent rate that prevailed before T. V. A. entered the picture."

One fallacy exploded by Mr. Lilienthal was the oft-repeated assertion of power companies that no community or corporation could sell power at the rates established by T. V. A. without going broke. "What is the fact of the matter?" he asked, and then proceeded to answer the question. "The city of Athens received 20 percent more total revenue in May of 1935 under the low T. V. A. rates than it received in May 1934 under rates about twice as high. Not only that, but Athens, in a single year, is making more profit under 45 percent lower rates than it made a year ago. This profit results after paying all operating expenses, setting aside an adequate amount for depreciation, paying interest on bonds, and paying every nickel of taxes which a private utility would."

In mentioning the taxes that were paid he exploded another charge put out by many power companies to the effect that no taxes were required to be paid on T. V. A. current and that this placed upon private power companies an unfair competition.

"The electric consumers in their rates," explained Mr. Lilienthal, "pay into the General Treasury an amount equivalent to every kind and description of taxes, property taxes, sales taxes, etc., and after paying all these amounts and setting up these reserves the city of Athens has a surplus available as a dividend to the people of the community of 19.3 percent of gross revenues; that is, out of every dollar paid in by the electric users of Athens, 19 cents is available as a surplus for extensions, improvements, or further rate reductions."

Another very pleasing effect of low rates in Athens was the tremendous increase in the sale of electric equipment, such as refrigerators, water heaters, electric ranges, etc. During the year of T. V. A. operation dealers in electric equipment sold electric appliances to the power consumers of Athens to the amount of $112 per residential customer.

"There are 20,000,000 residential power consumers in the United States", continued Mr. Lilienthal. "Think of the terrific impulse to the stimulation of industry in the durable goods field if by reduced rates following the T. V. A. principle these 20,000,000 consumers, as a result of these sound and sensible rates, were to make an average expenditure of $112 per customer for equipment. At even $100 per customer, there would be an added column of production in the durable goods field of $2,000,000,000."

While Athens was the town used as an example of the T. V. A. yardstick, it is known that other towns in the valley area are able to show similar results. Among these towns might be named Tupelo and Corinth, Miss., and others.

Time will not permit me to mention or dwell upon all the useful experimental work that will be done by the T. V. A. I want to see nitrates, phosphates, and high-class fertilizers manufactured at Muscle Shoals for the benefit of the farmers throughout the Nation. Nothing should be and will be neglected by the Authority that will be to the interest of national defense in case of war.

Now, the results accomplished in the towns above mentioned will some day be accomplished in every progressive town and city in the United States. You Representatives of the East, North, and the West join hands with your brother Representatives of the South and help us put over this great project that will in a few years mean as much or more to your people than it means to ours.

Let us look at this proposition from a business standpoint. We are supposed to be average business men; if not, we are not competent to be good Representatives. Up to date millions of dollars have been spent toward the completion of this great enterprise. Would it be good business sense to stop the work now and throw away the millions already invested? I think not. As I see the situation, we should not hesitate to make the necessary appropriations to complete the job and thus give to the world the greatest object lesson, for the benefit of all the people, ever conceived in the minds of men.

I will not discuss the bill under consideration at length. The bill, if passed as it came from the Military Affairs Committee, will greatly hamper the T. V. A. in the progress of its work. In fact, some portions of the bill, if enacted into law, will be absolutely destructive to future developments. It is nothing more than fair to the T. V. A. and to the people they represent that we pass a bill that will help rather than hinder the progress of this great work.

The people of this country, like the Three Wise Men of the East, have seen the star of hope and will not cease their onward march until they reach the place where they may receive some of the rights, lights, and benefits that God made possible for them when he created the hills and the rivers of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TURNER. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. I did not want to interrupt the excellent speech of the gentleman from Tennessee, but I could not let the Committee rise for the evening without making this observation in answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], in which he outlined certain advantages that he claimed the Tennessee Valley Authority had. The record of the hearings discloses the fact that the rebate on freight rates from the land-grant railroad does not amount to more than three ten-thousandths of a cent per kilowatt-hour. And as to the further statement he made that the Tennessee Valley Authority was not required to pay postage, this is not true, as the record of the hearings discloses that the Tennessee Valley Authority pays postage on its bills that it mails out, and that it does not enjoy any other advantages not enjoyed by privately owned public utilities.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DRIVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8632) to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALLOTMENT OF FUNDS TO THE UNITED STATES FOREST SERVICE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am very much interested in the United States Forest Service, and in prefacing my remarks with regard thereto let me quote from a speech given by our great leader, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States:

It is common sense and not fantasy to invest money in tree crops just as much as to grow annual agricultural crops. The return on the investment is just as certain in the case of growing trees as it is in the case of growing potatoes or cotton or wheat or corn; and judging by present-day fluctuations in the prices of agricultural crops the tree crop is often a safer investment.

Because we are a young Nation, because apparently limitless forests have stood at our door, we have declined up to now to think of the future. Other nations whose primeval forests were cut off a thousand years ago have been growing tree crops for many hundreds of years.

I am convinced that herein lies a fertile field, not only for the legitimate investment of capital but also for the employment of labor.

Well I remember the days of my youth at L'Anse, Mich., reared in the midst of what people now refer to as the "whispering pines." I recall the old-time lumberjack who went into the virgin forests to log out the timber which, at that time, people thought was inexhaustible. Well I remember the hum of the sawmills as I worked in that great industry of the logging of timber. Well I remember how the timber was slashed and cut without any regard to the future of the industry.

Well I remember those logging officials who had no thought for the social security of those communities but had only a thought of making money fast and leaving nothing behind but sawdust and scrap iron, the remains of what was once a hustling, busy sawmill town. Well I remember the old slashings that were left behind, only to be a fire hazard and the cause of many devastating forest fires that destroyed thousands of acres of valuable timber and endangered the lives of thousands of people. Well I remember the working in the sawmills, the woods, logging camps, and planing mills at Odanah, Wis., for the J. S. Stearns Lumber Co., where the finest stand of white pine and Norway timber in the United States was slashed out, leaving nothing but barren land and a ghost town. An example of what these monsters, devastation and ignorance as to forestry, have done to one of our greatest of all industries.

If you men and women could only go through my district in northern Michigan and see the thousands of people on the relief rolls, put there by the monsters just mentioned, people practically starving through no fault of their own, you could readily agree with me that the remarks I made on March 7, 1935, with regard to the resolution introduced by me, asking for a basic-data survey of the natural resources of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan are correct.

I hope you will give real consideration to the attempt I am making in behalf of that great worthy governmental agency to have a proper allocation of funds from the $4,880,000,000 fund, toward the end that the program of the United States Forest Service may be effective.

The Democratic Party has recognized the fact that we must preserve our forests, and Franklin D. Roosevelt during his campaign for President said:

We also know, as a practical matter, that unless something is done with this land the timber on it will have comparatively little value when it comes to maturity. It needs the aid of man to clear out the dead wood and encourage only the growth that will best serve the national need in the days to come.

Is there any good reason, financial, common sense, or otherwise, why the Federal Government should not undertake the proper care of its own property? Here again is another field for the employment of great numbers of our citizens.

I know that this is one of the things that our great leader of the Democratic Party believes in. I know this project is close to his heart, because he knows that the very lives of thousands of people depend on it. Almost too late people have awakened to the fact that their forests are not inexhaustible. Reforestation is not a lost art, even though some of our so-called "professional sociologists" would lead us to believe that the better plan of rehabilitation lies in other forms of work relief.

It seems to me, and I know that this is the thought of the great majority of this House, that the work-relief funds should be spent on projects from which the Nation and the people will derive the most benefit. I mean lasting, constructive benefit; not the temporary benefit of a little work now and back on the relief when the $4,880,000,000 has been spent, but spent in a way that it will help the wheels of industry to begin to move and save some of the industries that are now being threatened with extinction (including forestry). I cannot understand why the Allotment Board did not grant the $156,000,000 for the Forest Service. If they would consider it now, it is not too late to preserve our forests, one of our greatest natural resources.

I trust that the members of that Board will give consideration to the Forest Service and allot the proper amount of money so that the Forest Service can carry out the carefully laid plans. If they do, I assure you we will take 90 percent of the people of my district off the relief rolls and keep them off.

For your information let me say that over 50 percent of the people in my district are on relief.

I am asking, in the name of humanity, to help us to help ourselves. Give us the proper amount to develop the lumber industry under scientific plans and you will have no need for relief directors or agents in my district. Oh, possibly that may have something to do with the present plans. The social-service workers would be out of a job, and that would be just too bad.

THE UNITED STATES FOREST SERVICE

The United States Forest Service was established by act of Congress in 1905, by enlargement of the old Bureau of Forestry of the Department of Agriculture and the transfer to it of the forest reserves previously administered by the General Land Office of the Department of the Interior.

Prior to that time the technical forestry work of the Government had been carried on by the Department of Agriculture, while the forest reserves, which had been created under the acts of 1891 and 1897 to protect the remaining timber and important watersheds on the public domain from destruction, had been without an adequate administration based upon knowledge of the principles of forestry. Government administration of the reserves had made apparent the necessity for scientific forestry to make their use adequately serve public needs. It had been the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe regulations which would insure the fulfillment of the objects aimed at in creating the reserves. Timber cutting must provide for the growing of a new timber crop.

Unrestricted grazing had seriously injured the range; it was necessary to devise methods for increasing the forage crop. Both timber use and grazing use must be so managed that water supplies would be maintained and bettered. All the resources of the forests needed to be given careful consideration and plans devised for their best development. Without such plans little of the value of the forests to the public could be secured. Technical problems were involved which the officials of the Interior Department felt to be outside their province. They, therefore, at first requested the aid of the forestry experts of the Department of Agriculture as advisors and soon recommended the transfer of administration of the reserves to the Department of Agriculture.

In 1907 the name "forest reserves" was changed to "national forests" by act of Congress, to indicate that their resources are not locked up as "reserves" for a distant future. National forests are under Government management for the purpose of securing sound development of large areas of timberland in the best interests of the public, socially and economically.

The policy under which the national forests are administered by the Department of Agriculture through the Forest Service was laid down by the Secretary of Agriculture in a letter to the Chief of the Forest Service, dated February 1, 1905, in which he said:

In the administration of the forest reserves it must be clearly borne in mind that all land is to be devoted to its most productive use for the permanent good of the whole people and not for the temporary benefit of individuals or companies. All the resources of the forest reserves are for use, and this must be brought about in a thoroughly prompt and businesslike manner, under such restrictions only as will insure the permanence of these resources. * * * You will see to it that the water, wood, and forage of the reserves are conserved and wisely used for the benefit of the home builder first of all, upon whom depends the best permanent use of lands and resources alike. The continued prosperity of the agricultural, lumbering, mining, and livestock interests is directly dependent upon a permanent and accessible supply of water, wood, and forage, as well as upon the present and future use of these resources under businesslike regulations enforced with promptness, effectiveness, and common sense. In the management of each reserve local questions will be decided upon local grounds, the dominant industry will be considered first, but with as little restriction to minor industries as may be possible; sudden changes in industrial conditions will be avoided by gradual adjustment after due notice, and where conflicting interests must be reconciled the question will always be decided from the standpoint of the greatest good of the greatest number in the long run.

Lands which are more valuable for agriculture than for forestry purposes have been excluded from the national forests either by changes in the forest boundaries or by being opened to settlement and entry under the Forest Homestead Act of June 11, 1906. The act of August 10, 1912, which directed that the national-forest lands be classified for the purpose of determining those which are chiefly valuable for agriculture, has resulted in practically all agricultural lands within the national forests being listed for entry in the United States land offices.

Mineral deposits within national forests, except such forests as were purchased under the act of March 1, 1911, are open to development exactly as on unreserved public land unless otherwise provided by special acts of Congress.

By the time the national-forest system began, virtually all except some inferior remnants of the public domain within the States east of the Great Plains had passed to State or private ownership. The poor lands remaining in Federal control were inadequate to meet public needs. The purchase of additional lands valuable for the protection of the headwaters of navigable streams or for timber production and their reorganization as national forests were therefore authorized by Congress, first by the act of March 1, 1911, called the "Weeks law", and later by the amendatory act of June 7, 1924, known as the "Clarke-McNary law." For the conduct of this purchase work the Weeks law established the National Forest Reservation Commission, which consists of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, 2 Members of the Senate, and 2 Members of the House of Representatives.

Under this purchase program, as the Government obtains title the forests are put under systematic management with the object of improving their regulative effect upon streamflow and of increasing the supply of forest products. The timber alone on the eastern national forest lands purchased up to 1933 has a present value greater than the entire cost to the Government of acquiring these lands, although much of the land had been depleted by lumbering and fires before it was purchased. Under the practice of forestry the stands of timber are increasing at the same time that the protective value of the cover as a regulator of stream flow is materially improved.

The purchase program for national forests in the East was greatly enlarged when, on May 20, 1933, the President allotted by an Executive order $20,000,000 of emergency funds for the acquisition of lands for national-forest purposes. A supplement allotment of $10,000,000 was made in 1934.

These funds were exhausted on March 31 of this year. Approximately 8,000,000 acres were approved for purchase under these allotments, bringing the total area of lands Federally owned or in process of acquisition for national-forest purposes east of the Great Plains to a little over 14,000,000 acres.

Along with the administration of the national forests, the Forest Service has had the responsibility of promoting and aiding the development of State forestry and private forestry.

There are in the United States some 420,000,000 acres of land owned by States and private individuals, the principal value of which is for growing forests. In order to bring about the protection of these lands from fire and the replanting of the forests where they have been destroyed, the Federal Government offers financial aid to the States under the provisions of the Clarke-McNary law of 1924.

The number of cooperating States in fire protection is 39, and the total area of State and private land covered by this protection is approximately 266,000,000 acres, a little over half of the total area in need of protection.

During 1932 the total area of forest land in the United States which was reported as having been burned over was 43,500,000 acres. By far the larger part of the area burned over—40,000,000 acres—was unprotected land, an indication of the value of organized protection.

The funds provided by the Federal Government for this work in the fiscal year ending July 1, 1935, were $1,436,987 and State and private funds budgeted for the same period totaled $4,508,248. These projects are administered by the State forestry departments, with which the United States Forest Service cooperates in developing plans and inspecting the work. Under the terms of the law the Federal Government limits its expenditures in a given fiscal year to a sum not greater in each State than the funds expended by the State and private owners.

The Forest Service is also cooperating under the Clarke-McNary law with 40 States, including Puerto Rico and Hawaii, in the production and distribution of forest planting stock for windbreaks, shelter belts, and farm woodlands. A total of approximately 25,000,000 trees is distributed each year in these projects.

Another form of assistance offered by the Government under the Clarke-McNary law is aid to farm-woodland owners in the management and care of their timber. In this project Department of Agriculture and the Forest Service are cooperating with 31 States and Puerto Rico. The work is focused particularly on the more efficient management of farm woodlands, the reforestation of those farm lands not now suitable for agricultural crops, and the marketing and utilization of farm timber. Approximately 127,000,000 acres, or about one-third of the forest land of the country is in farm woodlands.

Comparable in importance with the administration of the national forests are the many investigative activities in field, laboratory, and office that are grouped under the heading of forest research. These investigations cover a wide range of subjects, including the growth, management, and protection of the forests, the management of livestock range within forest areas, and the conservative and effective utilization of forest products, as well as the economic features of forest ownership, production of lumber and other products, and the country's present and future need for timber.

By far the greater part of the investigative work is conducted at 11 forest experiment stations in regional units that roughly correspond to the major forest regions of the country. In each, so far as the needs of the region require, are represented the investigative activities relating to forest management and protection, forest products, forest economics, and range research.

The research work of the Forest Service has built up, and continues to build up, a vast fund of knowledge of forestry methods necessary to proper administration of the national forests, and it is rendering great service to other agencies of the Government and to State and private agencies concerned with related problems, such as erosion control, livestock grazing, and so forth. A number of younger governmental agencies are developing important phases of their programs on the basis of knowledge and technique developed by Forest Service research. By making available to the public the results of its research in the fields of wood utilization, silviculture, range management, and forest economics the Forest Service has helped wood-using industries, ranchers, and others to save millions of dollars.

In the past 30 years the Forest Service has amply demonstrated its capacity to meet the responsibilities of public service it was charged with in 1905. It has developed an organization of trained men, an organization of high ideals and high professional standards, universally recognized for its honesty and efficiency.

The decentralized organization of the Forest Service enables it to transact business with the public directly on the ground and keep in close contact with the needs of the public it serves. As the Chief Forester, Mr. F. A. Silcox, said in a statement to a group of his men at Ogden last fall:

> I firmly believe that it is essential to tie and integrate the Forest Service to the local communities on a democratic basis. And I want the citizens of the United States to watch the person pushing the action button; to have wide-open the channels by which those processes and their effects can be seen. For we have an opportunity to prove that it is possible to keep a governmental bureaucracy, if you please, so closely related, through decentralization and through closely integrated contact with the people of the community, that they have a real and an actual voice—not merely a gesture—in vital questions of policy which affect them.
>
> I firmly believe the Forest Service, through its experience of over 30 years, is going to maintain that point of view. I know we have the group spirit. I find, in the management of forest lands, a great opportunity to prove conclusively that you can go along operating a bureaucracy which does not become hidebound, inaccessible, and crystallized in a set mold. We have proved, and we can prove, that the dangers of bureaucracy can be avoided; that it can keep itself close and responsive enough to the citizens of the United States so that they can feel that the organization is their servant and is doing its job for the citizens of the United States rather than superimposing on them regimentation and regulation.

The efficiency and flexibility of its organization and its long experience in meeting emergency situations enabled the Forest Service in 1933 to expand almost overnight its program of forest improvement and protection work many times over, to take care of some 80 percent of the work program of the C. C. C. On top of this it provided some 26,000,000 man-days of useful work in the national forests last year as a contribution to unemployment relief, through public-works funds allotted to it. Through all this vastly expanded work program the Forest Service has stuck to its old established policy of getting a dollar's value for every dollar spent.

The Forest Service was the first group in this country which emphasized, and kept on emphasizing, the need for conservation of timber, soil, grass, water power, and the need for planned land use. It has successfully carried on planned land-use management for 30 years in the national forests. Under the so-called "multiple use" system by which the national forests are administered, all areas within a given unit are devoted to the use for which they are best suited and by which they can best contribute to the social and economic welfare of the local communities and the Nation as a whole. Such uses might be timber production, grazing of livestock, watershed protection, range for wildlife, or recreation, or a combination of these, and all these uses are coordinated within the given land unit under carefully worked out, long-term management plans that look always to the fullest utilization of the resources on a sustained or continuing basis, and the greatest good to the greatest number of people.

The plan of management for the national forests seeks to make them the nucleus around which sound communities can be developed and maintained. Through the sustained and orderly use of their resources, local communities dependent upon those resources may be assured of continuous life instead of "boom and bust"; they are assured of stable industries giving stable employment, and thus of sound social and economic life. Through the program of land purchases for national-forest purposes the Forest Service is extending such beneficial management into many forest areas that otherwise would sooner or later be destined to become vast rural slums. In most of these areas the job of rehabilitation the Forest Service must undertake is a huge one, but the processes of orderly public management of substantial areas in these regions will from the start provide a groundwork for the development of stable communities.

In 30 years the United States Forest Service has built up a splendid record of leadership in conservation. It has led the way in showing by successful, large-scale demonstration that the basic resource, the land, and its products can be utilized and yet maintained, that they can be managed for permanence instead of being exploited and destroyed.

THE OTTAWA NATIONAL FOREST

This forest lies in the western portion of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan and includes a gross area of 1,738,553 acres. Of the gross area, 347,619 acres have either been purchased by the Government or have been optioned and the options approved by the National Forest Reservation Commission.

A study was made of the problems that confronted the Twelfth District of Michigan, and upon the basis of this study, coupled with my efforts and the efforts of the citizens of my district, that National Forest Reservation Commission approved the inclusion of Ontonagon and Gogebic Counties as a part of the Ottawa National Forest. It is my hope that we will extend this purchase to every other county in my district.

There are at this time in Gogebic, Ontonagon, Iron, Houghton, Keweenaw, Marquette, Baraga, and Dickinson Counties approximately 105,000 people on relief, costing approximately $650,000 per month. The total population of these counties is 204,608.

A development of the area from a forestry standpoint, if acquired by the Government, will provide 5,963,000 man-days of work; 9,800 employables, or two-thirds of the total number on relief, could be absorbed in national-forest work for the next 2½ years at a cost per man a year of $700. That is as to the immediate situation. These men would be working on Government property increasing its value, and in the long run the job would be liquidating.

Within the Ottawa National Forest the major remnant of virgin timber in the State of Michigan exists. Within Ontonogan and Gogebic Counties and immediately adjacent to these counties there are six sawmills plus a considerable industry engaged in the removal of pulpwood and other forest products. Approximately half of the people are dependent upon the wood-using industries for a livelihood. Within 10 to 15 years these industries will pass out of the picture, and the 20,000 people now supported by wood utilization will have to migrate elsewhere. The schools, the churches, and roads, and the communities themselves will of necessity be liquidated, and there will exist six more ghost towns to the credit of exploitation of renewable natural resources.

According to the analysis of the Forest Service, if under Government control or ownership, this timber could be operated under good forestry principles, the present employment could be continued, and in fact increased somewhat immediately and to a greater extent as time went on. The choice clearly indicated lies between the ultimate destruction of the means of livelihood of 20,000 people or the initiation of forestry methods that will insure permanent woods work for all time.

The Ottawa National Forest including the major extension in Ontonogan and Gogebic Counties was recommended to the National Forest Reservation Commission for approval on the basis of the economic and social security of the people and the industries lying within its confines. The success of the whole plan is contingent upon the carrying to a successful conclusion the acquisition program as approved by the Commission. It is the hope of the Forest Service that if through partial ownership of the available stumpage the Government can carry some of the load, the industrial structure will carry the remainder and operate the timber under proper cutting methods.

The opportunity exists within this area to establish a public forest comparable to the best European forests, with a sustained yield of forest products that will support 20,000 people in the production and fabrication of wood. By the same token, if remedial action is not taken, the area will follow the course that has been universal in the remainder of the timberlands of the State, with no employment and the ultimate destruction of all values now existing.

Relief statistics and other data with regard to the immediate situation and what might be done are attached.

County	Population	Relief families	Persons on relief	Percent on relief	Employables	Relief load, month of May
Iron	20,045	3,000	14,000	70	2,800	$70,000
Houghton	54,000	5,300	21,600	40	2,000	180,000
Gogebic	31,577	4,200	17,900	55	2,500	140,000
Ontonogan	11,114	2,775	7,400	65	2,000	60,000
Baraga	10,000	852	3,608	36	580	19,200
Total	126,736	16,127	64,508	----	9,880	469,200

The purchase objective for the next year on this forest is set at 800,000 acres. Including mature timber cases, the average cost per acre is estimated to be $10.76.

The above acreage, on basis of planned work, will provide 3,556,000 man-days of work, or 177,800 man-months, on basis of 20 days to the month.

At $44 per month, the cost of work relief for the 9,800 employables now on relief amounts to $5,174,400 for 1 year.

At $44 per month, the total work available on the 800,000 acres to be purchased in the next 12 months would cost $7,823,200.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following copy of a letter sent to Members of the House of Representatives urging them to sign a petition at the Clerk's desk to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from consideration of House Joint Resolution 300, directing the payment of the adjusted-service certificates to World War veterans out of the appropriation of $4,800,000,000 for public works:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 8, 1935.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: I am writing to notify you that I filed today, at the Clerk's desk, a petition to discharge the Committee on Appropriations of House Joint Resolution 300, authorizing and directing the payment of the adjusted-service certificates to World War veterans out of the appropriations of $4,000,000,000 and the unexpended balance for Public Works made by the previous Congress. The payment of the certificates to be made under the terms and conditions set forth in the so-called "Vinson bill", reported by the Ways and Means Committee and sponsored by the American Legion.

Most veterans are in debt and in need and are apprehensive if they are not paid now that the certificates may be paid within a few years on the basis of a third of the present value of the dollar or less.

The reduction of the value of the dollar has already violated the contract made with the veterans in 1925. In view of the fact that billions of dollars have been doled out of the Treasury to various groups throughout the country there should be no discrimination against the World War veterans nor should the obligation due them be paid in further depreciated currency.

From information I have received, veterans and business men generally would favor the adoption of the above proposal. Trusting you will take the first opportunity to sign your name to the petition and expedite favorable action, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH, Jr.

LABOR MUST KNOW WHAT THEY WANT

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech which I delivered June 28, 1935, at the John Marshall High School, Richmond, Va., before the Central Trades and Labor Council and several other labor organizations of Virginia:

Friends and fellow Americans, I am appreciative of the wonderful introduction that has just been given me and to be once again called a "war hero." It's a great thing to be a war "hero." You can go off to another country, get killed, a leg shot off, get your eyes shot out, your nose and ears off, or come back with a disease, and then be a hero. That might be called the "fruits of war", or preferably, "the glories of war." I can remember when I came back from the war, that it was the first time that I ever had my picture in the paper. I was mighty proud. But before long I got to thinking and when I got to thinking and saying what I thought, they called me other kinds of things. And that makes me think that you are not always what they call you. Of course, I wasn't a hero—I just got ordered to France and got in the way of some high explosive. It is only when you do something independent and use your own head that you get called what you are not. It is only when you get your head shot off that you get to be a hero; but if you "shoot your own head off" you're a Bolshevik.

Which brings me to this point, that I am over here to speak before the labor organizations of Virginia and to help you organize into a strong union or unions, and I assure you that if you do you are not going to get called "heroes." You may get called anarchists, Communists, cutthroats, criminals, and murderers, but not heroes. I suppose that in this audience that about 90 percent of you come from old American stock, and to call you radicals, or the things I mentioned, is simply ridiculous. But I'll guarantee you that they will call you plenty, as they did me when I began to say what I thought, and at first it burned me up. But now, since I've met a few real men in Washington, like Senators WHEELER, COSTIGAN, LA FOLLETTE, BONE, and Senator NORRIS—who, by the way, is the greatest living American—and realize the persecution through which they have gone and always will go as long as they live and stand up for what is right, for real constitutional liberties, and for trying to make this a decent country to live in—well, now, I can take anything.

You see, the way they try to end an argument now is to call a man a Communist. Ordinarily, the man who says it is a coward or a fool and to call any man who is born in this country, who doesn't know any more about Russia than he does about the tenth dimension, is just silly. So I guarantee you in advance that you are going to be called everything if you organize, but I say organize, and when you get called things you are not, don't get burned up—just tell them to "go to hell" and go on and organize.

I might as well start out by saying that the labor movement is not anywhere nearly as strong as it ought to be; that it is not unified, and I doubt very much whether many of its members know exactly what they are fighting for, except higher wages. What economic principles are they for? How do they stand on constitutional questions? Well, I should say that they have taken no definite stand, and don't know exactly what they want.

There's been a lot of talk lately about the Constitution, about our forefathers, and so on. I haven't come into Virginia to give you any particular advice, but I hope that Virginia, with its rich heritage of liberalism and some of the real great men in America, can again join the vanguard of the liberal States and liberal citizens of this country and help save the country once again. Virginia has done it before, and there's no reason why she can't do it again. Anyhow, we hear so much talk about the Constitution now, that we might go into some of the details of it, and also some details of the Declaration of Independence, and of things in general.

I really don't think its necessary to go into all these details, except that the matter has been discussed; because whenever the American people know what they want, whenever they have in their minds exactly how they can get out of this depression and work together, they can succeed in doing it. No constitution and no law can keep them from doing that, because when they know what they want, the Constitution and laws will be made to suit the people. In the meantime, they must live under the Constitution our forefathers made around a hundred and fifty years ago and laws enacted in accordance with that instrument.

But let us first consider the Declaration of Independence. We talk a lot about the Declaration of Independence and being free-born Americans, but it seems to me people have stopped reading it and have almost forgotten what is in it. Now, the Declaration of Independence at least means one thing: That we should have a right to work hard enough to live as free people, and that we should have a right to be happy with a decent standard of living. Also, that we should be independent and free-thinking, free-speaking, free-living American citizens. I think we can all agree to that. But we are told by great lawyers that the Declaration of Independence doesn't mean anything; that it was merely written, and that when the Articles of Confederation were adopted and the Constitution was adopted, that the rights called for and the aspirations expressed in the Declaration were eliminated.

Now, of course, from a viewpoint of the interpretation of what is actually written, that is literally true. However, we must remember that the Declaration of Independence was of a free people from the British Empire, and that we are no longer a part of the British Empire. If the Declaration is not in effect, at least in spirit, we are still a part of the British Empire. I'm here to say that we had a Declaration of Independence; we got our independence, and the spirit of the Declaration should still be in effect.

Now, fellow Americans, especially Virginians, all know about the Declaration of Independence, and you all know that it was largely written by Thomas Jefferson, great American and Virginian. We all know that it is one of the greatest documents that the world has ever known, and I am going to read just 110 of these immortal words to you. It tells the whole story, and everybody ought to read it over as often as they can. They are as follows:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish and institute a new government, laying its foundations on the principles and organizing its power in such form as to them shall seem more likely to effect their safety and happiness."

You will see that this document refers to rights—and to inalienable rights—that means that rights cannot be alienated or taken away from you; it refers to life, and when it says life it doesn't mean merely to exist, to half starve to death, with ignorant and sick children having no chance for an education or no chance in life at all. You will see also that it says liberty, and it doesn't mean the liberty to starve to death, but the liberty to live in a decent country where we have plenty of everything if we are willing to work. It says we are entitled to happiness, and we can't be happy when we are half starved and our children are growing up in ignorance and disease. It means full political freedom, and it also says that you have a right to change as you see fit, any government. There is absolutely nothing wrong with that and, as we know, if, before the Civil War, we could have effected certain changes and understandings through the Constitution and law, why, then, we might have saved ourselves that war. I do not say that we are likely now, or any time in the future, to have a civil war, or a revolution, even disorders, but I do say that it's plain, ordinary common sense to have a right to alter or change or improve your government if the government doesn't suit you. There's nothing radical about it; that's common sense; and, moreover, it's guaranteed to us in the Constitution. The citizens of this country who are really destructive of the government, and destructive of the right of the continuity of our national life, are the reactionaries who call themselves "conservatives"—who conserve nothing for the country and who are not willing to give up anything whatsoever, and who would keep all the abuses of today rather than make a change and give fair government to the people. They want to keep their cake and eat it, too, and cannot even realize the only way they can continue to eat is for everybody to eat.

Let us pass to the Constitution. We are speaking tonight in the John Marshall High School, named after a famous man who is revered by millions of Americans, but I suggest that sometimes you read something of his decisions, particularly Marbury v. Madison, and that you discuss its meaning and implications with your lawyers. As for John Marshall, he was the greatest enemy that Thomas Jefferson, the progressive, ever had. They despised each other and they had reasons for it. I shall not have time to go into all the details tonight, but at least, it is worthy of your future thought.

Now, I'm going to quote Thomas Jefferson on the Constitution. You will understand that I'm not saying this; it is something that Thomas Jefferson said a long time ago. No good Virginian can object to a Texan quoting Jefferson, and especially in what was once the national capital of Texas. The reason I quote this is that there is a great deal of discussion now about the powers of the courts of the country and the powers of Congress. Anyhow, here is what Thomas Jefferson said:

"It has long, however, been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the constitution of the Federal judiciary; an irresponsible body, working like gravity by night and day, gaining a little today and a little tomorrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction, et cetera."

Again, he said:

"Some men look at constitutions with sanctimonious reverence, and deem them like the Ark of the Covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. I know that age well; it was very like the present, but without the experience of the present; and 40 years of experience in government is worth a century of book-reading; and this they would say for themselves were they to arise from the dead." Listen closely, fellow Americans—he uses the words, "Were they to arise from the dead." Suppose Thomas Jefferson should rise from the dead, would he recognize some of the people using his name in vain? But he continues, "But I know also, that laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind, as that becomes more developed, more enlightened, as new discoveries were made, new truths disclosed, and manners and opinions changed with the change of circumstances, institutions must advance also, and keep pace with the times. We might as well require a man to wear still the coat which fitted him when a boy as civilized society to remain ever under the regiment of their barbarous ancestors."

That was what the great progressive Jefferson said over a hundred years ago. Jefferson is quoted by the reactionaries to prove we should never change or advance, but we have his own words that we should. He was a fair man; and he did not want to rule us from the tomb for a hundred and fifty years hence. Neither should we try to do it for those who will live a hundred and fifty years from now. Let us leave our descendants a decent place to live in and let them alone.

He also said:

"To lose our country by a scrupulous adherence to written law would be to lose the law itself with life, liberty, property, and all those who are enjoying them with us; thus absurdly sacrificing the end to the means, * * *. The unwritten laws of necessity, of self-preservation, and of the public safety control the written laws of mine and thine."

In discussing the Constitution, I suggest that you study the general-welfare clause and all its implications. The general-welfare clause has been forgotten in a maze of technicalities and it is hard to discuss in this speech. Give it study sometime.

But let us jump completely from Thomas Jefferson to Abraham Lincoln. He said:

"This country with its institutions belong to the people who inhabit it."

I suppose it is fortunate he is dead—he would be called a Socialist or a Communist for saying that now.

I repeat, fellow Americans, that the only reason I am quoting these famous Americans is to show some of the true light of history and also because our opponents and our enemies are always quoting our ancestors to suit their own ends. They take the bones of our ancestors out and rattle them around, and they generally always give out a hollow sound, because they are not quoting the true beliefs of the person, or else they are perverting the true ideas. Let's take Jefferson again, who is being misquoted now by the reactionaries: Time after time he has criticized any invasion of the liberties of the people; he always stood for economic justice; he opposed white ignorance and black slavery; he always, in numerous statements, wanted it so that the Constitution could be changed; stated that there would be a scientific advance, and changes should be made to meet this advance. Undoubtedly, he had some idea of the scientific advance that was to come, because he was something of a scientist himself. Even at that it was impossible for him to foresee the gigantic advance that was to be made, and the tremendous changes of modern industrial life. Have our people an inferiority complex? We hear people say, "Here are we, an ignorant people, trying to amend the Constitution written by Thomas Jefferson!" Then, if somebody suggests a progressive idea, some reactionary or half-wit says: "They must think they are smarter than Thomas Jefferson"—and so on; but Thomas Jefferson himself, as I have shown you, had no such idea. He wanted society to progress; he was himself a believer in constant change to meet the demands of the people. To the Constitution, he demanded that the Bill of Rights be added, which is principally known because it proclaims liberty of speech, conscience, and religion, and prevents arbitrary searches and seizures; this is a fundamental part of the philosophy of Jefferson, and, I should say, of true Americanism.

Now to go on about our Government here, and the Declaration of Independence written by Jefferson. As you know, he called himself a "Republican", but a Republican in those days meant Democrat, and he was the father of the Democratic Party. So let us consider what the mission of that party is. Yes, what is the mission of the Democratic Party? Is it to confuse the voters and give them misquotations of our ancestors and keep them starving for the sake of their ancestors? Are you people in Virginia, who have more ancestors per square foot than any other part of the country; who as a matter of fact have more real Americans per capita (at least, historically) in your history than any other State; are you to give up your rights because you had ancestors? Are we in Texas, at the same time, to turn all of our rights over to the bankers of Wall Street and let them drain our State of all its agricultural resources, take away our mineral resources, our oil and our gas, and ship it out of the State without even paying adequate taxes on it? That's really what's happening, fellow citizens, not just in Virginia and Texas, but all over the United States. This Declaration of Independence, in the early days of our history, was kept, except for the period of the Adams administration, when they had the alien and sedition acts; when they tried to keep people from talking and even criticizing the Government.

And what are we doing now? There is before Congress now a so-called "military disaffection bill" worse than the alien and sedition acts—this in a Democratic administration. This modern alien and sedition act, or I might say "military disaffection bill", makes it so that you cannot criticize the Army and Navy and, in effect, makes the Army and Navy supreme over the citizens of the country. This has always been since our beginning, a country in which the civil population is supposed to be superior to the military population; in fact, the military is supposed to take orders from the civilian population or the civil government. There seems to be an effort, and a concerted one at that, to take away the liberties of the people. You should be very jealous of this and should guard your liberties. The same people, the Tories of yesterday and the National Chamber of Commerce of today, are advocating this infamous, un-American bill. You hear the Tories of today yelling about the Constitution when it concerns some real or fancied property right, but they are actively favoring the violation of the Constitution in the military disaffection bill. They get very pious and self-righteous about it, too.

But to go on about liberty—what did Jefferson say after he got to be President? He said:

"I am for freedom of the press and against all violations of the Constitution to silence by force and not by reason the complaints and criticisms, just or unjust, of our citizens against the conduct of their agents."

Thomas Jefferson before, during, and after being President was what we call in Texas "puro hombre"—a good man—and "muy gallo"—very courageous.

Then, on the general subject of liberty and the rights of the people, and the Declaration of Independence, right of freedom of speech, and to live like human beings, let us quote again that eminent Virginian of recent years, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, who was born in Staunton, and who later became President of the United States. He said as follows:

"I can imagine no greater disservice to the country than to establish a system of censorship that would deny the people of a free republic like our own their indisputable right to criticize their own public officials."

Then, after that, Woodrow Wilson, discussing the criticism of the acts of public officials, said that they had tried to make it unlawful to criticize the Government. He said: "Well, if it is, then there is a deep disgrace resting upon the origin of this Nation. This Nation originated in the sharpest thought of criticism of public policy." In other words, he suggested that the American people criticize just as much as they please.

And then they tell us we shouldn't talk too much nowadays—it used to be all right, but it isn't any more—and, again, I'm not saying this, it's Woodrow Wilson talking again in his book the New Freedom. Here's what he says: "Why are we in the presence, why are we at the threshold of a revolution? Because we are profoundly disturbed by the influences which we see reigning in the determination of our public life and our public policy."

Now, my friends, I have talked to you a long time and have said a lot about history. We discussed the Declaration of Independence, which means, I hope, that we have a right for liberty and independence; I mentioned the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and the right to talk, think, and pray as we please; I have mentioned the general-welfare clause in the Constitution, and, in general, have taken up a good deal of time. The main reason, however, that this is important is to refute some of the statements ordinarily made by people who are continuously ranting about the past. They misinterpret, as I said, the sayings of these ancestors, and they misinterpret the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence; they take the corpses of our ancestors and turn them backward and upside down; but they know no more than we do about history.

I cannot come to Virginia with the idea of telling you people of Virginia what to do. However, as I said once before, I'm an American, and so are you. With your aristocratic traditions you can go on and on if you want to. You can have your coats of arms, but I want my potatoes. I would rather have decent clothes and educate my children and live in freedom and cleanliness than to starve as a moldy aristocrat. I think this is true also of 99$^{44}/_{100}$ percent of the people of Virginia. I believe in an aristocracy of intellect, of courage, and of knowledge, but do not believe simply in an aristocracy which holds people down by yelping about ancestors. Thomas Jefferson was an aristocrat and didn't want to keep the people down. He was an aristocrat of courage and intellect.

Therefore let me try to get down to business. I hate to make a big speech and then have people go off and say, as they do about some speeches, "He made a good speech" or "He made a rotten speech", and you walk down the street and you can't even remember what the speaker had to say.

So I'll get down to what our problems are now, also making historical references. After the Civil War—and I know what I'm talking about, because I lived in Virginia and have talked to the people who lived there, including my mother—and the Yankees had burned things up and had caused plenty of havoc and waste—over in Albemarle County, when General Sheridan left, it was a pretty badly knocked out place. But you take in those days, they went in the back yard and the well was still there, and they got some water. The Yankees hadn't killed all the cows because they had wanted some milk, I suppose, or possibly some cream for the Yankee captain's coffee. So as soon as the Yankees left, they could still get water and they could still get milk, there were a few razorback hogs left, a couple of barrels of molasses, and maybe a little corn to make corn bread with—and maybe a little corn whisky, too. The old mill, down by the river, was still there—I can remember that mill as plain as yesterday, because it was still standing back in 1905, when I was a kid visiting there. So they went to work and made tallow candles, and they had light; they still had a few books, and they had learning. But what happens now? The first thing that happened when a man loses his job, he lives in the fifteenth story of a tenement house or an apartment house, or maybe just in a little house. He doesn't own it anyway, and the first thing they do is turn his water off, so his children and family can famish. Then he hasn't got a candle any more, so they turn his lights out. Finally they chuck him into the street.

Now, why is that? The answer is plain as day: The national resources are no longer in the hands of the people.

Remember that, if you remember nothing else. So, that is a problem which is different now than before.

Now, what could a man do in the old days? If they robbed him and took away his money and he got poor, he could move farther West.

He could move up over the mountains, or out over the plains. The resources were there; there were fertile fields to farm; there was game to kill and eat and a chance always for the people. That's the reason it didn't make much difference about laws and how often a man was robbed by exploiters. Then, we talk again about our ancestors! They tell us about how Thomas Jefferson says: "Those are best governed who are least governed." The reactionaries always tell about that. And, of course, government should not interfere with everything, but in those days the resources were where the people could get at them, and they could live on these resources, but now they can no longer do this. Therefore, I must tell you that the resources of the people, having been taken away from them, should be returned to them; and what Jefferson said would then still be true, for if the resources are in the hands of the people, and they have a chance to live decently by their own work, you do not have to have many laws with which to govern them.

The platforms of the Democratic Party and various parties—and I am not here praising my party—the ideas of our predecessors, the ideas of all honest men are that there should not be monopolies. I think it well established that if there is such a thing as a monopoly, that it should not belong to unregulated private hands for unregulated private profit. If it is unregulated, it is the power to govern and tax without the consent of the governed. Your light company is a monopoly. Your water company is a monopoly, and is probably owned by your city. So these monopolies which control natural resources are in your way and they keep you from making a living. They let wealth accumulate in a few hands; and with profit in so few hands the cost to the consumer is either prohibitive or exorbitant and there is less chance for employment.

So I am going to suggest to you a program for your labor organizations here in Richmond, and over the State of Virginia, and you don't have to take it if you don't want to. It's just for discussion. I'll give you my ideas, and if you want to adopt them it's all right; and if you don't, it's all right. But do something; get some idea and stick to it a while. Your duty is not only to you and your organization, but to all the people of all classes. I feel there's no use in making a speech and then simply going out with no suggestions. So I'm suggesting a five-point program. If you have just five objects, you can remember those five objects and remember why you're for them.

First. The first thing is to organize, and then keep on organizing and organizing and getting up the spirit, so the people will remember what it's all about, and don't just organize for a carpenters' union, or some other kind, but organize everybody you can. Make it so that the people understand they have some common objective; that they are working together for the common welfare; and make it so that people have some respect for the other man, including the "white collar" worker; and that's the only way that any of you are going to be able to see to getting things for yourself. But organizing means nothing unless you can do something with your organization.

In consideration of organizations, I think that you should immediately study industrial unionization. An industrial union, of course, covers a whole industry; it is stronger, it has more power, and it cuts out jurisdictional strife and is fairer to the employer. I am not here to tell you the details of your organization, but it seems to me the day of the old craft union is about over, and that old-time squabbles and rows about who's going to do what should be ended forever.

Second. I will take up this matter of monopolies and national natural resources. I explained to you how, in the old days and after the Civil War, still to a certain extent up to the Spanish War, the natural resources were in the hands of the people. But they are now in the hands of the utility holding companies and giant corporations of all kinds, so that you have little chance of economic opportunity for you or your children. Therefore, you must be for the abolition of these monopolies, or else you should be for the governmental ownership of them, or at least the strictest type of regulation. I am frank to say that I personally believe that eventually we should have Government ownership of public resource monopolies.

Third. Then there's this thing of machines. They say it takes about 10 percent of the farm labor to run a farm that it used to. So all over the country they were laying off farm labor, and the result was that the purchasing power of these laid-off people was almost entirely cut off; industries couldn't sell anything because people could not buy; and so industry began to break down. Then you take industry itself. Take a man up in Milwaukee, where he has a manufacturing business with 2,300 employees. He got it down to where he only had to have something like 35 to handle the automatic machinery. So he laid all but the 35 off, figuring he would pocket the difference in the salaries and get the extra profit. But the same thing was happening all over the country, and when it got through happening the result was that the purchasing power of the people was broken and there were less and less jobs. Now, what we've got to do is not be slaves to machines, but make the machines slaves to us. That will be accomplished, to a certain extent, by the public ownership of monopolies and by labor organizations. But in any economy we must have low prices, high wages, and almost unlimited production, it seems to me. Poor people don't get the use of much wealth or live very high on curtailed production, high prices, and low wages.

So in talking about machines, we pass to the fourth point and that is the hours of labor. Personally, I think it is a good thing for people to work hard and to work a reasonable length of time. However, machines work so fast in comparison to how things were before, that it's impossible for a man to work as long as he even wants to. We must thus reduce the hours of working in order that labor can be distributed. But when we reduce the hours, we should not reduce the wages for a given week's or month's work. People tell me, when I say this, that I'm "off." However, there's absolutely nothing to that at all. If labor is paid decent wages all over the United States of America; if the machine is controlled by shorter hours of labor; if there is a large amount of money paid out to labor; these laborers and workers, "white collar" and otherwise, will spend that much money. And spending that much money, they will keep the looms and the mills working, and the farmers busy. The idea of restricting production and of killing pigs does not seem to be correct from an economic viewpoint. Yes; I repeat, that if we have more production, with high wages, this production can keep going on. The people have not suffered from overproduction but from underconsumption; they simply couldn't buy, because they didn't make enough money to buy, or they had no jobs at all, and had no money at all, and couldn't buy anything.

I have now brought up four points. The fifth point is money. The money system that we have in this country must be made to suit the needs of the people. I'm not going into that detail, because I'm not well enough informed and not a money fanatic. Some people think that all the evils of humanity can be stopped if we just have enough money. But we have to work and we want to work. The thing to do is to find out how we can have the right kind of money with which to exchange our labor for goods. Don't let them accuse me or you of being "inflationists." We know that if you issue paper money and issue it by the billions that there will be inflation, and it will ruin labor as well as the man who happens to be rich. I repeat, we want to work and have a right to a system of money that will guarantee it.

There is one point which has not been brought out, so far as I know, and that is that our money system is entirely different from any money system ever yet known in the history of the world. In the old days, when there was inflation, as recently in Germany and other countries, the national treasury was cleaned out of all gold or silver, and there was no backing whatever, and then they would issue paper money with nothing behind it. Naturally the paper money didn't mean anything and wasn't worth anything, according to the way the people understand money. But in this case the President has impounded all the gold into the Treasury. You don't see any gold anywhere. There's billions and billions and billions of dollars' worth of gold in the Treasury.

So with all the gold in the Treasury, where nobody can get at it, then what is money? It becomes what it was originally intended to be in this country, and that is a medium of exchange. I have heard debates in the Senate where they would say a $5 bill is not money; that it's a piece of paper with a lie written on it. But if I can take $5 and go in and get my wife and children some ham and eggs and some socks and shoes with it, I won't argue about it. Money can be paper or it can be sea shells or anything else, but if it's good for exchanging labor for merchandise, in my opinion it's money. The idea is that we should have money which is a medium of exchange for our labor, our work, for goods and merchandise, and we don't care what they call it. In addition to this, the country should not be in the hands of the private bankers and to give them concessions of interest, and to be able to exploit this Government and this country. We should have a central bank of issue, where the United States owns and controls its own banks; where Congress does as the Constitution requires it; that is, to issue currency and coin money, which constitutional duty Congress surrendered a long time ago and which they should now resume.

Now, fellow Americans, I have talked to you on these five points, and I'll repeat them again:

First. Organize.

Second. Own or control the monopolies.

Third. Make the machines slaves of ourselves and not ourselves slaves of the machines.

Fourth. Control the hours of labor and working conditions in order to maintain purchasing power.

Fifth. Have a money system in which we can work.

Fellow Americans, it has given me great pleasure to come over here in Virginia and talk to you. Sentimentally, I love this State of Virginia, second to my own. Naturally, I do because my mother and my people came from here and it's a beautiful place. Of course, I think the beauty of the place would be enhanced if more people were making good wages and working and had good jobs; I love the history of Virginia, and can enjoy the beauty of Monticello and Mount Vernon and the various historic places as much as you or anybody else can, and I've introduced a bill to that effect to preserve the antiquities and the ancient historic shrines, and I do this from sentimentality, and possibly, a love of our history. But I think those same ancestors will probably think a lot more of us if we had the nerve and the stamina and the courage to get up on our hind legs and demand decent places in which to live;—yes, I think you have fine roads in Virginia, but like any other State, it might be wise to have still more roads and put more men to work; in fact, the truth of the matter is that Virginia is probably like any other State, with the same kind of Americans living in it, with the same kind of ideas; but the thing that we must do is realize that the old-time age has gone forever; that we are faced with modern industry, with modern science, with modern machinery; that we must adapt ourselves to the new age. Unless we do so, we will have permanent unemployment; we will sink into a peonage and peasantry that the world has yet never seen. The depression has lasted quite a while already; the dark ages lasted some 500 to 700 years, as has the depression in China already lasted some six or seven hundred years. Wars have been fought that have lasted 30 years, where human beings became cannibals. And this is a really serious situation, and I should ask every man in this audience, and every woman and child, to interest themselves in the welfare of their fellow man in order to preserve civilization.

LOBBYING INVESTIGATION

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 288

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to investigate any and all charges of attempts or attempts to intimidate or influence Members of the House of Representatives with respect to the bill S. 2796 or any other bills affecting utility holding companies during the Seventy-fourth Congress by any person, partnership, trust, association, or corporation. The committee shall report to the House as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendation.

That said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House now consider the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Rules Committee ought to yield for some questions before we vote to consider the resolution. It will cost $50,000 and accomplish nothing of any value.

The SPEAKER. The subject is not debatable. The question is, Shall the House now consider the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Chairman of the Rules Committee be given 15 minutes to answer some questions, because certain questions ought to be answered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There will be plenty of opportunity. This is a matter of consideration by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BLANTON. But that means the passage of the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York have 15 minutes to answer questions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have 15 minutes in which to speak to the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the gentleman from New York, the Chairman of the Committee on Rules, to ask unanimous consent that the report be considered at once.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no; I asked for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MAPES. Under the regular rule which provides for the consideration of a report from the Committee on Rules, it takes a two-thirds vote?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is correct.

Mr. MAPES. And the gentleman is proceeding under the regular rules of the House?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I understood the gentleman to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not think I did. I did not intend to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York proceeding for 15 minutes, speaking to the resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. Preceding, of course, the question of consideration, because I want to ask some questions.

Mr. MAPES. Is it necessary to consume 15 minutes?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know. It may not take 2 minutes, but we ought to ask some questions and have them answered before the question of consideration is adopted.

Mr. MAPES. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this resolution which I have just submitted has been reported out of the Rules Committee this afternoon after thorough consideration of the matter. Last week, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] made certain charges as to being approached in reference to his vote on the utility bill, a resolution was passed under privileged status directing the Rules Committee to conduct an investigation. It was known at that time that that resolution was inadequate to meet the entire situation. That resolution did provide for an investigation of both the proponents and the opponents of the bill, but it had no provision as to subpena power or the swearing of witnesses. It has been recognized since that time that a carefully drawn resolution should be passed. Thereupon the Rules Committee reported out a resolution authorizing a thorough inquiry of all lobbying or attempt to influence by anyone—any person, a copartnership, corporation, association, or what not—the vote of any Member of the House in reference to the Public Utility Act—S. 2796—or any utility bills during this session of Congress.

It is the intention of the Rules Committee to start hearings tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. That is the reason for calling this matter up at this time, in order to get this authority to go into a thorough investigation. At the same time, I have introduced today a resolution, which will be referred to the Committee on Accounts, asking for $50,000 to conduct this inquiry into lobbying in connection with this utility bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. How long is it contemplated this investigation will continue?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course we have no idea. As these things go on further matters develop.

Mr. BLANTON. It is limited to this session of Congress?

Mr. O'CONNOR. To this Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it could be pursued after we adjourn sine die?

Mr. KVALE. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Rules Committee does not invite this investigation. It was passed by a vote of everybody except one Member of this House. We are busy enough without this. It is our duty. That is all.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I want to get a little information. Mr. Speaker, today we have 29 Members of this House either stricken or in bad health from overwork. A number of them are in hospitals. The balance of the Membership, no one will deny, are on the frazzled edge. There are many of us here who have worked here continuously day and night since the 1st of December. It has just been a continuous grind.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is true of the Rules Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it is specially true of the Appropriations Committee. I have been here since last November.

Mr. O'CONNOR. So have I.

Mr. BLANTON. And worked all through December holding hearings.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And so did I.

Mr. BLANTON. Everyone is worked down and with nerves on the frazzled edge. Now, are we going to just continue on until a score of the Members of this House are seriously stricken and pass away? Another prominent Member was seriously stricken today. Shall Members be overworked this hot weather so that they will never regain their health? Now, there are a number of colleagues who, if we continue this strenuous session much longer, it will be dangerous to them and their future health.

Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Rules Committee, the leader of this House, our distinguished friend from Colorado, Mr. TAYLOR, and the Speaker of this House ought to provide some means of finishing our work here and adjourn sine die and go home [applause] and let the people back home recover from this session of Congress. [Laughter.] We ought to ask the President to sidetrack this tax bill and we ought not to consider it at this session.

This $50,000 proposed to be spent on this investigation sounds little, but it is a big sum after all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It may not be used at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Comparable to $4,800,000,000 it is a bagatelle, but coupled with another $150,000 to be wasted somewhere else on the same subject, it is going too far.

It is simply a question of veracity between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and Mr. Corcoran. It is simply a question of veracity between them. The Rules Committee ought to call those men in and find out who told the truth on that matter and report back to Congress, and that is all there is in that. Then let the Senate take whatever action they desire.

We ought to quit this investigating and foolishly spending public money, and quit and go home. I have never seen any good come from any House investigation in 20 years, with large expense money appropriated. Remember the futility of the $600,000 coal commission and the $500,000 Wickersham Commission, down to the smaller ones. I have never seen a bit of good come from any expensive House investigations, and no good will come from this one. Everyone knows all about the lobbying. We know that every utility company in existence did lobbying or had lobbyists here. I doubt the wisdom of passing this resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further. The Rules Committee is a fairly hard-working committee. We have been here since December. Many of us are frazzled or worse than that. [Laughter.] We are not looking for work. We have enough to do, especially toward the close of a session. This duty was thrust upon us by the House. Now, this is not solely a question of veracity as between the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and a gentleman named Corcoran, whom I never saw or met, or any other person. The original resolution authorized an inquiry into all lobbying activities.

Members have stood on this floor and said the galleries were filled with the power lobbyists, here to try to intimidate and influence Members of Congress. We propose, if the House so directs, to go through with this and to see it through and find out what propaganda, what influences of an undue nature have been used in this House. We are not concerned with what another body does. This is a reflection on our House and ourselves, and we are going to see it through.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR. For a question; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose the Rules Committee should find out that Mr. Corcoran made a threat to the gentleman from Maine, what are you going to do about it?

Mr. O'CONNOR. He will be confronted with a penal statute which makes it a crime.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it is no crime to make a threat.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, the gentleman had better examine the statutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have seen 100,000 Government employees in Washington threaten Congress if they did not do so-and-so they would march on the Capitol. I saw a march by them on the Capitol back in war times. Not one of them was ever prosecuted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman had better peruse the criminal statutes and find out.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman in the course of his remarks to answer this query: In view of the fact that public statements in the last day or two have insinuated that the gentleman from New York would not be a proper, an impartial, and vigorous chairman of the committee to make this investigation——

Mr. BLANTON. That is all bunk.

Mr. KVALE. I would be glad if the gentleman from New York would make the statement that this inquiry will be directed not only as an inquisitorial agency against Mr. Corcoran but that it will operate as an impartial investigating agency into all utility lobbying.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I never thought that reiteration added anything to an original statement, and from the first time this investigation was proposed I stated that it would be fair and impartial. I have not seen one of these power buzzards that are alleged to be around the Capitol Building. If they have been, so far as the Rules Committee is concerned, we are going after them.

Mr. KVALE. I did not mean to hurt the gentleman's feelings; I wanted to be helpful to him.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I appreciate that; I appreciate the gentleman's intentions.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has suggested that it was stated from the floor that the galleries were full of lobbyists and it is the purpose to investigate lobbying activities. I take it, then, that the gentleman will call before his committee, as a matter of duty, the Members of Congress who made the statements on the floor and who sent the word to the country that the galleries were full of lobbyists, so that these gentlemen will have an opportunity to name these lobbyists and assure the country that they told the truth and knew what they were talking about and were not trying to arouse prejudice by untrue statements? [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. After you have done that you will have accomplished nothing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In reply to the gentleman, let me state that it is the purpose of the Rules Committee, as I gathered from sentiments this afternoon, to welcome the cooperation of any Member of this House who can furnish information as to any improper conduct of any person either for or against this legislation. We shall pursue it within our power as far as we can, and we will spare nobody.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, only about 40 Members are now present. We ought to have a quorum present when we vote to consider a resolution of this kind. The Membership ought to know about a resolution calling for the expenditure of $50,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is not the $50,000 resolution; that will come tomorrow.

Mr. BLANTON. The $50,000 one tomorrow is corollary to it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; it is supplemental.

Mr. BLANTON. It follows as a natural sequence.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Chairman of the Rules Committee if he desires me to move a call of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; we have our meeting tomorrow. It is important that we pass this resolution tonight. I am sorry. We did not anticipate this because there was no opposition evidenced to the passage of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that all this is out of order, a point of no quorum having been made.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 118]

Adair	Claiborne	Doutrich	Guyer
Amlie	Clark, Idaho	Duffey, Ohio	Hamlin
Andresen	Cochran	Duffy, N. Y.	Hancock, N. Y.
Andrew, Mass.	Collins	Duncan	Hancock, N. C.
Andrews, N. Y.	Colmer	Dunn, Miss.	Hart
Bacon	Connery	Eckert	Hartley
Bankhead	Cooper, Ohio	Eicher	Hennings
Barden	Corning	Engel	Hess
Beam	Cox	Faddis	Higgins, Conn.
Berlin	Crowther	Fernandez	Higgins, Mass.
Brennan	Culkin	Fish	Hill, Ala.
Brown, Ga.	Cummings	Focht	Hoeppel
Brown, Mich.	Darrow	Ford, Calif.	Hull
Buckley, N. Y.	Dear	Frey	Kahn
Bulwinkle	Delaney	Gambrill	Kelly
Burdick	Dempsey	Gassaway	Kennedy, Md.
Caldwell	DeRouen	Gifford	Kerr
Cannon, Wis.	Dickstein	Gildea	Kimball
Carter	Dietrich	Gingery	Kniffin
Casey	Dirksen	Gray, Pa.	Knutson
Celler	Dockweiler	Greenwood	Kocialkowski
Chapman	Dondero	Griswold	Lamneck
Lanham	Millard	Reilly	Stubbs
Lesinski	Montague	Robinson, Utah	Taber
Lewis, Md.	Montet	Robsion, Ky.	Taylor, Tenn.
Lloyd	Moran	Rogers, N. H.	Thomas
Lucas	Moritz	Romjue	Thompson
McAndrews	Nichols	Russell	Tinkham
McClellan	Norton	Ryan	Tobey
McFarlane	O'Connell	Sabath	Treadway
McGrath	Oliver	Sadowski	Turpin
McKeough	O'Malley	Sanders, La.	Underwood
McLeod	O'Neal	Sears	Utterback
McMillan	Owen	Seger	Vinson, Ga.
Maloney	Palmisano	Shannon	Wadsworth
Marshall	Perkins	Smith, Wash.	Walter
Martin, Colo.	Peterson, Fla.	Smith, W. Va.	Weaver
Martin, Mass.	Peyser	Snell	Wigglesworth
Mead	Polk	Somers, N. Y.	Withrow
Meeks	Rabaut	Stefan	Woodruff
Merritt, Conn.	Ramsay	Stewart

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and sixty-six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, Will the House now consider the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. It will require a two-thirds vote to consider this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It will require two-thirds to consider the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. If this resolution is not passed the one that we adopted the other day is still in effect and will authorize the Rules Committee to go ahead tomorrow with the investigation?

The SPEAKER. That resolution, of course, is still in effect, subject to its own provisions. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 197, noes 3.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the House determined to consider the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the reason that this resolution is before us today for consideration is because the resolution adopted by the House at the time of the occurrences which gave rise to the resolution is not broad enough upon which to really base an investigation. The resolution gave no power of subpena, the compulsory attendance of witnesses, the administration of the oath, or any of the necessary functions that an investigating committee should have.

I think this resolution before us at this time is subject to criticism in the respect that it does not in any way mention the incident out of which the original resolution grew and which is the primary cause of the investigation, namely, the charges of coercion that were made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, the original resolution, which was really ineffectual, is still in existence.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But this supersedes the other one when we pass it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It does and it does not. Everyone in the world knows that this resolution we are considering today follows as a necessary consequence.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I assume the first thing the Committee on Rules will do, if empowered to make this investigation, will be to go into the charges made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is the plan. The gentleman from Maine will appear before us tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The second criticism I would make is that the language is so broad that it enables the Rules Committee, if it sees fit, to summon anyone for any sort of questioning, concerning whom they may or may not have read some rumor in a newspaper. I think in that respect it is too broad. I trust that the well-known good sense of the Committee on Rules will impose the limitation that ought to be imposed in such a resolution.

In the third place, the resolution reads specifically to the effect that trusts be investigated, if it is apropos to investigate them, but it does not specify whether that means "brain" or otherwise.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I understood the gentleman to say that the Rules Committee were going to question people on mere rumor?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I said I hoped they would not, but the resolution would permit that.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say that as chairman of a special committee for 7 months I refused to call men before me on mere rumor. I called them in to an executive session, got evidence, then had the committee make an independent investigation. I believe that investigating committees are too prone to call witnesses before them on mere rumor and in public hearings, which is likely to destroy the character of innocent persons who may have to appear before them. There should be an independent investigation made before any witness is called.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, may I say that with such a conservative gentleman as the gentleman from New Jersey on the Rules Committee, there is no fear that the Rules Committee will ever call anyone on the word of a mere scandalmonger.

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not say that the Committee on Rules would. However, I thought the gentleman from New Jersey unconsciously used the word "rumor", and I wanted to find out to what extent they were going to do that.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I said that the resolution would permit of such procedure if the Rules Committee saw fit.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] with reference to calling witnesses on mere suspicion and rumor. But here we have a matter wherein Members of Congress purport to have information and knowledge about lobbyists not based upon rumor. I refer to the Members who, during the discussion of the holding-company bill, stated on their own responsibility on the floor of the House, that the galleries were full of Power Trust lobbyists, that these lobbyists were in the hall and that they were stopping Members, talking with them, and attempting to influence the Members. If we are going to have an investigation, it seems to me a resolution of that kind is not only proper, but advisable, because those speeches made on the floor of the House were given wide publicity throughout the country. I read one article suggesting that between 500 and 600 utility lobbyists were here trying to defeat the bill. We all know that is not so and if some of these Members are called upon to produce the facts it will at least make for accuracy in the future. Every Member who has any such information should welcome the opportunity to talk specifically before the committee, and not in general terms for publicity.

The people in my State and your State, when they read that Representative So-and-so said that the lobbyists were down here doing certain things, have the right now to have the Representative who made these statements come before the committee and give the committee the information upon which he based his statements, and I ask and request, as a Member of the Congress, that the investigating committee call all Members making these statements on the floor of the House. You will have the right to subpena, and the country should know the facts upon which such serious charges are based.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan has 5 minutes, and his time has not expired, and the gentleman has been asked to yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Under this resolution, will the inspired propaganda which was conducted by the utilities be investigated?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Under the authority granted in the resolution it can be, and that matter has been discussed. The resolution permits the investigation of any attempt to influence Members of Congress, and this could be by propaganda.

Mr. MICHENER. I have the floor, and I may say that I have no objection——

Mr. O'CONNOR. I was trying to explain what the resolution does.

Mr. MICHENER. I have no objection to investigating propaganda. I suppose what you mean by "propaganda" is letters received from folks living in our districts.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; and who was responsible for sending tons and tons of telegrams and literature. It is very important to know that so we can legislate that kind of business out of existence.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be considered as subscribing to any kind of doctrine that makes it more difficult for constituents to advise Representatives of their desires or their fears concerning legislation in which they are interested.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, who made the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the Senate is arranging to appropriate $150,000 to make its investigation. This proposed $50,000 House investigation will be duplicated effort at great expense and will not accomplish anything whatever of value.

I have seen $600,000 wasted on the coal investigation and nothing accomplished. I saw $500,000 wasted on the Wickersham investigation—nothing accomplished. I saw nearly $200,000 wasted on the Graham, of Illinois, investigation—nothing accomplished. I saw nearly $100,000 wasted on the Joe Walsh Pacific coast investigation—nothing accomplished. I have seen hundreds of thousands of dollars wasted on House investigations, with nothing of value accomplished. Nothing will be accomplished by the spending of $50,000 on this House investigation that will be of any value. The House investigations that have been worth while, and have been of great value to the people, have been the ones that carried no appropriations whatsoever.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I cannot in 3 minutes. Not one single thing will be accomplished of any value to the taxpaying people, and when it is over I am going to get up on this floor and show you that nothing of any value has been accomplished. Remember that. It is just a money-spending proposition. Every Member of this House can vote for wasting this $50,000, but I am not going to do so. I am getting tired of seeing the people's tax money wasted, and we ought to adjourn sine die and go home. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas has just complained about a possible expenditure—no amount may be expended, much less than the amount that will be asked for may be expended, but I saw the gentleman voting on the floor the other day in behalf of a $3,000,000 expenditure to celebrate something in Texas. I voted for that resolution and I voted to report it out of the Rules Committee and I personally brought out the rule, so that $3,000,000 might be contributed to the great Lone Star State. I was happy to support it. I think it was a great thing, but $3,000,000 is just 60 times $50,000

Mr. BLANTON. And we Texans brought into the Nation many billions of dollars worth of property.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 1 minute?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Mississippi 2 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to answer what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has said. The gentleman stated that he has never seen any of these investigations amount to anything. I wonder if the gentleman from Texas has forgotten the Teapot Dome investigation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. That was not a House investigation. The Teapot Dome investigation was one conducted by the Senate, although a number of Members of the House contributed much valuable information to it. Not one dollar was appropriated by the House of Representatives on that investigation.

If you will review back, and carefully look up all of the numerous House investigations that have been had during the last 20 years, where large sums of money for expenses of investigation have been provided by the House, you will find that not one thing of value worth mentioning has ever been accomplished.

Attorneys have been employed at high pay. Investigators have been employed at high pay. Helpers have been employed at high pay. Much money has gone to railroads, and dining cars and pullman accommodations, and hotels, and other traveling expenses, but after the money has been spent, not one thing of value has been accomplished.

The taxpayers back home are getting tired of it. It is their hard-earned money wrung from their pockets through Federal taxation that has paid the bills. Can any sane man tell me one good reason why we should spend $50,000, or any sum whatever on this investigation?

A Member from Maine asserted that Thomas G. Corcoran told him that if he should vote against the "death sentence" for public-utility holding companies, he would find it necessary to stop construction on the Passamaquoddy Dam in his district. The gentleman from Illinois said, "I challenge that statement." The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] challenged the statement. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN] said that he had implicit faith in Mr. Corcoran. He said that he did not believe there is a man connected with this administration who is more honest, who is more truthful, and one who is more interested in the best kind of public service for the people of America than Mr. Corcoran. He said that nothing had occurred in his many dealings with Mr. Corcoran which has given him the slightest reason to believe any such charge against Mr. Corcoran. He said that Mr. Corcoran plays the game square. He said that no one had ever charged Mr. Corcoran with being a double-crosser. He said that Mr. Corcoran fights toe-to-toe, courageously, honestly, enthusiastically, but always fairly.

Why is there any necessity of spending $50,000 over such an issue? This Rules Committee has authority already to proceed with an investigation. Why does it not call before it the gentleman from Maine, who made the charges, and Mr. Corcoran, and Mr. Keller, and Mr. Maverick, and Mr. Moran, and any other witnesses the above parties might ask to be heard, and then determine whether or not the charge against Mr. Corcoran is true; and if true, what should be done about it; and if not true, what should be done about it? Why is it necessary to spend $50,000 on it? Why is it necessary to spend any money? It is needless money spending that the people want stopped.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS—LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Accounts be permitted to meet tomorrow during the sessions of the House; and if this request is granted, I give notice there will be a meeting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Accounts be permitted to sit tomorrow during the sessions of the House; and if consent be granted, he gives notice that the committee will meet at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FOURTH OF JULY ADDRESS

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered at Independence Hall on July 4, 1935, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Hon. WILLIAM H. WILSON, of Pennsylvania, at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, July 4, 1935:

We gather today on this sacred soil which once felt the beat of the footsteps of our immortal forbears, and in the shadow of that noble shrine which heard their voices in the formulating and building of a nation of free people, dedicating their lives to the principles of liberty and the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience. Voices which have come down to us through the ages, still vibrant with the patriotic zeal which characterized their utterances and still pregnant with philosophic wisdom just as applicable today in these trying times as they were then when they were shaping the destinies of a new nation.

One hundred and fifty-nine years ago, half a hundred men gathered within those sacred walls to strike off the shackles of a despotism which had become unbearable. A committee of three, Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, and Benjamin Franklin, laid before that assemblage a piece of parchment upon which is written the Declaration of Independence. Silently, one by one, the signatures were affixed, and then there burst forth the clarion notes of the bell, then hanging in yonder belfry, a message the like of which had never before been heard, in language as "startling as the trump of the archangel, as terrible as the flaming syllables on Belshazzer's wall." A voice of a new birth, childlike in its weakness but colossal in its godlike faith.

And how that child grew. Eleven years later it had reached its full maturity by the adoption at the self-same place of the Constitution, which has been the bulwark of our Nation for almost a century and a half. This "the most wonderful work ever struck off at any given time by the brain and purpose of man."

When this great document was experiencing the trials and tribulations of ratification, the Father of our Country wrote to Lafayette that there would be no danger of the Government lapsing into any form of despotism "so long as there shall remain any virtue in the body of the people."

Later he wrote:

"This Government (the Constitution), the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its power, uniting security with energy and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The bases of our political systems is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government; but the constitution which at any time exists, till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government."

And again he said—

"It is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown."

What a wealth of meaning in his advice to officialdom and how applicable to this our own day when he said—

"It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments into one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. But let there be no change (in the Constitution) by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument for good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

Those words, almost prophetic in their utterances, are a challenge to us today, not to be led astray by specious reasoning or Utopian dreams.

Today we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the States are growing increasingly dependent on Federal funds and consequently increasingly subservient to Federal dictation and control, all due to the fact that the Federal Government has become the largest and most powerful element in our American system of government, although it started out with both prestige and power inferior to those of the States.

There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that present-day tendencies, which are leading us no one can tell where, are creating real consternation and dread in the country, that the principles, tried and true, of our immortal forefathers, are slowly being stifled and are being relegated to the forgotten past.

Of course, we must appreciate the fact that our country cannot stand still and expect to maintain its proud place in the galaxy of nations. It is likewise essential that we must make haste slowly, and while we progress we must at the same time be conservative enough to insure the safety of our well-being, and in doing so we must properly weigh the possibilities flowing therefrom. These are tumultuous times. The whole world is sitting on top of a seething volcano.

Office holders, office seekers, and those who live and thrive on dissension, both by written word and demagogic mouthings, are attempting to tear down overnight that great institution to the erection of which there has been given over 150 years of sacrifice and struggle.

Never was there a greater need for upholding the sound principles of our constitutional government than now.

I do not believe the American people will readily forsake the wise policies of government handed down to us by our ancestors, and that they are going to permit their great destinies to be lastingly controlled by an autocratic, bureaucratic domination founded upon wild, socialistic schemes that can only be a menace to the Union of the States.

Just 20 years ago today I had the proud privilege and honor to be one of a committee representing the city and State in escorting from this spot the Liberty Bell to the Pan American Exposition held at San Francisco. The bell was mounted upon a specially constructed car, arranged so that it could be seen as it passed upon its way. It took 3 weeks to make that trip, stops being made in all large communities en route and in many smaller places.

Never have I witnessed such loyalty, such devotion to the things for which the old bell stood. Tottering old men and women were helped to the platform where they could touch the sacred emblem with the tips of their gnarled fingers while they breathed a prayer of thanksgiving that ere they had passed to the Great Beyond they had been permitted to see and touch the sacred relic of liberty. Young men and young women, many of whom had ridden horseback for miles and miles across the prairie, stood in awed wonder, with bowed heads and speechless in the presence of this symbol; babes in arms were lifted on high so they could see it, and the youth of the land were told what it represented. In its presence one was constantly reminded of the voice from the burning bush which spoke unto Moses, telling him he was standing on holy ground. I knew then, as I know now, that such an outpouring of souls that came for a glance and remained to do homage foretold in them the existence of a spirit that would withstand all onslaughts, be they from within or from without, made upon the principles upon which the Nation was founded, because virtue still remains in the body of the people.

We are living in an age of experimentation, one after another, each in turn leading us farther astray from sound principles that have stood the test of time.

We cannot continue in these unjustified, unwarranted, and untried fields of guessing.

In approaching with serious thought the momentous questions of the day, one must not lose sight of the fact that we are a Nation unique in every respect; covering a vast expanse of territory, some sections of our country separated from others by thousands of miles, varying in their climatic conditions; some with an abundance of natural resources, while others struggle for the necessities of life in the interminable battle with the elements of nature. Utopian schemes based upon the false principle that the results of the labor of the energetic, that the savings of the thrifty, that the brains of the thinker should only be permitted insofar as they tend to produce a wealth to be divided with the shiftless, the improvident, and the irresponsible, are mere designs for a false sense of citizenship calculated to bring power to the blatant demagogues who thrive upon human distress and find in industrial unrest a fertile field in which to sow the seed of discontent with the avowed desire that it will blossom into a universal desire to undermine the foundations of a glorious nation, and see it crumble into dust.

We have always been a generous and receptive people believing in the brotherhood of man. We have stood upon our shores and welcomed the advent of the oppressed of other nations. We have taken them to our bosom and shared with them the opportunities we possessed. The opportunity to earn a living; the opportunity to receive an education; the opportunity to worship God in the manner each saw fit; the opportunity to reap and retain the benefits of their own industry; but there seems to be creeping into our national life a desire on the part of some to abandon the principles, long tried and not found wanting, that have made us the foremost Nation on the face of the globe, and substitute therefor "isms" that wherever tried have left in their wake ruin and desolation.

On this hallowed ground, where our patriots dared to do or die, on this our national natal day, and in the shadow of this sacred edifice, let us dedicate our future, our lives, our all, that only one "ism" shall be permitted to exist in the length and breadth of this land, and that one—Americanism.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Idaho, for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. MALONEY, for 10 days, on account of official business and illness in family.

To Mr. DUNN of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of illness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1633. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, July 9, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

407. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to section 1 of the River and Harbor Act, approved January 21, 1927, and section 10 of the Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated June 28, 1935, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, containing a general plan for the improvement of Big Sandy River, W. Va., Ky., Va., for the purposes of navigation and efficient development of its water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation (H. Doc. No. 245), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed with nine illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. ADAIR: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 1277. An act to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code by conferring on district courts additional jurisdiction of bills of interpleader; with amendment (Rept. No. 1437). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 288. Resolution to authorize an investigation of lobbying activities with respect to holding companies; without amendment (Rept. No. 1438). Referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BUCK: A bill (H. R. 8759) to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. COFFEE: A bill (H. R. 8760) to amend section 93 of the Judicial Code as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COLDEN: A bill (H. R. 8761) to provide for the establishment of a naval athletic field at San Pedro, Calif.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FIESINGER: A bill (H. R. 8762) to preserve and protect the gold standard through establishment of an auxiliary monetary reserve of silver and the issuance of silver certificates payable in their gold value equivalent and under such regulations as will provide protection to gold from being cornered and protection from inflation in gold values during periods of excessive demands; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. MORITZ: A bill (H. R. 8763) to provide that every editorial article be signed by the writer thereof; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SOMERS of New York: A bill (H. R. 8764) to fix standards for till baskets, Climax baskets, round-stave baskets, market baskets, drums, hampers, cartons, crates, boxes, barrels, and other containers for fruits or vegetables, to consolidate existing laws on this subject, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WHELCHEL: A bill (H. R. 8765) making eligible, under the Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, for admission to the Civilian Conservation Corps camps or for any other governmental work, veterans otherwise qualified, but whose names do not appear on the relief rolls; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. DIMOND: A bill (H. R. 8766) to authorize municipal corporations in the Territory of Alaska to incur bonded indebtedness, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8767) to authorize the use of funds collected for services rendered by the Washington-Alaska Military Cable and Telegraph System, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 8768) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: A bill (H. R. 8769) to amend the act of June 27, 1934, entitled "An act to amend the act of March 2, 1917, entitled 'An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes'"; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 8770) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H. R. 8771) to repeal titles I and II of the National Prohibition Act, to reenact certain provisions of title II thereof, to amend or repeal various liquor laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: Resolution (H. Res. 287) providing for an investigation of Allegheny County Authority; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: Resolution (H. Res. 289) providing for the method of payment of the expenses incurred by House Resolution 288; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ARENDS: A bill (H. R. 8772) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Pence; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRUNNER (by request): A bill (H. R. 8773) to restore Charles N. Liqued to the retired list of the Navy as a lieutenant, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COCHRAN: A bill (H. R. 8774) granting a pension to Delia Reister; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DEEN: A bill (H. R. 8775) for the relief of Ralph B. Sessoms; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H. R. 8776) for the relief of D. W. Robinson, Jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8777) for the relief of J. M. Cantey, Jr.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALLECK: A bill (H. R. 8778) granting an increase of pension to Lucretia J. Jaques; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCORMACK: A bill (H. R. 8779) for the relief of Thomas A. Rhodes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PARSONS: A bill (H. R. 8780) granting a pension to Rocina Olliver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAYBURN: A bill (H. R. 8781) for the relief of John B. Jones; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RUDD: A bill (H. R. 8782) for the relief of Joseph Preston Bryers; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILCOX: A bill (H. R. 8783) for the relief of J. H. Medlin; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9083. By Mr. CONNERY: Resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the granting of funds by the Federal Government for the immediate removal of elevated-railway structures in the city of Boston, and the construction of subways in substitution therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9084. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the Catholic War Veterans, Inc., Long Island City, N. Y., urging Congress to use every means within its power to stamp out communistic activities in this country; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9085. By Mr. DOBBINS: Petition of J. L. Fitzpatrick and 94 other citizens of Decatur, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9086. Also, petition of E. H. Brinkman and 26 other citizens of Champaign and Urbana, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9087. Also, petition of W. W. Wolff and 14 other citizens of Cerro Gordo, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9088. Also, petition of J. E. Miles and six other citizens of Homer, Ill., urging the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to approve and report Senate bill 1629, providing for the regulation of interstate highway transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9089. By Mr. HALLECK: Petition of citizens of Lafayette, Ind., favoring enactment of Senate bill 1629, for the regulation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce, as it was passed by the Senate; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9090. Also, petition of citizens of Cass County, Ind., favoring enactment of Senate bill 1629, for the regulation of motor carriers in interstate commerce, as it was passed by the Senate; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9091. Also, petition of citizens of Rockfield, Ind., favoring enactment of Senate bill 1629, for the regulation of motor carriers in interstate commerce, as it was passed by the Senate; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9092. Also, petition of citizens of Delphi, Ind., and vicinity, favoring Senate bill 1629, as passed by the Senate, for the regulation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9093. By Mr. KVALE: Petition of 513 residents of Lincoln County, Minn., urging Congress to enact legislation continuing corn-loan provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and amending the act so as to include all varieties of small grain; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9094. By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of T. P. Gorman, chairman general grievance committee, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Minnesota, urging the enactment of House bills 8651 and 8652, providing for the establishment of a retirement system for all railroad employees in the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9095. Also, petition of P. F. DeMore, chairman Railroad Brotherhood Legislative Board of Minnesota, protesting against the adjournment of Congress until House bills 8651 and 8652 and Senate bills 3150 and 3151, Aged Railroad Men's Retirement Act, is enacted into law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9096. Also, petition of the Minneapolis City Council, Minneapolis, Minn, protesting against provisions of the Eastman bill (S. 1632, H. R. 5379) which invest in the Interstate Commerce Commission control and jurisdiction over commerce by water; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9097. Also, petition of Upper Mississippi Waterway Association, Minneapolis, Minn., protesting against provisions of the Eastman bill (S. 1632, H. R. 5379), which invest in the Interstate Commerce Commission control and jurisdiction over commerce by water; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9098. Also, petition of the Minnesota Farmers Holiday Association, opposing Agricultural Adjustment Administration amendments; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9099. Also, petition of Farmer-Labor Club of Marshall, Minn., urging the enactment of legislation, considering certain fixed minimum prices on farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9100. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of Orphan's Hope Lodge, No. 466, by their recording secretary, L. E. Barth, urging support of House bills 8651 and 8652, providing for a retirement annuity to all employees of the railroad industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9101. Also, petition of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty, Dayton, Ohio, by Jessie Lacy, recording secretary, opposing House bill 6795 which has for its object the weakening of the present alien deportation law and places the power in the hands of the Secretary of Labor, Madam Perkins, to use her own pleasure as to who should or should not be deported; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

9102. Also, petition of C. W. Bell, employee of the New York Central Railroad Co., asking that the House enact the bill as passed in the Senate for the regulation of bus and truck traffic by the Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

9103. Also, petition of the United Rubber Workers, Willoughby, Ohio, by their president, Wilson Brunson, desiring the passage of the Black-Connery 30-hour-week bill, and the Lundeen unemployment insurance bill; also endorsing the workers' rights amendment as introduced by Representative MARCANTONIO; to the Committee on Labor.

9104. Also, petition of the board of managers of the Toledo Federation of Women's Clubs, by the chairman of the Department of Education, Mrs. Julius H. Jacobson, endorsing the Kerr bill (H. R. 8163); to the Committee of the Whole House.

9105. By Mr. KENNEY: Resolution of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Jersey City, N. J., requesting immediate assistance from the Federal Government by the construction of small-cost housing projects in the city of Jersey City and urging activity be shown for the purpose of alleviating conditions in the county of Hudson; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9106. Also, resolution of the State Council of New Jersey, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, representing 174 councils comprising a membership of 23,035, urging defeat of House bill 6795; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JULY 9, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, July 8, 1935, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1206. An act authorizing the transfer of certain lands near Vallejo, Calif., from the United States Housing Corporation to the Navy Department for naval purposes;

S. 2230. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire a suitable site at Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, for a rear range light;

S. 2378. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a bequest of certain personal property of the late Dr. Malcolm Storer, of Boston, Mass.; and

S. 2846. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States the devise and bequest of real and personal property of the late Paul E. McDonnold, passed assistant surgeon with the rank of lieutenant commander, Medical Corps, United States Navy, retired.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 883) directing the retirement of acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy at the age of 64 years, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	La Follette	Robinson
Austin	Copeland	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Davis	Lonergan	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Dieterich	McGill	Sheppard
Barbour	Donahey	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Duffy	McNary	Smith
Bilbo	Fletcher	Maloney	Steiwer
Black	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Borah	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Brown	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Bulkley	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Bulow	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Burke	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Hastings	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Hayden	Overton	White
Carey	Holt	Pittman
Chavez	Johnson	Pope
Clark	Keyes	Radcliffe

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent from the Senate because of a death in his family, and that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are absent on important public business.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is absent because of illness.

Mr. NYE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ELECTRIC RATE SURVEYS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the Vice Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, compilations completed through the electric rate survey of the domestic and residential rates in effect in the States of Idaho, South Carolina, Vermont, and Washington on January 1, 1935, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Senate joint resolution relative to the application to Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to tax-exempt securities

Whereas article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, call a convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of California deems it necessary to the well-being of the Nation that no securities heretofore or hereafter issued by the Federal Government or any State or political subdivision be exempt from taxation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the Legislature of the State of California, jointly, at its fifty-first regular session, commencing on the 7th day of January 1935, a majority of all the members elected to each house of the legislature voting in favor hereof, That the Congress of the United States be requested to call a convention upon the adoption by two-thirds of the several States of a resolution similar to this resolution, for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that no securities heretofore or hereafter issued, either by the Federal Government or any State or political subdivision, shall be exempt from taxation; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the Governor of the State of California to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Represenatives of the United States, and the Governor of each of the several States.

Senate Joint Resolution 23

Senate joint resolution relative to the application to Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the power of the Congress to regulate hours, wages, terms, and conditions of employment of labor

Whereas article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress shall, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, call a convention for proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the Legislature of the State of California, jointly, at its fifty-first regular session, commencing on the 7th day of January 1935, a majority of all the members elected to each house of the legislature voting in favor hereof, That the Congress of the United States be requested to call a convention upon the adoption by two-thirds of the several States of a resolution similar to this resolution, for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that the Congress of the United States shall have the power to regulate hours of labor and prescribe minimum wages in any and all industries engaged in intrastate, as well as interstate, commerce; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the Governor of the State of California to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and the Governor of each of the several States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the First Quadrennial Convention of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, favoring the enactment of the so-called "Lundeen bill", being the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Greenwood County, Kans., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 3150) to levy an excise tax upon carriers and an income tax upon their employees, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the convention of the Kansas State Council of the Knights of Columbus, held in Newton, Kans., favoring the adoption of the so-called "Borah resolution", being Senate Resolution 70, protesting against religious persecutions by the Government of Mexico, and authorizing an investigation thereof by the Committee on Foreign Relations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dearing, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a retirement system for railroad employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for removal of the Federal tax on the sale of gasoline, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens, being employees of the Albany Knitting Co., Inc., of Albany, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 8603) to foster industry and fair competition, to promote and encourage employment, and to prevent the dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the quarterly meeting of the Catholic War Veterans, Long Island City, N. Y., protesting against the introduction or spread of communism in the United States, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York (N. Y.) Produce Exchange, protesting against the enactment of certain proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was ordered to lie on the table.

STATUE OF GEN. ROBERT E. LEE

Mr. WALSH presented the petition of the Boston (Mass.) Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, praying for the erection of a statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee in the Arlington National Cemetery, which was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States:

We respectfully petition your honorable bodies that you enact into law the bill now pending to provide for a statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee to be placed in the national cemetery at Arlington.

Your petitioner is the Boston Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, and is composed of women of southern birth or association who are now resident in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and are enjoying the rights and privileges of this grand old State which led the way to liberty at the outbreak of the American Revolution.

To a united country we give our absolute loyalty and affection just as in the Spanish War and the World War we gave ourselves, our sons, and daughters in defense of that country.

But we of southern blood cannot forget the glorious sacrifices of our fathers and mothers in defense of what they conceived to be their rights. We cherish with pride the memories of the marvelous military skill of our leaders, the gallantry of our soldiers, and the noble self-sacrifice of our women. It is to keep alive these memories that our organization was formed, and we would be faithless to our fathers and mothers and untrue to ourselves if we allowed those memories to become dimmed.

We cherish the flag of the Confederacy, not as an emblem of nationality but as the emblem of remembrance of gallant deeds and unselfish sacrifice, and of our matchless leader, Robert E. Lee, great in war, sublime in peace, and enshrined forever in the hearts of the southern people.

It is with deep emotion that we recognize that the North accords to him, for his greatness and nobility, a place among our country's immortals. We feel it most fitting, therefore, that his statue should be erected in the national cemetery at Arlington, where it will become a shrine for all who revere spotless character.

We recall that many years ago that gallant soldier of the North, Col. Charles Francis Adams, proposed such a statue and suggested the following inscription:

"Robert Edward Lee, erected by the contributions of those who wearing the blue or wearing the gray recognize brilliant military achievements and honor lofty character evinced by humanity in war and by devotion and dignity in defeat."

BOSTON CHAPTER, UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY, By LOUISE LONGAKER, Chairman.
ERNESTINE DAVIS.
MENA V. FRENCH.
MARGARET A. TAYLOR.
LOUISE J. WARE.
LOUISE C. RIDER, President.
CLARA F. DANIELS, Recording Secretary.

ERADICATION OF THE TENT CATERPILLAR

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in full in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Passaic in the State of New Jersey, urging the enactment of House bill no. 8212, authorizing an appropriation for the eradication of the tent caterpillar.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Passaic in a regular meeting convened this 3d day of July 1935 does hereby go on record as supporting the House of Representatives bill no. 8212, introduced by Congressman KENNEY, of Bergen County, relative to an appropriation of $25,000 to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for the eradication and control of the tent caterpillar in the State of New Jersey; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded by the clerk to the Board of Freeholders to the United States Senators of the State of New Jersey and to our local Congressman.

E. T. SCHEIDEMANN.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 7680. A bill to amend the act of May 18, 1934, providing punishment for killing or assaulting Federal officers (Rept. No. 1033); and

H. R. 7909. A bill to amend the act creating a United States Court for China and prescribing the title thereof, as amended (Rept. No. 1029).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3050. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York and Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between Rouses Point, N. Y., and Alburg, Vt. (Rept. No. 1030); and

S. 3105. A bill to amend the act approved June 12, 1934, relating to the granting of the consent of Congress to certain bridge construction across the Tennessee River at a point between the city of Sheffield, Ala., and the city of Florence, Ala. (Rept. No. 1031).

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2929) for the relief of Frank I. Otis, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1032) thereon.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3192) to increase the limit of cost for the Department of Agriculture Extensible Building, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1034) thereon.

Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3111) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to grant to the State of Louisiana an easement over certain land of the United States in Natchitoches Parish, La., for highway purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1035) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 3215) to permit certain special-delivery messengers to acquire a classified status through noncompetitive examination; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 3216) for the relief of the Zoar Baptist Church, of Kesslers Cross Lanes, Nicholas County, W. Va.; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3217) for the relief of Lexie Hagy; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BONE:

A bill (S. 3218) to amend section 201 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3219) fixing the computation of travel distances; and

A bill (S. 3220) to authorize the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to withhold the pay of officers, warrant officers, enlisted men, and nurses of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps to cover indebtedness to the United States under certain conditions; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. MCKELLAR introduced Senate bill 3221, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. COPELAND:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 158) to extend the time within which applications may be filed under the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COPELAND, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. MOORE, Mr. LONERGAN, and Mr. MALONEY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut to enter into a compact for the creation of the Interstate Sanitation District and the establishment of the Interstate Sanitation Commission; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOURS OF DUTY OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill fixing the hours of duty of postal employees, and also ask that the bill may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received, printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3221) to fix the hours of duty of postal employees, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the needs of the service require supervisory employees, special clerks, clerks, and laborers in first- and second-class post offices, and employees of the motor-vehicle service, and carriers in the city delivery service and in the village delivery service, and employees of the Railway Mail Service, employees of the mail equipment shops, cleaners, janitors, telephone operators, and elevator conductors, paid from appropriations of the First Assistant Postmaster General, and all employees of the Custodial Service except charwomen and charmen and those working part time, to perform service on Saturday they shall be allowed compensatory time for such service on 1 day within 5 working days next succeeding the Saturday on which the excess service was performed: Provided, That employees who are granted compensatory time on Saturday for work performed the preceding Sunday or the preceding holiday shall be given the benefits of this act on 1 day within 5 working days following the Saturday when such compensatory time was granted: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may, if the exigencies of the service require it, authorize the payment of overtime for service on the last three Saturdays in the calendar year in lieu of compensatory time, except cleaners, janitors, telephone operators, and elevator conductors paid from the appropriation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, and custodial employees who shall be given compensatory time in lieu of overtime pay within 30 days next succeeding: And provided further, That for the purpose of extending the benefits of this act to railway postal clerks, the service of said railway postal clerks assigned to road duty shall be based on an average not exceeding 8 hours per day for 254 days per annum, including a proper allowance for all service required on lay-off periods as provided in Post Office Department Circular Letter No. 1348, dated May 12, 1921, and railway postal clerks required to perform service in excess of an average of 8 hours per day as herein provided, shall be paid in cash at the annual rate of pay or granted compensatory time, at their option, for such overtime.

SEC. 2. The ratio of substitute post-office clerks, substitute city letter carriers, substitute laborers, substitutes in the motor-vehicle service, and substitutes in the Railway Mail Service, shall be not more than 1 substitute for 8 regular employees: Provided, That at post offices with receipts of more than $500,000 per annum, and less than $10,000,000 per annum, the ratio of substitutes shall not be more than 1 substitute for 10 regular employees: Provided further, That at post offices with receipts of less than $500,000 the ratio shall be not more than 1 substitute for 12 regular employees, and at offices having less than 12 employees 1 substitute shall be provided: Provided further, That where the ratio of substitutes on the date of the enactment of this act is in excess of the ratio provided for herein no additional substitutes shall be appointed until these ratios are established: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not operate to furlough or dismiss any regular substitute.

This act shall take effect October 1, 1935.

THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. BORAH and Mr. DUFFY each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. VAN NUYS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8554, the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page —, under the heading "Judgments, Court of Claims", after "House Document No. 199", to insert the following: "and the judgment for $11,900 in favor of Albert C. Dalton, reported in House Document No. 174 of the Seventy-second Congress."

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF BITUMINOUS COAL CONSERVATION BILL

Mr. BYRD submitted a resolution (S. Res. 167), which was ordered to lie over under the rule, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General is requested to transmit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, his opinion in writing with respect to the constitutionality of the bill (H. R. 8479, 74th Cong., 1st sess.) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous coal resources of the United States and to establish a national bituminous coal reserve; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there appeared in the press on the Fourth of July a short article written by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] touching on American liberty, which is so splendidly conceived and expressed that I think it is worthy the reading of every citizen of the United States. The article begins with these words:

The Declaration of Independence was something more than an avowal of separation between peoples and a severance of political ties between governments. It was the announcement as a basis of government of a wholly new political philosophy.

I ask that the article be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARTICLE BY HON. WILLIAM E. BORAH, SENATOR FROM IDAHO

The Declaration of Independence was something more than an avowal of separation between peoples and the severance of political ties between governments. It was the announcement, as a basis of government, of a wholly new political philosophy. Even the democracy of Athens rested upon the theory of inequality in political rights and all governments from the beginning of time had utterly rejected the inalienable right of the common people to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. They were the mudsills of the social structure. They were to be managed. For them the government was to plan. Their rights, privileges, and duties were circumscribed and limited or wholly denied by rules and regulations, sometimes called orders and decrees, issued from time to time by those in power, all based upon the theory that the judgment of the people was unreliable and their enjoyment of liberty dangerous. Even Runnymede was an adjustment between the annointed over their respective jurisdictions in the matter of controlling the lives, liberties, and happiness of the people.

Had the moving spirits of those early American days been content to merely break the political ties which bound them to a parent government and to set up here a government upon the old theory, the great body of the people would have simply exchanged one yoke for another—they would have remained silent and their rights the plaything of arbitrary power. But something more than this was to be done. Something more was done. A government based upon the consent of the governed was to be established and it was established.

In defiance of all the teachings, the practices, and philosophies of the past, it was declared that there were rights and privileges belonging to and possessed by the individual which no government could bestow and hence, no government could take away. The Declaration of Independence found the average person exhausted of all influence, of all power, and without hope, and it made him a sovereign. It released the creative, constructive forces of the individual, it unchained his energies and aroused his ambitions, and of these things has been built a civilization without precedent. In popular parlance, we are wont to say: Our venture in government had its origin in the rejection of the divine right of kings. It seems even more accurate to say that it had its origin in the acceptance of the divine right of the individual.

But the old struggle lives on. The rights and the privileges of the individual are always in jeopardy. Encroachment of government upon the liberty and freedom of the citizen seems to be a natural law, if such term may be applied to a rule of politics. In the last analysis, the American Revolution was a fight against swollen, ruthless, bureaucracy—in trade, in commerce, in business, and in individual initiative, all were circumscribed and planned and controlled and enforced by arbitrary power.

The totalitarian state, in all its varied forms, is not new. It is something very old. It does not mark an advance but a retreat. It is not progress, but reaction. Whether in fact or in fiction, the very conception of such a state involves restraint, repression, and, at last, persecution, torture, and death. From Plato, with his ideal state resting upon the submerged masses, down to the modern bureaucratic, or totalitarian, states, with their island prison or frozen regions of exiled humanity, there has never been any room for the initiative, the individuality, of the average man or woman, no chance for those who would break through arbitrary environments in search for a fuller and better life. If history reveals one truth, it is that all schemes to bring about and hammer down into uniformity, into standardization, all that is individual, results in stagnation, retrogression, mediocrity, and universal misery.

The cornerstone of American civilization is the liberty of the citizen, the right to choose his own avocation, calling, or profession, to worship according to his own beliefs, to conduct his personal affairs according to his own judgment—under a regime of just and equal laws.

PROBLEMS OF GOVERNMENT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered on June 27, 1935, before the town meeting of New York City by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, in the discussion of problems of government, which in these complex days means the problems of society, we are usually quite prone to approach all questions from the standpoint of partisan politics. While I am, as you probably suspect, an ardent Democrat, I hope I am not blind enough to claim that all virtue resides in the bosoms of those who agree with me and all evil in the bosoms of those who disagree.

In discussing the question of national recovery we must keep constantly in our minds what it is we are trying to recover from and what caused it.

I cannot in the time allotted to me go deeply into the causes of the depression from which we have been suffering since 1929.

A portion of the responsibility may be ascribed to the World War and its consequences.

A portion of it may be ascribed to the short-sighted nationalistic policies out of which grew trade barriers, insurmountable tariffs, quotas, and all the restrictions imposed on international trade. In that process our own Nation must acknowledge its guilt.

A portion of it may be ascribed to the speculative mania which drew millions of our people toward the mirage of easy wealth, which in turn inflated the prices of securities far above their intrinsic value. This speculative mania was fostered and encouraged by men in the highest positions in the Government of the United States. After the collapse of 1929 these men continued to insist that our economic condition was sound and that securities should go higher yet.

There are other causes which contributed to the long night of despair through which we have passed. I cannot go further into them. Neither is it worth while to discuss anything that was done from 1929 to 1933 to stem the tide or alleviate the conditions. Very little was done. I desire to recall to your minds the conditions which existed 2 years ago, when real efforts at recovery were inaugurated.

Our commerce with other nations had dwindled from $10,000,000,000 per annum to little more than two billions.

The smoke of industry had faded from the skies and millions of men were vainly searching for work.

Agriculture had collapsed and was selling its products below the cost of their production; and the agencies of credit set up for its benefit had ceased to function.

The pillars had fallen from our banking system, as evidenced in the failure of more banks in the 4 years following 1929 than had failed in the Nation's history or had failed in all the rest of the world in the same period.

Millions of people had lost billions of dollars in the value of their property and their securities.

As a result of all this the American people were losing confidence not only in their economic, industrial, and social structures, but in the political institutions for which they had sacrificed in peace and war alike.

In the midst of this national gloom a new leader came into authority, and new policies were inaugurated which have come to be described collectively as the new deal.

One of the first questions which confronted those charged with the responsibility of action was the same question we are discussing tonight: Which road to recovery?

Those who have found fault with what we have done and are doing cannot satisfy the American people with pointing to mistakes here and there, or to a mistaken policy as a whole. In fairness they must also give a bill of particulars as to what they would have done or would not do.

The history of our effort to restore confidence in the Nation's banking system is one of the brightest chapters in the annals of financial history. There was opposition to this effort. Men and institutions flat on their back came down to Washington to insist that we do nothing. Others came to aid in the work of reconstruction.

But a new charter for a stronger banking system was enacted into law, which restored banking to its normal and proper functions, guaranteed to depositors the return of their money, and increased the deposits in all banks in 2 years by more than $6,000,000,000. Before this session of Congress shall have adjourned, I confidently predict that we shall still further increase and safeguard the strength and serviceability of our banking institutions.

I have referred to the break-down of the farm-credit system. For more than a year prior to the change of policy which I am discussing the farm-credit system, established under the Wilson administration in 1916, designed to furnish credit to agriculture suitable to its needs, had ceased to function at all. Its funeral was being preached in public forum and private drawing room.

But within the past 2 years the farm-credit agencies have been revived and resumed their activities, and the confidence of the American farmer in their efficiency has been likewise renewed. Hundreds of thousands of farms have been rescued from the auctioneer. In the cities and towns the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has done the same for hundreds of thousands of small-home owners.

Two years ago we found a vast unsalable surplus of farm products, increasing the cost to the farmer and depressing the price which he received. Unless our world markets could be restored, we could not continue to produce these quantities without disaster to the producers. As foreign markets could not be restored by magic, some way had to be found for reducing the surplus until the American farmer could find a normal market for the result of his toil. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration was the means by which this effort was and is made.

Critics will condemn what they do not understand or wilfully misrepresent. But during the past 2 years the income of the American farmer has been increased by more than $2,000,000,000 per annum. The prices of his products have increased in many instances more than 100 percent. He has seen the vision of a new hope. He is beginning to pay his debts, and to purchase again the things which he needs for a fuller and happier life, and to continue that indispensable partnership between agriculture and industry.

As a result of the industrial paralysis which existed 2 years ago, unprecedented unemployment stalked over the land like the march of death. More than 13,000,000 workers were without employment. This presented a serious social and economic difficulty which could not be ignored with impunity. It was a task of the first magnitude to attempt to restore men and women to remunerative employment.

The effort to deal with this and correlated evils took the form of the National Industrial Recovery Act. One of the objectives of this new experiment was the spreading of all available labor among as large a number of men as possible, by reducing the hours of labor. Another was the abolition of the curse of American industry, child labor. Another was the elimination of unfair trade practices which were wide-spread and acknowledged, but which no other agency had been able to abolish.

No one ever claimed that this act was a perfect piece of legislation. No one claims or ever claimed that it was or could be administered without error, friction, misunderstanding, or injustice.

But those who from the beginning criticized it without benefit of clergy, offered nothing in its place, and they have offered nothing since its nullification by the Supreme Court. They hug to their bosoms the sacred policy of negation. They are charter members of the fraternity of laissez faire.

Whatever may be said about it, it did for the time abolish child labor. Hundreds of thousands of children have been taken from sweatshops and placed in school and on playgrounds. Between three and four million men secured employment who were idle and many of them objects of national or local charity. Cutthroat competitive practices were to a large extent eliminated. In spite of its admitted defects of administration, which grew out of an effort to cover too much territory, both labor and industry appealed to Congress to preserve what had been found to be useful and constructive.

Whether we give credit to this act or some other act or to a combination of acts, the rolls of unemployment have been vastly curtailed, wages were increased, shorter hours were inaugurated, children ceased to be ground into profits, the purchasing power of the people expanded, and business was and is being conducted on a more elevated plane of ethics and integrity.

But the Supreme Court held the act unconstitutional, not because the codes were bad, not because the act had not or could not accomplish worthy and laudable reforms and improvements, but because Congress adopted the wrong method in bringing about the codes.

And because the Supreme Court declared this and some other acts of Congress unconstitutional, the anvil chorus has been chanting the doleful prophecy that we are destroying the Constitution itself and departing from the form of government set up under it.

During the 150 years of our history Congress has enacted more than 25,000 laws. Altogether, 59 of them have been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. From 1920 to 1930, 19 acts of Congress were declared unconstitutional. But nobody became excited or predicted the downfall of the Republic or announced that Congress or the administration then in power were about to plunge the Nation into the abyss.

Since 1930 the Supreme Court had declared 10 acts of Congress to be unconstitutional, and the noise which has been aroused would lead the unthinking or the uninformed to believe that no such catastrophe had ever before occurred in the history of the Nation.

Growing out of the conditions which I have been describing has been the question of relief for unemployment among the people.

Previously for the most part charity and public relief had been local, dispensed by local authority or by local private institutions.

I need not discuss whether a reversal of this policy could have been avoided. But the President and Congress were soon confronted with the dilemma of permitting men, women, and children to go without food, shelter, or clothing on the one hand, or bringing the agencies of the National Government to their rescue through public funds. There was only one answer to this dilemma.

If cities, counties, and States had exhausted their funds or their power to raise funds, the Federal Government could not close its eyes to the conditions. It was compelled to respond.

The discharge of this obligation has been a great burden upon our public revenues. It will continue so until normal conditions and local agencies can resume the task.

But in the effort to bridge the chasm until private enterprise shall absorb idle men and idle money, we have adopted a work program intended to place 3,500,000 men to work in useful occupations and useful projects which will add permanent values to the social and economic structure of the Nation. Not only will men be called from idleness to work and self-respect, but the number of young men who have been taken from the streets and possible crime and placed in conservation camps to learn something of civic and social responsibility will be doubled in the new set-up for these unique and useful agencies of this new conception of public service.

What, then, does the ledger show to the credit of these past 2 years since the inauguration of a drive against the depression on its entire battle front? How shall the people assess the value of these 2 years? How shall they determine whether the investment has been worth while and whether it ought to be continued?

What has it been worth to establish and improve a sound banking system in which the people have confidence?

The first 4 months of 1935 show an increase in deposits over the same period of 1933 of 43 percent. Will those who criticize what has been done destroy this; and, if so, what will they substitute for it?

What has it been worth to restore the faith and the purchasing power of the American farmer and to save his home and the home of his neighbor in the city?

The cash income of the American farmer for the first 4 months of 1935, over the same period for 1933, shows an increase of 61 percent. Will those who denounce what has been done tell the American people they will reverse this policy?

What has it been worth to the future of America to have eliminated, even for a while, the evils of child labor? Will those who find no good in us return these children to the factories?

What has it been worth to spread among many millions of workers the opportunity to work at all, and at shorter hours and increased wages? And what boots it to say that there are yet other millions who are unemployed?

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics the first 4 months of 1935 show over the same period of 1933 an increase in employment of more than 35 percent in factory employment. For the same period there was an increase in factory pay rolls of 76 percent.

What have they done, are they doing, or will they do who dwell in the realms of the destructive critic to bring work to a single man or woman?

What has it been worth to teach American business something of the doctrine of cooperation and good will in the field of tense competitive struggle?

During the same period referred to above industrial production increased 41 percent according to the Federal Reserve Board. Mining production increased 22 percent, while earnings in 25 selected typical industries increased 40 percent and farm prices increased 21 percent. Can anybody guarantee that a better result would have ensued from anything they have offered or now offer?

What is it worth to have taken nearly half a million young men from the devil's workshop and taught them the immeasurable values of training of body and mind and heart? And will those who ridiculed these efforts tell us what they would have done or would now do for these young men?

What has it been worth to have protected millions of men and women in the investment of their savings as represented in stocks in corporations, by regulating their issue and their sale in the market place? And will those who froth in generalities because of the fancied intrusion into their private contrivances advocate lifting this protection from the people of the Nation?

For the first 4 months of 1935 total domestic capital issues increased over the same period in 1933 by 346 percent, and new issues alone by 168 percent, while for the same period the price of securities increased 45 percent and bonds 26 percent.

What has it been worth to inaugurate a great movement for the construction and repair of homes for the people, not with money from the Treasury, but with money from private sources under the stimulation and encouragement of the Federal Government through the Housing Administration? Today this agency alone is bringing about the expenditure of nearly $2,000,000 per day for housing and all that goes with housing in this country.

But we are told that the Budget is unbalanced. So it is.

For a century and a half we had no Budget. Now that we have one, we can neither balance it nor leave it unbalanced.

We should all like to balance our National Budget and our personal budgets. But there has never been in the Nation's history a great crisis when the National Budget could have been balanced.

It was not balanced during the Civil War, or the Spanish-American War, or the World War. It was not balanced in the depressions of 1873, or 1893, or 1907. During the World War we spent $30,000,000,000 and increased our national debt from two billion to twenty-six billion dollars. By 1929 it had been reduced to seventeen billions, but by 1933 had been increased again to nearly twenty-two billions and by 1935 to nearly twenty-nine billions. These increases have not been made because of the ordinary expenditures of the Government, but because of the extraordinary expenditures because of relief and other results of the depression. But we are now considering a tax measure which will contribute toward the balancing of the Budget and the reduction of our debt.

But our national debt today in proportion to population and wealth and resources is smaller than that of any great nation in the civilized world. And if, as I believe, we shall soon witness a great revival of business and industry in this Nation and our income increases in proportion, we shall be able to discharge our national obligations promptly and in order, which are today selling above par in the financial markets of the world.

But we are told by those who suffer from a sort of intellectual imperviosity that liberty has departed from our midst and that the Constitution is deader than the dodo, because Thomas Jefferson is supposed once to have remarked that "That government is best which governs least." He also said once that the Constitution ought to be revised every 30 years in order to keep it up to date.

Every man who is a part of civilized society has surrendered something of his original liberty in order that orderly society may exist; in order that the orderly progress of the race under guidance and restraint may be guaranteed to the people.

Every time I approach a red light at the corner I surrender some of my liberty. Every time I observe the speed limit on street or highway I surrender some of my liberty. The same is true of a thousand relationships which exist in every civilized community.

In surrendering unrestrained liberty to do as we please we acquire a greater and more enduring liberty; the freedom to live under law and the protection of government; the freedom to work; the freedom to support one's family and to educate one's children; to enjoy all the necessities and some of the comforts of life; the freedom to travel, to vote, to participate in government; the freedom to be unhampered by the strong or the unscrupulous because of the weakness or the indifference of government.

I challenge those who complain that we have robbed the people of their liberty to point to a single example not based on public welfare. I challenge those who weep over the destruction of the States and the demise of the Constitution to indicate where we have stabbed it and where it is buried.

Controversies over the interpretation of the Constitution have raged ever since it was adopted. It was not a perfect document when framed, for it was ratified only on the condition that it should be amended at once in at least 10 particulars, which was done at the first session of Congress after its adoption. It has been amended an equal number of times since. It will probably be amended as many times in the future.

We have not destroyed the Constitution. We are not destroying it. But if the time ever comes when it shall be preserved only by assigning it to a shelf in some museum where it may be seen but never used, then the people themselves will destroy it and make another in its place.

The task of the statesman is not an easy task today. The distress and uncertainty of the people everywhere give rise to all manner of nostrums and of political quackery. In every age of hardship and bitter experience the charlatan, the shallow purveyor of cure-alls, and even the serious but misguided zealot of political upheaval finds it easy to spread the poison of suspicion and misunderstanding. He finds it easy to prey upon ignorance and superstition and lead trusting men and women into a vanishing mirage because it looks like water.

We see all about us today the effort to do this. We hear the noise and confusion; we see the eager faces of millions of people who do not understand the tangled web of economics, of finance, of industry, of government, or of society itself, but who want and deserve a better lot than they have thus far enjoyed.

It is the duty of men who bear the responsibility of leadership, and of parties which are intrusted with power, to chart a course sufficiently liberal and farsighted to enable the people to move steadily toward the goal of a fuller life without destroying the pillars of the temple. It is the duty of those who lead the people to steer the safe course, not worshipping the idols of antiquity nor losing their way in search of the fantastic.

We have been and are seeking the safe course. We are seeking the constructive approach to the solution of the economic relationship between government and people. We are seeking to preserve the stimulus of private initiative, while protecting the less fortunate from some of the rapacity from which they have suffered in the past.

But we seek to do this not by destroying liberty but by enlarging it in the truest sense; not by destroying the Constitution of our country but by making it the instrument of a truly popular government.

THE GUFFEY COAL BILL

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of July 8, 1935, and an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press of the same date, dealing with the so-called "Guffey coal bill."

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of July 8, 1935]

PASS THE GUFFEY COAL BILL

President Roosevelt follows the only logical and honorable course open to him in calling upon Congress to pass the Guffey bill to regulate the soft-coal industry, and let the question of its constitutionality be decided by the Supreme Court.

Typical of Tory hypocrisy is the ranting of reactionary newspapers that Mr. Roosevelt is putting the Supreme Court "on the spot."

What other course would the Tories have him pursue?

It is not the function of Congress to settle questions of constitutionality. That is solely the prerogative of the Supreme Court. And until we have some system by which that Court may render advisory opinions on legislation, either to Congress or to the President, the only method of determining constitutionality of legislation is to pass it and then institute a test case.

That is precisely what Governor Earle did in Pennsylvania on the antiparty raiding bill and the bill authorizing the State to borrow $50,000,000 in anticipation of taxes, both of which our State supreme court upheld.

That is what President Roosevelt will have to do—unless our whole legislative machine is to be stalled every time some legislator questions the constitutionality of a measure.

It is clear what the Tories want. They want the President to do nothing.

Those Tories offered no remedy during the many years they were in power. Nor do they offer a remedy now.

They know that while there are a few profitable bituminous mines in practically constant operation, there are many more marginal mines which operate only when the demand is heavy, and then suffer heavy handicaps economically. The Tories know also that the chaotic situation in the bituminous industry has worked horrible hardships on hundreds of thousands of miners; that the conditions in that industry are even worse expressed in human terms than they are expressed in economic terms.

The Guffey coal bill marks the first constructive effort anyone has made to end this demoralization of a vital industry.

Yet the Tories cry: "No, no! This bill may be unconstitutional." Yet when the President acts to determine whether the Guffey bill is constitutional, they yawp that he is challenging the Supreme Court.

The public will not be fooled by this insincere clamor. The people who gave Mr. Roosevelt one liberal mandate in 1932 and another liberal mandate in 1934 will answer that clamor in 1936.

Go forward, Mr. President. You are on the right path.

The Tories are not the Supreme Court.

[From the Pittsburgh Press of July 8, 1935]

WHO CAN SAY?

President Roosevelt's plea for immediate passage of the Guffey coal bill should not go unheeded.

Twice the United Mine Workers of America have postponed a Nation-wide walkout in order to give Congress sufficient time to act on the Guffey bill. It is not likely the union will wait after July 31—the deadline fixed by the latest truce.

Unless the Guffey bill becomes a law by then, 400,000 coal miners probably will throw down their picks and shovels and quit their jobs. The giant bituminous-coal industry will be crippled. Allied industries, such as steel and rails, will be hard hit. And coal-producing districts like western Pennsylvania will suffer great economic loss and will see much human suffering.

Moreover, the Guffey bill is supported whole-heartedly by the miners and has the backing of a substantial majority of the operators. It is the one new-deal measure that seems to have the approval of the industry affected by it.

Congressional leaders say the reason why the House and Senate have been so reluctant to act is because of doubts as to the Guffey bill's constitutionality. As the President points out, that is no reason for holding up a vote on the bill.

Who can say in advance of a decision by the Supreme Court itself whether the bill is unconstitutional? True, the N. R. A., which the Guffey bill follows in principle, was held invalid. But, on the other hand, the Court endorsed price-fixing and marketing agreements—both features of N. R. A.—in the famous Appalachians decision of 1933.

Neither congressional nor coal company lawyers, therefore, are qualified to pass on the legality of the Guffey bill. It may or may not be constitutional. Only the Supreme Court can say definitely, and it will not hand down a decision until the bill is passed and contested.

The President points this out in a letter to Representative HILL, of the House Ways and Means Committee. He declares:

"No one is in a position to give assurance that the proposed act will withstand constitutional tests, for the simple fact that you can get not ten but a thousand differing legal opinions on the subject."

But, he says, "The situation is so urgent and the benefits of the legislation so evident that all doubt should be resolved in favor of the bill, leaving to the courts, in an orderly fashion, the ultimate question of constitutionality."

The President's advice is sound and worth heeding. In the interest of industrial peace and for the salvation of one of America's great industries, Congress should complete action immediately on the Guffey bill and avert the Nation-wide strike now threatening.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives are to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That this act may be cited as the "Public Utility Act of 1935."

TITLE I—CONTROL OF PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

NECESSITY FOR CONTROL OF HOLDING COMPANIES

SECTION 1. (a) Public-utility holding companies and their subsidiary companies are affected with a national public interest in that, among other things, (1) their securities are widely marketed and distributed by means of the mails and instrumentalities of interstate commerce and are sold to a large number of investors in different States; (2) their service, sales, construction, and other contracts and arrangements are often made and performed by means of the mails and instrumentalities of interstate commerce; (3) their subsidiary public-utility companies often sell and transport gas and electric energy by the use of means and instrumentalities of interstate commerce; (4) their practices in respect of and control over subsidiary companies often materially affect the interstate commerce in which those companies engage; (5) their activities extending over many States are not susceptible of effective control by any State and make difficult, if not impossible, effective State regulation of public-utility companies.

(b) Upon the basis of facts disclosed by the reports of the Federal Trade Commission made pursuant to S. Res. 83 (70th Cong., 1st sess.), the reports of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, made pursuant to H. Res. 59 (72d Cong., 1st sess.) and H. J. Res. 572 (72d Cong., 2d sess.) and otherwise disclosed and ascertained, it is hereby declared that the national public interest, the interest of investors in the securities of holding companies and their subsidiary companies and affiliates, and the interest of consumers of electric energy and natural and manufactured gas, are or may be adversely affected—

(1) when such investors cannot obtain the information necessary to appraise the financial position or earning power of the issuers, because of the absence of uniform standard accounts; when such securities are issued without the approval or consent of the States having jurisdiction over subsidiary public-utility companies; when such securities are issued upon the basis of fictitious or unsound asset values and of paper profits from intercompany transactions, or in anticipation of excessive revenues from subsidiary public-utility companies; when such securities are issued by a subsidiary public-utility company under circumstances which subject such company to the burden of supporting an overcapitalized structure and tend to prevent voluntary rate reductions;

(2) when subsidiary public-utility companies are subjected to excessive charges for services, construction work, equipment, and materials, or enter into transactions in which evils result from an absence of arm's-length bargaining or from restraint of free and independent competition; when service, management, construction, and other contracts involve the allocation of charges among subsidiary public-utility companies in different States so as to present problems of regulation which cannot be dealt with effectively by the States;

(3) when control of subsidiary public-utility companies affects the accounting practices and rate, dividend, and other policies of such companies so as to complicate and obstruct State regulation of such companies, or when control of such companies is exerted through disproportionately small investment;

(4) when the growth and extension of holding companies bears no relation to economy of management and operation or the integration and coordination of related operating properties; or

(5) when in any other respect there is lack of economy of management and operation of public-utility companies or lack of efficiency and adequacy of service rendered by such companies, or lack of effective public regulation, or lack of economies in the raising of capital.

(c) When abuses of the character above enumerated become persistent and wide-spread the holding company becomes an agency which, unless regulated, is injurious to investors, consumers, and the general public; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this title, in accordance with which policy all the provisions of this title shall be interpreted, to prevent the adverse effect upon the public interest and the interest of investors and consumers referred to in subsection (b), and to meet the problems and to eliminate the abuses connected with public-utility holding company systems.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. (a) When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—

(1) "Person" means an individual or company.

(2) "Company" means a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, a business trust, or an organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not.

(3) "Electric utility company" means any company which owns or operates facilities used for the generation, transmission, or distribution of electric energy for sale, other than sale to tenants or employees of the person operating such facilities for their own use and not for resale. The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare a company operating any such facilities not to be an electric utility company if the Commission finds that (A) such company is primarily engaged in one or more businesses other than the business of an electric utility company, and (B) by reason of the small amount of electric energy sold by such company it is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such company be considered an electric utility company for the purposes of this title. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith shall exempt such company (and the owner of the facilities operated by such company) from the application of this paragraph until the Commission has acted upon such application. As a condition to the entry of any such order, and as a part thereof, the Commission may require application to be made periodically for a renewal of such order, and may require the filing of such periodic or special reports regarding the business of the company as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to insure that such company continues to be entitled to such exemption during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application, shall revoke such order whenever it finds that the conditions specified in clauses (A) and (B) are not satisfied in the case of such company. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order. Application under this paragraph may be made by the company in respect of which the order is to be issued or by the owner of the facilities operated by such company. Any order issued under this paragraph shall apply equally to such company and such owner.

(4) "Gas utility company" means any company which owns or operates facilities used for the distribution at retail (other than distribution only in enclosed portable containers, or distribution to tenants or employees of the person operating such facilities for their own use and not for resale) of natural or manufactured gas for heat, light, or power. The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare a company operating any such facilities not to be a gas utility company if the Commission finds that (A) such company is primarily engaged in one or more businesses other than the business of a gas-utility company, and (B) by reason of the small amount of natural or manufactured gas distributed at retail by such company it is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such company be considered a gas utility company for the purposes of this title. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith shall exempt such company (and the owner of the facilities operated by such company) from the application of this paragraph until the Commission has acted upon such application. As a condition to the entry of any such order, and as a part thereof, the Commission may require application to be made periodically for a renewal of such order, and may require the filing of such periodic or special reports regarding the business of the company as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to insure that such company continues to be entitled to such exemption during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application, shall revoke such order whenever it finds that the conditions specified in clauses (A) and (B) are not satisfied in the case of such company. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order. Application under this paragraph may be made by the company in respect of which the order is to be issued or by the owner of the facilities operated by such company. Any order issued under this paragraph shall apply equally to such company and such owner.

(5) "Public-utility company" means an electric utility company or a gas utility company.

(6) "Commission" means the Securities and Exchange Commission.

(7) "Holding company" means—

(A) any company which directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds with power to vote, 10 percent or more of the outstanding voting securities of a public-utility company or of a company which is a holding company by virtue of this clause or clause (B), unless the Commission, as hereinafter provided, by order declares such company not to be a holding company; and

(B) any person which the Commission determines, after notice and opportunity for hearing, directly or indirectly to exercise (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) such a controlling influence over the management or policies of any public-utility or holding company as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such person be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon holding companies.

The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare that a company is not a holding company under clause (A) if the Commission finds that the applicant (i) does not, either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons, directly or indirectly control a public-utility or holding company either through one or more intermediary persons or by any means or device whatsoever, (ii) is not an intermediary company through which such control is exercised, and (iii) does not, directly or indirectly, exercise (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) such a controlling influence over the management or policies of any public-utility or holding company as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that the applicant be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon holding companies. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith by a company other than a registered holding company shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a holding company, until the Commission has acted upon such application. Within a reasonable time after the receipt of any application hereunder, the Commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of, such application. As a condition to the entry of any order granting such application and as a part of any such order, the Commission may require the applicant to apply periodically for a renewal of such order and to do or refrain from doing such acts or things, in respect of exercise of voting rights, control over proxies, designation of officers and directors, existence of interlocking officers, directors and other relationships, and submission of periodic or special reports regarding affiliations or intercorporate relationships of the applicant, as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to ensure that in the case of the applicant the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application of the company affected, shall revoke the order declaring such company not to be a holding company whenever in its judgment any condition specified in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) is not satisfied in the case of such company, or modify the terms of such order whenever in its judgment such modification is necessary to ensure that in the case of such company the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order.

(8) "Subsidiary company" of a specified holding company means—

(A) any company 10 percent or more of the outstanding voting securities of which are directly or indirectly owned, controlled, or held with power to vote, by such holding company (or by a company that is a subsidiary company of such holding company by virtue of this clause or clause (B)), unless the Commission, as hereinafter provided, by order declares such company not to be a subsidiary company of such holding company; and

(B) any person the management or policies of which the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, determines to be subject to a controlling influence, directly or indirectly, by such holding company (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) so as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such person be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon subsidiary companies of holding companies.

The Commission, upon application, shall by order declare that a company is not a subsidiary company of a specified holding company under clause (A) if the Commission finds that (i) the applicant is not controlled, directly or indirectly, by such holding company (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) either through one or more intermediary persons or by any means or device whatsoever, (ii) the applicant is not an intermediary company through which such control of another company is exercised, and (iii) the management or policies of the applicant are not subject to a controlling influence, directly or indirectly, by such holding company (either alone or pursuant to an arrangement or understanding with one or more other persons) so as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that the applicant be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon subsidiary companies of holding companies. The filing of an application hereunder in good faith shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a subsidiary company of such specified holding company until the Commission has acted upon such application.

Within a reasonable time after the receipt of any application hereunder, the Commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of, such application. As a condition to the entry of, and as a part of, any order granting such application, the Commission may require the applicant to apply periodically for a renewal of such order and to file such periodic or special reports regarding the affiliations or intercorporate relationships of the applicant as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate to enable it to determine whether in the case of the applicant the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. The Commission, upon its own motion or upon application, shall revoke the order declaring such company not to be a subsidiary company whenever in its judgment any condition specified in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) is not satisfied in the case of such company, or modify the terms of such order whenever in its judgment such modification is necessary to ensure that in the case of such company the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) are satisfied during the period for which such order is effective. Any action of the Commission under the preceding sentence shall be by order. Any application under this paragraph may be made by the holding company or the company in respect of which the order is to be entered, but as used in this paragraph the term "applicant" means only the company in respect of which the order is to be entered.

(9) "Holding-company system" means any holding company, together with all its subsidiary companies.

(10) "Associate company" of a company means any company in the same holding-company system with such company.

(11) "Affiliate" of a specified company means—

(A) any person that directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds with power to vote, 5 percent or more of the outstanding voting securities of such specified company;

(B) any individual who is an officer or director of such specified company; and

(C) any person that the Commission determines, after notice and opportunity for hearing, to stand in such relation to such specified company that there is such an absence of arm's-length bargaining in transactions between them as to make it necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers that such person be subject to the obligations, duties, and liabilities imposed in this title upon affiliates of a company.

(12) "Registered holding company" means a person whose registration is in effect under section 5.

(13) "Director" means any director of a corporation or any individual who performs similar functions in respect of any company.

(14) "Security" means any note, draft, stock, treasury stock, bond, debenture, certificate of interest, or participation in any profit-sharing agreement or in any oil, gas, other mineral royalty or lease, any collateral-trust certificate, preorganization certificate or subscription, transferable share, investment contract, voting-trust certificate, certificate of deposit for a security, receiver's or trustee's certificate, or, in general, any instrument commonly known as a "security"; or any certificate of interest or participation in, temporary or interim certificate for, receipt for, guaranty of, assumption of liability on, or warrant or right to subscribe to or purchase, any of the foregoing.

(15) "Voting security" means any security presently entitling the owner or holder thereof to vote in the direction or management of the affairs of a company, or any security issued under or pursuant to any trust, agreement, or arrangement whereby a trustee or trustees or agent or agents for the owner or holder of such security are presently entitled to vote in the direction or management of the affairs of a company; and a specified percent of the outstanding voting securities of a company means such amount of the outstanding voting securities of such company as entitles the holder or holders thereof to cast said specified percent of the aggregate votes which the holders of all the outstanding voting securities of such company are entitled to cast in the direction or management of the affairs of such company.

(16) "Utility assets" means the facilities, in place, of any electric utility company or gas utility company for the production, transmission, transportation, or distribution of electric energy or natural or manufactured gas.

(17) "Service contract" means any contract, agreement, or understanding whereby a person undertakes to sell or furnish, for a charge, any managerial, financial, legal, engineering, purchasing, marketing, auditing, statistical, advertising, publicity, tax, research, or any other service, information, or data.

(18) "Sales contract" means any contract, agreement, or understanding whereby a person undertakes to sell, lease, or furnish, for a charge, any goods, equipment, materials, supplies, appliances, or similar property. As used in this paragraph the term "property" does not include electric energy or natural or manufactured gas.

(19) "Construction contract" means any contract, agreement, or understanding for the construction, extension, improvement, maintenance, or repair of the facilities or any part thereof of a company for a charge.

(20) "Buy", "acquire", "acquisition", or "purchase" includes any purchase, acquisition by lease or exchange, or other acquisition.

(21) "Sale" or "sell" includes any sale, disposition by lease, exchange or pledge, or other disposition.

(22) "State" means any State of the United States or the District of Columbia.

(23) "United States", when used in a geographical sense, means the States.

(24) "State commission" means any commission, board, agency, or officer, by whatever name designated, of a State, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State which under the law of such State has jurisdiction to regulate public-utility companies.

(25) "State securities commission" means any commission, board, agency, or officer, by whatever name designated, other than a State commission as defined in paragraph (24) of this subsection, which under the law of a State has jurisdiction to regulate, approve, or control the issue or sale of a security by a company.

(26) "Interstate commerce" means trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or between any State and any place outside thereof.

(27) "Integrated public-utility system" means—

(A) As applied to electric utility companies, a system consisting of one or more units of generating plants and/or transmission lines and distributing facilities, whose utility assets, whether owned by one or more electric-utility companies, are physically interconnected or capable of physical interconnection and which under normal conditions may be economically operated as a single interconnected and coordinated system confined in its operations to a single area or region, in one or more States, not so large as to impair (considering the state of the art and the area or region affected) the advantages of localized management and efficient operation; and

(B) As applied to gas utility companies, a system consisting of one or more gas-utility companies which are so located and related that substantial economies may be effectuated by being operated as a single coordinated system confined in its operations to a single area or region, in one or more States, not so large as to impair (considering the state of the art and the area or region affected) the advantages of localized management and efficient operation, provided that gas-utility companies deriving natural gas from a common source of supply may be deemed to be included in a single area or region.

(b) No person shall be deemed to be a holding company under clause (B) of paragraph (7) of subsection (a), or a subsidiary company under clause (B) of paragraph (8) of such subsection, or an affiliate under clause (C) of paragraph (11) of such subsection, unless the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, has issued an order declaring such person to be a holding company, a subsidiary company, or an affiliate. Such an order shall not become effective for at least 30 days after the mailing of a copy thereof to the person thereby declared to be a holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate. Whenever the Commission, on its own motion or upon application by the person declared to be a holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate, finds that the circumstances which gave rise to the issuance of any such order no longer exist, the Commission shall by order revoke such order.

(c) No provision in this title shall apply to, or be deemed to include, the United States, a State, or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any officer, agent, or employee of any of the foregoing acting as such in the course of his official duty, unless such provision makes specific reference thereto.

POWER TO MAKE PARTICULAR EXEMPTIONS REGARDING HOLDING COMPANIES, SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATES

SEC. 3. (a) The Commission, by rules and regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application, shall exempt any holding company, and every subsidiary company thereof as such, from any provision or provisions of this title, unless and except insofar as it finds the exemption detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers, if—

(1) such holding company, and every subsidiary company thereof which is a public-utility company from which such holding company derives, directly or indirectly, any material part of its income, are predominantly intrastate in character and carry on their business substantially in a single State in which such holding company and every such subsidiary company thereof are organized;

(2) such holding company is predominantly a public-utility company whose operations as such do not extend beyond the State in which it is organized and States contiguous thereto;

(3) such holding company is only incidentally a holding company, being primarily engaged or interested in one or more businesses other than the business of a public-utility company and (A) not deriving, directly or indirectly, any material part of its income from any one or more subsidiary companies, the principal business of which is that of a public-utility company, or (B) deriving a material part of its income from any one or more such subsidiary companies, if substantially all the outstanding securities of such companies are owned, directly or indirectly, by such holding company;

(4) such holding company is temporarily a holding company solely by reason of the acquisition of securities for purposes of liquidation or distribution in connection with a bona fide debt previously contracted or in connection with a bona fide arrangement for the underwriting or distribution of securities; or

(5) such holding company is not, and derives no material part of its income, directly or indirectly, from any one or more subsidiary companies which are, a company or companies the principal business of which within the United States is that of a public-utility company.

(b) The Commission, by rules and regulations upon its own motion, or by order upon application, shall exempt any subsidiary company, as such, of a holding company from any provision or provisions of this title, unless and except insofar as it finds the exemption detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers, if such subsidiary company derives no material part of its income, directly or indirectly, from sources within the United States, and neither it nor any of its subsidiary companies is a public-utility company operating in the United States.

(c) Within a reasonable time after the receipt of an application for exemption under subsection (a) or (b), the Commission shall enter an order granting, or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying or otherwise disposing of such application. The filing of an application in good faith under subsection (a) by a person other than a registered holding company shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a holding company until the Commission has acted upon such application. The filing of an application in good faith under subsection (b) shall exempt the applicant from any obligation, duty, or liability imposed in this title upon the applicant as a subsidiary company until the Commission has acted upon such application. Whenever the Commission, on its own motion, or upon application by the holding company or any subsidiary company thereof exempted by any order issued under subsection (a), or by the subsidiary company exempted by any order issued under subsection (b), finds that the circumstances which gave rise to the issuance of such order no longer exist, the Commission shall by order revoke such order.

(d) The Commission may, by rules and regulations, conditionally or unconditionally exempt any specified class or classes of persons from the obligations, duties, or liabilities imposed upon such persons as subsidiary companies or affiliates under any provision or provisions of this title, if and to the extent that it deems the exemption necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

TRANSACTIONS BY UNREGISTERED HOLDING COMPANIES

SEC. 4. (a) After December 1, 1935, unless a holding company is registered under section 5, it shall be unlawful for such holding company, directly or indirectly—

(1) to sell, transport, transmit, or distribute, or own or operate any utility assets for the transportation, transmission, or distribution of, natural or manufactured gas or electric energy in interstate commerce;

(2) by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, to negotiate, enter into, or take any step in the performance of, any service, sales, or construction contract undertaking to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any public-utility company or holding company;

(3) to distribute or make any public offering for sale or exchange of any security of such holding company, any subsidiary company or affiliate of such holding company, any public-utility company, or any holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or to sell any such security having reason to believe that such security, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, will be distributed or made the subject of a public offering;

(4) by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, to acquire or negotiate for the acquisition of any security or utility assets of any subsidiary company or affiliate of such holding company, any public-utility company, or any holding company; or

(5) to engage in any business in interstate commerce.

(b) Every holding company which has outstanding any security any of which, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, has been distributed or made the subject of a public offering subsequent to January 1, 1925, and any of which security is owned or held on October 1, 1935 (or, if such company is not a holding company on that date, on the date such company becomes a holding company) by persons not resident in the State in which such holding company is organized, shall register under section 5 on or before December 1, 1935, or the thirtieth day after such holding company becomes a holding company, whichever date is later.

REGISTRATION OF HOLDING COMPANIES

SEC. 5. (a) On or at any time after October 1, 1935, any holding company or any person purposing to become a holding company may register by filing with the Commission a notification of registration, in such form as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. A person shall be deemed to be registered upon receipt by the Commission of such notification of registration.

(b) It shall be the duty of every registered holding company to file with the Commission, within such reasonable time after registration as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, a registration statement in such form as the Commission shall by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. Such registration statement shall include—

(1) such copies of the charter or articles of incorporation, partnership, or agreement, with all amendments thereto, and the by-laws, trust indentures, mortgages, underwriting arrangements, voting-trust agreements, and similar documents, by whatever name known, of or relating to the registrant or any of its associate companies as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers;

(2) such information in such form and in such detail relating to, and copies of such documents of or relating to, the registrant and its associate companies as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers in respect of—

(A) the organization and financial structure of such companies and the nature of their business;

(B) the terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of their securities outstanding;

(C) the terms and underwriting arrangements under which their securities, during not more than the 5 preceding years, have been offered to the public or otherwise disposed of and the relations of underwriters to, and their interest in, such companies;

(D) the directors and officers of such companies, their remuneration, their interest in the securities of, their material contracts with, and their borrowings from, any of such companies;

(E) bonus and profit-sharing arrangements;

(F) material contracts, not made in the ordinary course of business, and service, sales, and construction contracts;

(G) options in respect of securities;

(H) balance sheets for not more than the 5 preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission, by an independent public accountant;

(3) such further information or documents regarding the registrant or its associate companies or the relations between them as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(c) Whenever the Commission, upon application, finds that a registered holding company has ceased to be a holding company, it shall so declare by order, and upon the taking effect of such order the registration of such company shall, upon such terms and conditions as the Commission finds and in such order prescribes as necessary for the protection of investors, cease to be in effect. The denial of any such application by the Commission shall be by order.

UNLAWFUL SECURITY TRANSACTIONS BY REGISTERED HOLDING AND SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES

SEC. 6. (a) Except in accordance with a declaration effective under section 7, it shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, or for any subsidiary company thereof which is a public utility company the issuance of whose securities is not subject to regulation by a State commission or State securities commission, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly (1) to issue or sell any security of such company; or (2) to exercise any privilege or right to alter the priorities, preferences, voting power, or other rights of the holders of an outstanding security of such company.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to the issue, renewal, or guaranty by a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof of a note or draft (including the pledge of any security as collateral therefor) if such note or draft (1) is not part of a public offering, (2) matures or is renewed for not more than 9 months, exclusive of days of grace, after the date of such issue, renewal, or guaranty thereof, and (3) aggregates (together with all other then outstanding notes and drafts of a maturity of 9 months or less, exclusive of days of grace, as to which such company is primarily or secondarily liable) not more than 5 percent of the principal amount and par value of the other securities of such company then outstanding, or such greater percent thereof as the Commission upon application may by order authorize as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. In the case of securities having no principal amount or no par value, the value for the purposes of this subsection shall be the fair market value as of the date of issue. The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to the issue, by a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, of a security issued pursuant to the terms of any security outstanding on January 1, 1935, giving the holder of such outstanding security the right to convert such outstanding security into another security of the same issuer or of another person, or giving the right to subscribe to another security of the same issuer or another issuer. Within 10 days after any such issue, renewal, or guaranty, such holding company or subsidiary company thereof shall file with the Commission a certificate of notification in such form and setting forth such of the information required in a declaration under section 7 as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by the use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, to cause any officer or employee of any subsidiary company of such holding company to sell or cause to be sold any security of such holding company.

DECLARATIONS BY REGISTERED HOLDING AND SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES IN RESPECT OF SECURITY TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 7. (a) A registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof may file a declaration with the Commission, regarding any of the acts enumerated in subsection (a) of section 6, in such form as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. Such declaration shall include—

(1) such of the information and documents which are required to be filed in order to register a security under section 7 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers; and

(2) such additional information, in such form and detail, and such documents regarding the declarant or any associate company thereof, the particular security and compliance with such State laws as may apply to the act in question as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(b) A declaration filed under this section shall become effective within such reasonable period of time after the filing thereof as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, unless the Commission prior to the expiration of such period shall have issued an order to the declarant to show cause why such declaration should become effective. Within a reasonable time after an opportunity for hearing upon an order to show cause under this subsection, unless the declarant shall withdraw its declaration, the Commission shall enter an order either permitting such declaration to become effective as filed or amended, or refusing to permit such declaration to become effective. Amendments to a declaration may be made upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe.

(c) The Commission shall not permit a declaration regarding the issue or sale of a security to become effective unless it finds that—

(1) such security is (A) a common stock having a par value and being without preference as to dividends or distribution over, and having at least equal voting rights with, any outstanding security of the declarant; (B) a bond adequately secured by a lien on assets of the declarant; (C) a guaranty of, or assumption of liability on, a security of another company; or (D) a receiver's or trustee's certificate duly authorized by the appropriate court or courts; or

(2) such security is to be issued or sold solely (A) for the purpose of refunding, extending, exchanging, or discharging an outstanding security of the declarant and/or a predecessor company thereof or for the purpose of effecting a merger, consolidation, or other reorganization; (B) for the purpose of financing the business of the declarant as a public-utility company; (C) for the purpose of financing the business of the declarant, when the declarant is neither a holding company nor a public-utility company; and/or (D) for necessary and urgent corporate purposes of the declarant where the requirements of the provisions of paragraph (1) would impose an unreasonable financial burden upon the declarant and are not necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers; or

(3) such security is one the issuance of which was authorized by the company before January 1, 1935.

(d) If the requirements of subsection (c) are satisfied, the Commission shall permit a declaration regarding the issue or sale of a security to become effective unless the Commission finds that—

(1) the security is not reasonably adapted to the security structure of the declarant and other companies in the same holding company system;

(2) the security does not bear a proper relation to the fair value of the property of the declarant and its subsidiary companies;

(3) financing by the issue and sale of the particular security is not necessary or appropriate to the economical and efficient operation of a business in which the applicant lawfully is engaged or has an interest;

(4) the fees, commissions, or other remuneration, to whomsoever paid, directly or indirectly, in connection with the issue, sale, or distribution of the security are not reasonable;

(5) in the case of a security that is a guaranty of, or assumption of liability on, a security of another company, the circumstances are such as to constitute the making of such guaranty or the assumption of such liability an improper risk for the declarant; or

(6) the terms and conditions of the issue or sale of the security are detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

(e) The Commission shall permit a declaration to become effective regarding the exercise of a privilege or right to alter the priorities, preferences, voting power, or other rights of the holders of an outstanding security unless in the judgment of the Commission such exercise of such privilege or right will result in an unfair or inequitable distribution of voting power among holders of the securities of the declarant or is otherwise detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

ACQUIRING INTEREST IN ELECTRIC AND GAS UTILITY COMPANIES SERVING SAME TERRITORY

SEC. 8. Whenever a State law prohibits, or requires approval or authorization of, the ownership or operation by a single company of the utility assets of an electric-utility company and a gas-utility company serving substantially the same territory, it shall be unlawful for a registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise—

(1) to take any step, without the express approval of the State commission of such State, which results in its having a direct or indirect interest in an electric-utility company and a gas-utility company serving substantially the same territory; or

(2) if it already has any such interest, to acquire, without the express approval of the State commission, any direct or indirect interest in an electric-utility company or gas-utility company serving substantially the same territory as that served by such companies in which it already has an interest.

ACQUISITION OF SECURITIES AND UTILITY ASSETS AND OTHER INTERESTS

SEC. 9. (a) Unless the acquisition has been approved by the Commission under section 10, it shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to acquire, directly or indirectly, any securities or utility assets or any other interest in any business.

(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply to—

(1) the acquisition by a public-utility company of utility assets the acquisition of which has been expressly authorized by a State commission; or

(2) the acquisition by a public-utility company of securities of a subsidiary public-utility company thereof, provided that both such public-utility companies and all other public-utility companies in the same holding-company system are organized in the same State, that the business of each such company in such system is substantially confined to such State, and that the acquisition of such securities has been expressly authorized by the State commission of such State.

(c) Subsection (a) shall not apply to the acquisition by a registered holding company, or a subsidiary company thereof, of—

(1) securities of, or securities the principal or interest of which is guaranteed by, the United States, a State, or political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing;

(2) such other readily marketable securities, within the limitation of such amounts, as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as appropriate for investment of current funds and as not detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers; or

(3) such commercial paper and other securities, within such limitations, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as appropriate in the ordinary course of business of a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof and as not detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

APPROVAL OF ACQUISTION OF SECURITIES AND UTILITY ASSETS AND OTHER INTERESTS

SEC. 10. (a) A person may apply for approval of the acquisition of securities or utility assets, or of any other interest in any business, by filing an application in such form as the Commisson may by rules and regulatons prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors and consumers. Such application shall include—

(1) in the case of the acquisition of securities, such information and copies of such documents as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers in respect of—

(A) the security to be acquired, the consideration to be paid therefor, and compliance with such State laws as may apply in respect of the issue, sale, or acquisition thereof;

(B) the outstanding securities of the company whose security is to be acquired, the terms, position, rights, and privileges of each class and the options in respect of any such securities;

(C) the names of all security holders of record (or otherwise known to the applicant) owning, holding, or controlling 1 percent or more of any class of security of such company, the officers and directors of such company, and their remuneration, security holdings in, material contracts with, and borrowings from such company and the offices or directorships held, and securities owned, held, or controlled, by them in other companies;

(D) the bonus, profit-sharing and voting-trust agreements, underwriting arrangements, trust indentures, mortgages, and similar documents, by whatever name known, of or relating to such company;

(E) the material contracts, not made in the ordinary course of business, and the service, sales, and construction contracts of such company;

(F) the securities owned, held, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such company;

(G) balance sheets of such company for not more than the 5 preceding fiscal years, certified, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by an independent public accountant;

(H) any further information regarding such company and any associate company or affiliate thereof, or its relations with the applicant company; and

(I) if the applicant be not a registered holding company, any of the information and documents which may be required under section 5 from a registered holding company;

(2) in the case of the acquisition of utility assets, such information concerning such assets, the value thereof and consideration to be paid therefor, the owner or owners thereof and their relation to, agreements with, and interest in the securities of, the applicant or any associate company thereof as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers; and

(3) in the case of the acquisition of any other interest in any business, such information concerning such business and the interest to be acquired, and the consideration to be paid, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(b) If the requirements of subsection (f) are satisfied, the Commission shall approve the acquisition unless the Commission finds that—

(1) such acquisition will tend toward interlocking relations or the concentration of control of public-utility companies, of a kind or to an extent detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers;

(2) in case of the acquisition of securities or utility assets, the consideration, including all fees, commissions, and other remuneration, to whomsoever paid, to be given, directly or indirectly, in connection with such acquisition is not reasonable or does not bear a proper relation to the fair value of the utility assets to be acquired or the utility assets underlying the securities to be acquired; or

(3) such acquisition will unduly complicate the capital structure of the holding-company system of the applicant or will be detrimental to the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers.

The Commission may condition its approval of the acquisition of securities of another company upon such a fair offer to purchase such of the other securities of the company whose security is to be acquired as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), the Commission shall not approve—

(1) an acquisition of securities or utility assets, or of any other interest, which is unlawful under the provisions of section 8; or

(2) the acquisition of securities or utility assets of a public-utility or holding company unless the Commission finds that such acquisition will serve the public interest by tending toward the economical and efficient development of an integrated public-utility system. This paragraph shall not apply to the acquisition of securities or utility assets of a public-utility company operating exclusively outside the United States.

(d) Within such reasonable time after the filing of an application under this section as the Commission shall fix by rules and regulations or order, the Commission shall enter an order either granting or, after notice and opportunity for hearing, denying approval of the acquisition unless the applicant shall withdraw its application. Amendments to an application may be made upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may prescribe.

(e) The Commission, in any order approving the acquisition of securities or utility assets, may prescribe such terms and conditions in respect of such acquisition, including the price to be paid for such securities or utility assets, as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(f) The Commission shall not approve any acquisition as to which an application is made under this section unless it appears to the satisfaction of the Commission that such State laws as may apply in respect of such acquisition have been complied with, except where the Commission finds that compliance with such State laws would be detrimental to the carrying out of the provisions of section 11.

SIMPLIFICATION OF HOLDING-COMPANY SYSTEMS

SEC. 11. (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission to examine the corporate structure of every registered holding company and subsidiary company thereof, the relationships among the companies in the holding-company system of every such company and the character of the interests thereof and the properties owned or controlled thereby to determine the extent to which the corporate structure of such holding-company system and the companies therein may be simplified, unnecessary complexities therein eliminated, voting power fairly and equitably distributed among the holders of securities thereof, and the properties and business thereof confined to those necessary or appropriate to the operations of one or more integrated public-utility systems.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, by order to require each registered holding company and each subsidiary company thereof to take such action (either by divesting itself of any interest in or control over property or persons, or otherwise) as the Commission finds necessary to limit the operations of the holding-company system of which such company is a part to a single integrated public-utility system; except that if the Commission finds that it is not necessary in the public interest to so limit the operations of such holding-company system, the order of the Commission shall require such company to take only such action (either by divesting itself of any interest in or control over persons or property, or otherwise) as the Commission finds necessary to limit such operations to such number of integrated public-utility systems as it finds may be included in such holding-company system consistently with the public interest. The Commission shall not, under the foregoing provisions of this subsection, require any company to divest itself of any interest in or control over (1) persons or property other than a public-utility company or the utility assets of a public-utility company unless the Commission finds that such interest or control may not be retained consistently with the public interest, or (2) any person doing business exclusively outside the United States, or property located outside the United States.

(c) The Commission may proceed under subsection (b) either upon its own motion or upon application of any registered holding company and all subsidiary companies thereof, but no such proceeding shall be begun upon the Commission's own motion prior to January 1, 1938.

(d) The Commission is authorized, if appointed by the court, to act as trustee or receiver in any proceeding instituted under subsection (f) of section 18 for the enforcement of an order issued under subsection (b) of this section.

(e) Any order under subsection (b) shall be complied with within 1 year from the date of such order; but the Commission shall, upon a showing (made before or after the entry of such order) that the applicant has been or will be unable in the exercise of due diligence to comply with such order within such time, extend such time for an additional period not exceeding 1 year if it finds such extension necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(f) It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or permit the use of his or its name to solicit, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, any proxy, authorization, or power of attorney, in respect of any reorganization plan of a registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof under this section, or otherwise, or in respect of any plan under this section for the divestment of control, securities, or other assets, or for the dissolution of any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, unless—

(1) the plan has been proposed by the Commission, or the plan and such information regarding it and its sponsors as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers has been submitted to the Commission by a person having a bona fide interest (as defined by the rules and regulations of the Commission) in such reorganization;

(2) each such solicitation is accompanied or preceded by a copy of a report on the plan which shall be made by the Commission after an opportunity for a hearing on the plan and other plans submitted to it, or by an abstract of such report made or approved by the Commission; and

(3) each such solicitation is made not in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

Nothing in this subsection or the rules and regulations thereunder shall prevent any person from appearing before the Commission or any court through an attorney or proxy.

INTERCOMPANY LOANS; DIVIDENDS; SECURITY TRANSACTIONS; SALE OF UTILITY ASSETS; PROXIES; OTHER TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 12. (a) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, to borrow, or to receive any extension of credit or indemnity, from any public-utility company in the same holding-company system or from any subsidiary company of such holding company, but it shall not be unlawful under this subsection to renew, or extend the time of, any loan, credit, or indemnity outstanding on the date of the enactment of this title.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly, to lend or in any manner extend its credit to or indemnify any company in the same holding-company system in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to declare or pay any dividend on any security of such company or to acquire, retire, or redeem any security of such company, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate to protect the financial integrity of companies in holding-company systems, to safeguard the working capital of public-utility companies, to prevent the payment of dividends out of capital or unearned surplus, or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to sell any security which it owns of any public-utility company, or any utility assets, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding the consideration to be received for such sale, competitive bidding, fees and commissions, accounts, disclosure of interest, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(e) It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or to permit the use of his or its name to solicit, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, any proxy, power of attorney, consent, or authorization regarding the voting of any security of a registered holding company or a subsidiary company thereof in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(f) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to negotiate, enter into or take any step in the performance of any transaction not otherwise unlawful under this title, with any company in the same holding-company system or with any affiliate of a company in such holding-company system in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding reports, accounts, costs, competitive bidding, disclosure of interest, duration of contracts, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

(g) It shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, directly or indirectly—

(1) to make any contribution whatsoever in connection with the candidacy, nomination, election, or appointment of any person for or to any office or position in the Government of the United States, a State, or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing; or

(2) to make any contribution to or in support of any political party or any committee or agency thereof.

The term " contribution " as used in this subsection includes any gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and includes any contract, agreement, or promise, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

(h) It shall be unlawful for any person employed or retained by any registered holding company, or any subsidiary company thereof, to present, advocate, or oppose any matter affecting any registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, before the Congress or any Member or committee thereof, or before the Commission or Federal Power Commission, or any member, officer, or employee of either such Commission, unless such person shall file with the Commission in such form and detail and at such time as the Commission shall by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, a statement of the subject matter in respect of which such person is retained or employed, the nature and character of such retainer or employment, and the amount of compensation received or to be received by such person, directly or indirectly, in connection therewith. It shall be the duty of every such person so employed or retained to file with the Commission within 10 days after the close of each calendar month during such retainer or employment, in such form and detail as the Commission shall by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, a statement of the expenses incurred and the compensation received by such person during such month in connection with such retainer or employment.

SERVICE, SALES, AND CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

SEC. 13. (a) After April 1, 1936, it shall be unlawful for any registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract by which such company undertakes to perform services or construction work for, or sell goods to, any associate company thereof which is a public-utility company.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to such transactions, involving special or unusual circumstances or not in the ordinary course of business, as the Commission by rules and regulations or order may conditionally or unconditionally exempt as being necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any subsidiary company of a registered holding company, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to negotiate, enter into, or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract with any other company in the same holding-company system, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding the consideration to be paid and other terms of such contracts, accounts, reports, costs, competitive bidding, disclosure of interest, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person whose principal business is the performance of service, sales, or construction contracts for public-utility or holding companies, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract with any public-utility company, or for any such person, by use of the mails or any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce, or otherwise, to enter into or take any step in the performance of any service, sales, or construction contract with any public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce, or with any registered holding company or any subsidiary company of a registered holding company, in contravention of such rules and regulations or orders regarding reports, accounts, costs, competitive bidding, disclosure of interest, duration of contracts, and similar matters as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or to prevent the circumvention of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(e) The Commission, in order to obtain information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation, shall from time to time conduct investigations regarding the making, performance, and costs of service, sales, and construction contracts with holding companies and subsidiary companies thereof and with public-utility companies, the economies resulting therefrom, and the desirability thereof. The Commission shall report to Congress, from time to time, the results of such investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable. On the basis of such investigations the Commission shall classify the different types of such contracts and the work done thereunder, and shall make recommendations from time to time regarding the standards and scope of such contracts in relation to public-utility companies of different kinds and sizes and the costs incurred thereunder and economies resulting therefrom. Such recommendations shall be made available to State commissions, public-utility companies, and to the public in such form and at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe.

PERIODIC AND OTHER REPORTS

SEC. 14. Every registered holding company shall file with the Commission such annual, quarterly, and other periodic and special reports, the answers to such specific questions and the minutes of such directors', stockholders', and other meetings, as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers. Such reports, if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission, shall be certified by an independent public accountant, and shall be made and filed at such time and in such form and detail as the Commission shall prescribe. The Commission may require that there be included in reports filed with it such information and documents as it finds necessary or appropriate to keep reasonably current the information filed under section 5, and such further information concerning the financial condition, security structure, security holdings, assets, and cost thereof, wherever determinable, and affiliations of the reporting company and the associate companies and affiliates thereof as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS

SEC. 15. (a) Every registered holding company and every subsidiary company thereof shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(b) Every affiliate of a registered holding company or of any subsidiary company thereof, or of any public-utility company engaged in interstate commerce or not so engaged, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records relating to any transaction of such affiliate which is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder.

(c) Every person whose principal business is the performance of service, sales, or construction contracts for public-utility or holding companies shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, relating to any transaction by such person which is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers or for the enforcement of the provisions of this title or the rules and regulations thereunder.

(d) After the Commission has prescribed the form and manner of making and keeping accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records to be kept by any person hereunder, it shall be unlawful for any such person to keep any accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, or other records other than those prescribed or such as may be approved by the Commission, or to keep his or its accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, or other records in any manner other than that prescribed or approved by the Commission.

(e) All accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records kept or required to be kept by persons subject to any provision of this section shall be subject at any time and from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, and other examinations by the Commission, or any member or representative thereof, as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, may prescribe the account or accounts in which particular outlays, receipts, and other transactions shall be entered, charged, or credited and the manner in which such entry, charge, or credit shall be made, and may require an entry to be modified or supplemented so as properly to show the cost of any asset or any other cost.

(f) It shall be the duty of every registered holding company and of every subsidiary company thereof and of every affiliate of a company insofar as such affiliate is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, to submit the accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records of such holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate, as the case may be, to such examinations, in person or by duly appointed attorney, by the holder of any security of such holding company, subsidiary company, or affiliate, as the case may be, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(g) It shall be the duty of any person whose principal business is the performance of service, sales, or construction contracts for public-utility or holding companies, insofar as such person is subject to any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, to submit the accounts, cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records of such person to such examinations, in person or by duly appointed attorney, by any public-utility or holding company for which such person performs service, sales, or construction contracts, as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

LIABILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS

SEC. 16. (a) Any person who shall make or cause to be made any statement in any application, report, registration statement, or document filed pursuant to any provision of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading with respect to any material fact, shall be liable in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same limitations as provided in section 18 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 with respect to an application, report, or document filed pursuant to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

(b) The rights and remedies provided by this title, except as provided in section 17 (b), shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or otherwise at law or in equity; but no person permitted to maintain a suit for damages under the provisions of this title shall recover, through satisfaction of judgment in one or more actions, a total amount in excess of his actual damages on account of the act complained of.

OFFICERS, DIRECTORS, AND OTHER AFFILIATES

SEC. 17. (a) Every person who is an officer or director of a registered holding company shall file with the Commission in such form as the Commission shall prescribe (1) at the time of the registration of such holding company, or within 10 days after such person becomes an officer or director, a statement of the securities of such registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof of which he is, directly or indirectly, the beneficial owner, and (2) within 10 days after the close of each calendar month thereafter, if there has been any change in such ownership during such month, a statement of such ownership as of the close of such calendar month and of the changes in such ownership that have occurred during such calendar month.

(b) For the purpose of preventing the unfair use of information which may have been obtained by any such officer or director by reason of his relationship to such registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof, any profit realized by any such officer or director from any purchase and sale, or any sale and purchase, of any security of such registered holding company or any subsidiary company thereof within any period of less than 6 months, unless such security was acquired in good faith in connection with a debt previously contracted, shall inure to and be recoverable by the holding company or subsidiary company in respect of the security of which such profit was realized, irrespective of any intention on the part of such officer or director in entering into such transaction to hold the security purchased or not to repurchase the security sold for a period of more than 6 months. Suit to recover such profit may be instituted at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction by the company entitled thereto or by the owner of any security of such company in the name and in the behalf of such company if such company shall fail or refuse to bring such suit within 60 days after request or shall fail diligently to prosecute the same thereafter; but no such suit shall be brought more than 2 years after the date such profit was realized. This subsection shall not cover any transaction where such person was not an officer or director at the times of the purchase and sale, or the sale and purchase, of the security involved, or any transaction or transactions which the Commission by rules and regulations may, as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, exempt as not comprehended within the purpose of this subsection. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to give a remedy in the case of any transaction in respect of which a remedy is given under subsection (b) of section 16 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

INVESTIGATIONS; INJUNCTIONS, ENFORCEMENT OF TITLE, AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

SEC. 18. (a) The Commission, in its discretion, may investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may deem necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this title, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder, or in obtaining information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this title relates. The Commission may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as it shall determine, as to any or all facts and circumstances concerning a matter which may be the subject of investigation. The Commission, in its discretion, may publish or make available to State commissions information concerning any such subject.

(b) The Commission upon its own motion or at the request of a State commission may investigate, or obtain any information regarding the business, financial condition, or practices of any registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof or facts, conditions, practices, or matters affecting the relations between any such company and any other company or companies in the same holding-company system.

(c) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding under this title, any member of the Commission, or any officer thereof designated by it, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in any State at any designated place of hearing.

(d) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who, without just cause, shall fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records, if in his or its power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both.

(e) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

(f) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this title, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper district court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin such acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or decree or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who, in his discretion, may institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this title.

(g) Upon application of the Commission, the district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any order of the Commission thereunder.

HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

SEC. 19. Hearings may be public and may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof, or any officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept. In any proceeding before the Commission, the Commission, in accordance with such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, shall admit as a party any interested State, State commission, State securities commission, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State, and may admit as a party any representative of interested consumers or security holders, or any other person whose participation in the proceedings may be in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

SEC. 20. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, issue, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations and such orders as it may deem necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title, including rules and regulations defining accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this title. Among other things, the Commission shall have authority, for the purposes of this title, to prescribe the form or forms in which information required in any statement, declaration, application, report, or other document filed with the Commission shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in balance sheets, profit and loss statements, and surplus accounts, the manner in which the cost of all assets, whenever determinable, shall be shown in regard to such statements, declarations, applications, reports, and other documents filed with the Commission, or accounts required to be kept by the rules, regulations, or orders of the Commission, and the methods to be followed in the keeping of accounts and cost-accounting procedures and the preparation of reports, in the segregation and allocation of costs, in the determination of liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the keeping or preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or appropriate, of separate or consolidated balance sheets or profit and loss statements for any companies in the same holding company system.

(b) In the case of the accounts of any company whose methods of accounting are prescribed under the provisions of any law of the United States or of any State, the rules and regulations or orders of the Commission in respect of accounts shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or any rule or regulation thereunder; nor shall anything in this title relieve any public-utility company from the duty to keep the accounts, books, records, or memoranda which may be required to be kept by the law of any State in which it operates or by the State commission of any such State. But this provision shall not prevent the Commission from imposing such additional requirements regarding reports or accounts as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers.

(c) The rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. For the purpose of its rules, regulations, or orders the Commission may classify persons and matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons or matters. Orders of the Commission under this title shall be issued only after opportunity for hearing.

(d) The Commission, by such rules and regulations or order as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or consumers, may authorize the filing of any information or documents required to be filed with the Commission under this title, or under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, by incorporating by reference any information or documents theretofore or concurrently filed with the Commission under this title or either of such acts

EFFECT ON EXISTING LAW

SEC. 21. Nothing in this title shall affect (1) the jurisdiction of the Commission under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 over any person, security, or contract, or (2) the rights, obligations, duties, or liabilities of any person under such acts; nor shall anything in this title affect the jurisdiction of any other commission, board, agency, or officer of the United States or of any State or political subdivision of any State, over any person, security, or contract, insofar as such jurisdiction does not conflict with any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

INFORMATION FILED WITH THE COMMISSION

SEC. 22. (a) When in the judgment of the Commission the disclosure of such information would be in the public interest or the interest of investors or consumers, the information contained in any statement, application, declaration, report, or other document filed with the Commission shall be available to the public, and copies thereof may be furnished to any person at such reasonable charge and under such reasonable limitations as the Commission may prescribe: Provided, however, That nothing in this title shall be construed to require, or to authorize the Commission to require, the revealing of trade secrets or processes in any application, declaration, report, or document filed with the Commission under this title.

(b) Any person filing such application, declaration, report, or document may make written objection to the public disclosure of information contained therein, stating the grounds for such objection, and the Commission is authorized to hear objections in any such case where it finds it advisable.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any member, officer, or employee of the Commission to disclose to any person other than a member, officer, or employee of the Commission, or to use for personal benefit, any information contained in any application, declaration, report, or document filed with the Commission which is not made available to the public pursuant to this section.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF COMMISSION

SEC. 23. The Commission shall submit annually a report to the Congress covering the work of the Commission for the preceding year and including such information, data, and recommendations for further legislation in connection with the matters covered by this title as it may find advisable.

COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

SEC. 24. (a) Any person or party aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission under this title may obtain a review of such order in the circuit court of appeals of the United States within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission, or upon any officer thereof designated by the Commission for that purpose, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission or unless there were reasonable grounds for failure so to do. The findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file with the court such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES

SEC. 25. The district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder, and, concurrently with State and territorial courts, of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or the rules, regulations, or orders thereunder. Any criminal proceeding may be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or rules, regulations, or orders thereunder, may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is an inhabitant or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against the Commission in any court.

VALIDITY OF CONTRACTS

SEC. 26. (a) Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person to waive compliance with any provision of this title or with any rule, regulation, or order thereunder shall be void.

(b) Every contract made in violation of any provision of this title or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and every contract heretofore or hereafter made, the performance of which involves the violation of, or the continuance of any relationship or practice in violation of, any provision of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall be void (1) as regards the rights of any person who, in violation of any such provision, rule, regulation, or order, shall have made or engaged in the performance of any such contract, and (2) as regards the rights of any person who, not being a party to such contract, shall have acquired any right thereunder with actual knowledge of the facts by reason of which the making or performance of such contract was in violation of any such provision, rule, regulation, or order.

(c) Nothing in this title shall be construed (1) to affect the validity of any loan or extension of credit (or any extension or renewal thereof) made or of any lien created prior or subsequent to the enactment of this title, unless at the time of the making of such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or the creating of such lien, the person making such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or acquiring such lien shall have actual knowledge of facts by reason of which the making of such loan or extension of credit (or extension or renewal thereof) or the acquisition of such lien is a violation of the provisions of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, or (2) to afford a defense to the collection of any debt or obligation or the enforcement of any lien by any person who shall have acquired such debt, obligation, or lien in good faith for value and without actual knowledge of the violation of any provision of this title or any rule or regulation thereunder affecting the legality of such debt, obligation, or lien.

LIABILITY OF CONTROLLING PERSONS; PREVENTING COMPLIANCE WITH TITLE

SEC. 27. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to cause to be done any act or thing through or by means of any other person which it would be unlawful for such person to do under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person without just cause to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making, filing, or keeping of any information, document, report, record, or account required to be made, filed, or kept under any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATIONS

SEC. 28. It shall be unlawful for any person in issuing, selling, or offering for sale any security of a registered holding company or subsidiary company thereof, to represent or imply in any manner whatsoever that such security has been guaranteed, sponsored, or recommended for investment by the United States or any agency or officer thereof.

PENALTIES

SEC. 29. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder (other than an order of the Commission under section 11), or any person who willfully makes any statement or entry in any application, report, document, account, or record filed or kept or required to be filed or kept under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, knowing such statement or entry to be false or misleading in any material respect, or any person who willfully destroys (except after such time as may be prescribed under any rules or regulations under this title), mutilates, alters, or by any means or device falsifies any account, correspondence, memorandum, book, paper, or other record kept or required to be kept under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both, except that in the case of a violation of a provision of subsection (a) or (b) of section 4 by a holding company which is not an individual, the fine imposed upon such holding company shall be a fine not exceeding $200,000; but no person shall be convicted under this section for the violation of any rule, regulation, or order if he proves that he had no knowledge of such rule, regulation, or order.

EMPLOYEES OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 30. For the purposes of this title, the Commission may select, employ, and fix the compensation of such attorneys, examiners, and other experts as shall be necessary for the transaction of the business of the Commission in respect of this title without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers or employees of the United States; and the Commission may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary in the execution of the functions of the Commission and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 31. If any provision of this title or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the title and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 32. This title may be cited as the "Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935."

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL WATER POWER ACT

SECTION 201. Section 3 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The words defined in this section shall have the following meanings for purposes of this act, to wit:

"(1) 'public lands' means such lands and interest in lands owned by the United States as are subject to private appropriation and disposal under public land laws. It shall not include 'reservations', as hereinafter defined;

"(2) 'reservations' means national forests, tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, military reservations, and other lands and interests in lands owned by the United States, and withdrawn, reserved, or withheld from private appropriation and disposal under the public land laws; also lands and interests in lands acquired and held for any public purposes; but shall not include national monuments or national parks;

"(3) 'corporation' includes any corporation, joint-stock company, partnership, association, business trust, organized group of persons, whether incorporated or not, or a receiver or receivers, trustee or trustees of any of the foregoing. It shall not include 'municipalities' as hereinafter defined;

"(4) 'person' includes an individual or a corporation;

"(5) 'licensee' means any person licensed under the provisions of section 4 of this act, and any assignee or successor in interest of such person;

"(6) 'State' means a State admitted to the Union, the District of Columbia, and any organized Territory of the United States;

"(7) 'municipality' means a city, county, irrigation district, drainage district, or other political subdivision or agency of a State competent under the laws thereof to carry on the business of developing, transmitting, utilizing, or distributing power;

"(8) 'navigable waters' means those parts of streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and which either in their natural or improved condition notwithstanding interruptions between the navigable parts of such streams or waters by falls, shallows, or rapids compelling land carriage, are used or suitable for use for the transportation of persons or property in interstate or foreign commerce, including therein all such interrupting falls, shallows, or rapids, together with such other parts of streams as shall have been authorized by Congress for improvement by the United States or shall have been recommended to Congress for such improvement after investigation under its authority;

"(9) 'municipal purposes' means and includes all purposes within municipal powers as defined by the constitution or laws of the State or by the charter of the municipality;

"(10) 'Government dam' means a dam or other work constructed or owned by the United States for Government purposes with or without contribution from others;

"(11) 'project' means complete unit of improvement or development, consisting of a power house, all water conduits, all dams and appurtenant works and structures (including navigation structures) which are a part of said unit, and all storage, diverting, or forebay reservoirs directly connected therewith, the primary line or lines transmitting power therefrom to the point of junction with the distribution system or with the interconnected primary transmission system, all miscellaneous structures used and useful in connection with said unit or any part thereof, and all water rights, rights-of-way, ditches, dams, reservoirs, lands, or interest in lands the use and occupancy of which are necessary or appropriate in the maintenance and operation of such unit;

"(12) 'project works' means the physical structures of a project;

"(13) 'net investment' in a project means the actual legitimate reasonable original cost thereof as defined and interpreted in the 'classification of investment in road and equipment of steam roads, issue of 1914, Interstate Commerce Commission', plus similar costs of additions thereto and betterments thereof, minus the sum of the following items properly allocated thereto, if and to the extent that such items have been accumulated during the period of the license from earnings in excess of a fair return on such investment: (a) Unappropriated surplus, (b) aggregate credit balances of current depreciation accounts, and (c) aggregate appropriations of surplus or income held in amortization, sinking fund, or similar reserves, or expended for additions or betterments or used for the purposes for which such reserves were created. The term 'cost' shall include, insofar as applicable, the elements thereof prescribed in said classification, but shall not include expenditures from funds obtained through donations by States, municipalities, individuals, or others, and said classification of investment of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall insofar as applicable be published and promulgated as a part of the rules and regulations of the Commission.

"(14) 'Commission' and 'Commissioner' means the Federal Power Commission, and a member thereof, respectively;

"(15) 'State commission' means the regulatory body of the State or municipality having jurisdiction to regulate rates and charges for the sale of electric energy to consumers within the State or municipality;

"(16) 'security' means any note, stock, Treasury stock, bond, debenture, or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of a corporation subject to the provisions of this act."

SEC. 202. Section 4 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The Commission is hereby authorized and empowered—

"(a) To make investigations and to collect and record data concerning the utilization of the water resources of any region to be developed, the water-power industry and its relation to other industries and to interstate or foreign commerce, and concerning the location, capacity, development costs, and relation to markets of power sites, and whether the power from Government dams can be advantageously used by the United States for its public purposes, and what is a fair value of such power, to the extent the Commission may deem necessary or useful for the purposes of this act.

"(b) To determine the actual legitimate reasonable original cost of and the net investment in a licensed project, and to aid the Commission in such determinations, each licensee shall, upon oath, within a reasonable period of time to be fixed by the Commission, after the construction of the original project or any addition thereto or betterment thereof, file with the Commission in such detail as the Commission may require, a statement in duplicate showing the actual legitimate original cost of construction of such project, addition, or betterment, and of the price paid for water rights, rights-of-way, lands, or interest in lands. The licensee shall grant to the Commission or to its duly authorized agent or agents, at all reasonable times, free access to such project, addition, or betterment, and to all maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, accounts, books, records, and all other papers and documents relating thereto. The statement of actual legitimate reasonable original cost of said project, and revisions thereof as determined by the Commission, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(c) To cooperate with the executive departments and other agencies of State or National Governments in such investigations; and for such purpose the several departments and agencies of the National Government are authorized and directed upon the request of the Commission to furnish such records, papers, and information in their possession as may be requested by the Commission, and temporarily to detail to the Commission such officers or experts as may be necessary in such investigations.

"(d) To make public from time to time the information secured hereunder and to provide for the publication of its reports and investigations in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use. The Commission, on or before the 3d day of January of each year, shall submit to Congress for the fiscal year preceding a classified report showing the permits and licenses issued under this part, and in each case the parties thereto, the terms prescribed, and the moneys received, if any, or account thereof. Such report shall contain the names and show the compensation of the persons employed by the Commission.

"(e) To issue licenses to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or any State thereof, or to any State or municipality for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining dams, water conduits, reservoirs, power houses, transmission lines, or other project works necessary or convenient for the development and improvement of navigation and for the development, transmission, and utilization of power across, along, from, or in any of the streams or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, or upon any part of the public lands and reservations of the United States (including the Territories), or for the purpose of utilizing the surplus water or water power from any Government dam, except as herein provided: Provided, That licenses shall be issued within any reservation only after a finding by the Commission that the license will not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such reservation was created or acquired, and shall be subject to and contain such conditions as the Secretary of the department under whose supervision such reservation falls shall deem necessary for the adequate protection and utilization of such reservation: Provided further, That no license affecting the navigable capacity of any navigable waters of the United States shall be issued until the plans of the dam or other structures affecting navigation have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Whenever the contemplated improvement is, in the judgment of the Commission, desirable and justified in the public interest for the purpose of improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate of foreign commerce, a finding to that effect shall be made by the Commission and shall become a part of the records of the Commission: Provided further, That in case the Commission shall find that any Government dam may be advantageously used by the United States for public purposes in addition to navigation, no license therefor shall be issued until 2 years after it shall have reported to Congress the facts and conditions relating thereto, except that this provision shall not apply to any Government dam constructed prior to June 10, 1920: And provided further, That upon the filing of any application for a license which has not been preceded by a preliminary permit under subsection (f) of this section, notice shall be given and published as required by the proviso of said subsection.

"(f) To issue preliminary permits for the purpose of enabling applicants for a license hereunder to secure the data and to perform the acts required by section 9 hereof: Provided, however, That upon the filing of any application for a preliminary permit by any person, association, or corporation the Commission, before granting such application, shall at once give notice of such application in writing to any State or municipality likely to be interested in or affected by such application, and shall also publish notice of such application once each week for 4 weeks in a daily or weekly newspaper published in the county or counties in which the project or any part thereof or the lands affected thereby are situated.

"(g) Upon its own motion to order an investigation of any occupancy of or evidenced intention to occupy public lands, reservations, or streams, or other bodies of water over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, by any person, corporation, State, or municipality, and to issue such order as it may find appropriate, expedient, and in the public interest to conserve and utilize the water resources of the region."

SEC. 203. Section 5 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Each preliminary permit issued under this part shall be for the sole purpose of maintaining priority of application for a license under the terms of this act for such period or periods, not exceeding a total of 3 years, as in the discretion of the Commission may be necessary for making examinations and surveys, for preparing maps, plans, specifications, and estimates, and for making financial arrangements. Each such permit shall set forth the conditions under which priority shall be maintained. Such permits shall not be transferable, and may be canceled by order of the Commission upon failure of permittees to comply with the conditions thereof or for other good cause shown after notice and opportunity for hearing."

SEC. 204. Section 6 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Licenses under this part shall be issued for a period not exceeding 50 years. Each such license shall be conditioned upon acceptance by the licensee of all the terms and conditions of this act and such further conditions, if any, as the Commission shall prescribe in conformity with this act, which said terms and conditions and the acceptance thereof shall be expressed in said license. Licenses may be revoked only for the reasons and in the manner prescribed under the provisions of this act, and may be altered or surrendered only upon mutual agreement between the licensee and the Commission after 30 days' public notice. Copies of all licenses issued under the provisions of this part and calling for the payment of annual charges shall be deposited with the General Accounting Office, in compliance with section 3743, Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 20)."

SEC. 205. Section 7 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a) In issuing preliminary permits hereunder or licenses where no preliminary permit has been issued and in issuing licenses to new licensees under section 15 hereof the Commission shall give preference to applications therefor by States and municipalities, provided the plans for the same are deemed by the Commission equally well adapted, or shall within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Commission be made equally well adapted, to conserve and utilize in the public interest the water resources of the region; and as between other applicants, the Commission may give preference to the applicant the plans of which it finds and determines are best adapted to develop, conserve, and utilize in the public interest the water resources of the region, if it be satisfied as to the ability of the applicant to carry out such plans.

"(b) Whenever, in the judgment of the Commission, the development of any water resources for public purposes should be undertaken by the United States itself, the Commission shall not approve any application for any project affecting such development, but shall cause to be made such examinations, surveys, reports, plans, and estimates of the cost of the proposed development as it may find necessary, and shall submit its findings to Congress with such recommendations as it may find appropriate concerning such development."

SEC. 206. Section 10 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. All licenses issued under this part shall be on the following conditions:

"(a) That the project adopted, including the maps, plans, and specifications, shall be such as in the judgment of the Commission will be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for improving or developing a waterway or waterways for the use or benefit of interstate or foreign commerce, for the improvement and utilization of water-power development, and for other beneficial public uses, including recreational purposes; and if necessary in order to secure such plan, the Commission shall have authority to require the modification of any project and of the plans and specifications of the project works before approval.

"(b) That except when emergency shall require for the protection of navigation, life, health, or property, no substantial alteration or addition not in conformity with the approved plans shall be made to any dam or other project works constructed hereunder of an installed capacity in excess of 100 horsepower without the prior approval of the Commission; and any emergency alteration or addition so made shall thereafter be subject to such modification and change as the Commission may direct.

"(c) That the licensee shall maintain the project works in a condition of repair adequate for the purposes of navigation and for the efficient operation of said works in the development and transmission of power, shall make all necessary renewals and replacements, shall establish and maintain adequate depreciation reserves for such purposes, shall so maintain and operate said works as not to impair navigation, and shall conform to such rules and regulations as the Commission may from time to time prescribe for the protection of life, health, and property. Each licensee hereunder shall be liable for all damages occasioned to the property of others by the construction, maintenance, or operation of the project works or of the works appurtenant or accessory thereto, constructed under the license, and in no event shall the United States be liable therefor.

"(d) That after the first 20 years of operation, out of surplus earned thereafter, if any, accumulated in excess of a specified reasonable rate of return upon the net investment of a licensee in any project or projects under license, the licensee shall establish and maintain amortization reserves, which reserves shall, in the discretion of the Commission, be held until the termination of the license or be applied from time to time in reduction of the net investment. Such specified rate of return and the proportion of such surplus earnings to be paid into and held in such reserves shall be set forth in the license.

"(e) That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the Commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this part; for recompensing it for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of its lands or other property; and for the expropriation to the Government of excessive profits until the respective States shall make provision for preventing excessive profits or for the expropriation thereof to themselves, or until the period of amortization as herein provided is reached, and in fixing such charges the Commission shall seek to avoid increasing the price to the consumers of power by such charges, and any such charges may be adjusted from time to time by the Commission as conditions may require: Provided, That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the Commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted by the Commission at the end of 20 years after the project is available for service and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter upon notice and opportunity for hearing: Provided further, That licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge to the extent such power is sold to the public without profit or is used by such State or municipality for State or municipal purposes, except that as to projects constructed or to be constructed by States or municipalities primarily designed to provide or improve navigation, licenses therefor shall be issued without charge; and that licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power for domestic, mining, or other beneficial use in projects of not more than 100 horsepower installed capacity may be issued without charge, except on tribal lands within Indian reservations; but in no case shall a license be issued free of charge for the development and utilization of power created by any Government dam and that the amount charged therefor in any license shall be such as determined by the Commission. In the event an overpayment of any charge due under this section shall be made by a licensee, the Commission is authorized to allow a credit for such overpayment when charges are due for any subsequent period.

"(f) That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction work of another licensee, a permittee, or of the United States of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the Commission shall require as a condition of the license that the licensee so benefited shall reimburse the owner of such reservoir or other improvements for such part of the annual charges for interest, maintenance, and depreciation thereon as the Commission may deem equitable. The proportion of such charges to be paid by any licensee shall be determined by the Commission. The licensees or permittees affected shall pay to the United States the cost of making such determination as fixed by the Commission.

"Whenever such reservoir or other improvement is constructed by the United States the Commission shall assess similar charges against any licensee directly benefited thereby, and any amount so assessed shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to be reserved and appropriated as a part of the special fund for headwater improvements as provided in section 17 hereof.

"Whenever any power project not under license is benefited by the construction work of a licensee or permittee, the United States, or any agency thereof, the Commission, after notice to the owner or owners of such unlicensed project, shall determine and fix a reasonable and equitable annual charge to be paid to the licensee or permittee on account of such benefits, or to the United States if it be the owner of such headwater improvement.

"(g) Such other conditions not inconsistent with the provisions of this act as the Commission may require.

"(h) That combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service are hereby prohibited.

"(i) In issuing licenses for a minor part only of a complete project, or for a complete project of not more than 100 horsepower installed capacity, the Commission may in its discretion waive such conditions, provisions, and requirements of this part, except the license period of 50 years, as it may deem to be to the public interest to waive under the circumstances: Provided, That the provisions hereof shall not apply to annual charges for use of lands within Indian reservations."

SEC. 207. Section 14 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. Upon not less than 2 years' notice in writing from the Commission the United States shall have the right upon or after the expiration of any license to take over and thereafter to maintain and operate any project or projects as defined in section 3 hereof, and covered in whole or in part by the license, or the right to take over upon mutual agreement with the licensee all property owned and held by the licensee then valuable and serviceable in the development, transmission, or distribution of power and which is then dependent for its usefulness upon the continuance of the license, together with any lock or locks or other aids to navigation constructed at the expense of the licensee, upon the condition that before taking possession it shall pay the net investment of the licensee in the project or projects taken, not to exceed the fair value of the property taken, plus such reasonable damages, if any, to property of the licensee valuable, serviceable, and dependent as above set forth but not taken, as may be caused by the severance therefrom of property taken, and shall assume all contracts entered into by the licensee with the approval of the Commission. The net investment of the licensee in the project or projects so taken and the amount of such severance damages, if any, shall be determined by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing. Such net investment shall not include or be affected by the value of any lands, rights-of-way, or other property of the United States licensed by the Commission under this act, by the license or by goodwill, going value, or prospective revenues; nor shall the values allowed for water rights, rights-of-way, lands, or interest in lands be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the licensee: Provided, That the right of the United States or any State or municipality to take over, maintain, and operate any project licensed under this act at any time by condemnation proceedings upon payment of just compensation is hereby expressly reserved."

SEC. 208. Section 17 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. (a) All proceeds from any Indian reservation shall be placed to the credit of the Indians of such reservation. All other charges arising from licenses hereunder, except charges fixed by the Commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of administration of this part, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, subject to the following distribution: 12½ percent thereof is hereby appropriated to be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to 'Miscellaneous receipts'; 50 percent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of public lands and national forests shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress known as the 'Reclamation Act', approved June 17, 1902; and 37½ percent of the charges arising from licenses hereunder for the occupancy and use of national forests and public lands from development within the boundaries of any State shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to such State; and 50 percent of the charges arising from all other licenses hereunder is hereby reserved and appropriated as a special fund in the Treasury to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the maintenance and operation of dams and other navigation structures owned by the United States or in the construction, maintenance, or operation of headwater or other improvements of navigable waters of the United States. The proceeds of charges made by the Commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the costs of the administration of this part shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and credited to miscellaneous receipts.

"(b) In case of delinquency on the part of any licensee in the payment of annual charges for a period of 30 days a penalty of 5 percent of the total amount so delinquent may be added to the total charges which shall apply for the first month or part of month so delinquent with an additional penalty of 3 percent for each subsequent month until the total of the charges and penalties are paid or until the license is canceled and the charges and penalties satisfied in accordance with law."

SEC. 209. Section 18 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. The Commission shall require the construction, maintenance, and operation by a licensee at its own expense of such lights and signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War, and such fishways as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce. The operation of any navigation facilities which may be constructed as a part of or in connection with any dam or diversion structure built under the provisions of this act, whether at the expense of a licensee hereunder or of the United States, shall at all times be controlled by such reasonable rules and regulations in the interest of navigation, including the control of the level of the pool caused by such dam or diversion structure as may be made from time to time by the Secretary of War; and for willful failure to comply with any such rule or regulation such licensee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished as provided in section 316 hereof."

SEC. 210. Section 23 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. (a) The provisions of this part shall not be construed as affecting any permit or valid existing right-of-way heretofore granted or as confirming or otherwise affecting any claim, or as affecting any authority heretofore given pursuant to law, but any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality holding or possessing such permit, right-of-way, or authority may apply for a license hereunder, and upon such application the Commission may issue to any such applicant a license in accordance with provisions of this part and in such case the provisions of this act shall apply to such applicant as a licensee hereunder: Provided, That when application is made for a license under this section for a project or projects already constructed the fair value of said project or projects determined as provided in this section shall for the purposes of this part and of said license be deemed to be the amount to be allowed as the net investment of the applicant in such project or projects as of the date of such license, or as of the date of such determination, if license has not been issued. Such fair value shall be determined by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person, State, or municipality to construct, operate, or maintain any dam, water conduit, reservoir, power house, or other works incidental thereto across, along, or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, or upon any part of the public lands or reservations of the United States (including the Territories), or for the purpose of utilizing the surplus water or water power from any Government dam, except under and in accordance with the terms of a permit or valid existing right-of-way granted prior to June 10, 1920, or a license granted pursuant to this act. Any person, association, corporation, State, or municipality intending to construct a dam or other project works across, along, over, or in any stream or part thereof, other than those defined herein as navigable waters, and over which Congress has jurisdiction under its authority to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States shall before such construction file declaration of such intention with the Commission, whereupon the Commission shall cause immediate investigation of such proposed construction to be made, and if upon investigation it shall find that the interests of interstate or foreign commerce would be affected by such proposed construction, such person, association, corporation, State, or municipality shall not construct, maintain, or operate such dam or other project works until it shall have applied for and shall have received a license under the provisions of this act. If the Commission shall not so find, and if no public lands or reservations are affected, permission is hereby granted to construct such dam or other project works in such stream upon compliance with State laws."

SEC. 211. Section 24 of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 24. Any lands of the United States included in any proposed project under the provisions of this part shall from the date of filing of application therefor be reserved from entry, location, or other disposal under the laws of the United States until otherwise directed by the Commission or by Congress. Notice that such application has been made, together with the date of filing thereof and a description of the lands of the United States affected thereby, shall be filed in the local land office for the district in which such lands are located. Whenever the Commission shall determine that the value of any lands of the United States so applied for, or heretofore or hereafter reserved or classified as power sites, will not be injured or destroyed for the purposes of power development by location, entry, or selection under the public land laws, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice of such determination, shall declare such lands open to location, entry, or selection, for such purpose or purposes and under such restrictions as the Commission may determine, subject to and with a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees or licensees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of said lands necessary, in the judgment of the Commission, for the purposes of this part, which right shall be expressly reserved in every patent issued for such lands; and no claim or right to compensation shall accrue from the occupation or use of any of said lands for said purposes. The United States or any licensee for any such lands hereunder may enter thereupon for the purposes of this part, upon payment of any damages to crops, buildings, or other improvements caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond to the United States for the use and benefit of the owner to secure the payment of such damages as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond in a court of competent jurisdiction, said bond to be in the form prescribed by the Commission: Provided, That locations, entries, selections, or filings heretofore made for lands reserved as water-power sites, or in connection with water-power development, or electrical transmission may proceed to approval or patent under and subject to the limitations and conditions in this section contained.

SEC. 212. Sections 1 to 29, inclusive, of the Federal Water Power Act, as amended, shall constitute part I of that act, and sections 25 and 30 of such act, as amended, are repealed: Provided, That nothing in that act, as amended, shall be construed to repeal or amend the provisions of the amendment to the Federal Water Power Act approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1353), or the provisions of any other act relating to national parks and national monuments.

SEC. 213. The Federal Water Power Act, as amended, is further amended by adding thereto the following parts:

"PART II—REGULATION OF ELECTRIC UTILITY COMPANIES ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

"DECLARATION OF POLICY; APPLICATION OF PART; DEFINITIONS

"SECTION 201. (a) It is hereby declared that the business of transmitting and selling electric energy for ultimate distribution to the public is affected with a public interest, and that Federal regulation of that part of such business which consists of the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and the sale of such energy at wholesale in interstate commerce is necessary in the public interest, such Federal regulation, however, to extend only to those matters which are not subject to regulation by the States.

"(b) The provisions of this part shall apply to the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and to the sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce, but shall not apply to any other sale of electric energy or deprive a State or State commission of its lawful authority now exercised over the exportation of hydroelectric energy which is transmitted across a State line. The Commission shall have jurisdiction over all facilities for such transmission or sale of electric energy, but shall not have jurisdiction over facilities used for the generation of electric energy or over facilities used in local distribution or only for the transmission of electric energy in intrastate commerce, or over facilities for the transmission of electric energy consumed wholly by the transmitter.

"(c) For the purpose of this part, electric energy shall be held to be transmitted in interstate commerce if transmitted from a State and consumed at any point outside thereof; but only insofar as such transmission takes place within the United States.

"(d) The term 'sale of electric energy at wholesale' when used in this part means a sale of electric energy to any person for resale.

"(e) The term 'public utility' when used in this part or in the part next following means any person who owns or operates facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under this part.

"(f) No provision in this part shall apply to, or be deemed to include, the United States, a State or any political subdivision of a State, or any agency, authority, or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing, or any corporation which is wholly owned, directly or indirectly, by any one or more of the foregoing, or any officer, agent, or employee of any of the foregoing acting as such in the course of his official duty, unless such provision makes specific reference thereto.

"INTERCONNECTION AND COORDINATION OF FACILITIES; EMERGENCIES; TRANSMISSION TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

"SEC. 202. (a) For the purpose of assuring an abundant supply of electric energy throughout the United States with the greatest possible economy and with regard to the proper utilization and conservation of natural resources, the Commission is empowered and directed to divide the country into regional districts for the interconnection and coordination of facilities for the generation, transmission, and sale of electric energy, and it may at any time thereafter, upon its own motion or upon application, make such modifications thereof as in its judgment will promote the public interest. Each such district shall embrace an area which, in the judgment of the Commission, can economically be served by such interconnected and coordinated electric facilities. It shall be the duty of the Commission to promote and encourage such interconnection and coordination within each such district and between such districts by voluntary action of the private and public owners and operators of such electric facilities. Such interconnection and coordination shall be imposed only by voluntary action on the part of such public utilities. Before establishing any such district and fixing or modifying the boundaries thereof the Commission shall give notice to the State commission of each State situated wholly or in part within such district, and shall afford each such State commission reasonable opportunity to present its views and recommendations, and shall receive and consider such views and recommendations.

"(b) Whenever the Commission, upon application of any State commission or of any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy, and after notice to each State commission and public utility affected and after opportunity for hearing, finds such action necessary or appropriate in the public interest it may by order direct a public utility (if the Commission finds that no undue burden will be placed upon such public utility thereby) to establish physical connection of its transmission facilities with one or more other persons engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy, to sell energy to or exchange energy with such persons: Provided, That the Commission shall have no authority to compel the enlargement of generating facilities for such purposes, nor to compel such public utility to sell or exchange energy when to do so would impair its ability to render adequate service to its customers. The Commission may prescribe the terms and conditions of the arrangement to be made between the persons affected by any such order, including the apportionment of cost between them and the compensation or reimbursement reasonably due to any of them.

"(c) During the continuance of any emergency requiring immediate action, any person engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy and not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission may make such temporary connections with any public utility subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission or may construct such temporary facilities for the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce as may be necessary or appropriate to meet such emergency, and shall not become subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission by reason of such temporary connection or temporary construction: Provided, That such temporary connection shall be discontinued or such temporary construction removed or otherwise disposed of upon the termination of such emergency: Provided further, That upon approval of the Commission permanent connections for emergency use only may be made hereunder.

"(d) After 6 months from the date on which this part takes effect, no person shall transmit any electric energy from the United States to a foreign country without first having secured an order of the Commission authorizing it to do so. The Commission shall issue such order upon application unless, after opportunity for hearing, it finds that the proposed transmission would impair the sufficiency of electric supply within the United States or would impede or tend to impede the coordination in the public interest of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission. The Commission may by its order grant such application in whole or in part, with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may find necessary or appropriate, and may from time to time, after opportunity for hearing and for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may find necessary or appropriate.

"DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY; CONSOLIDATIONS; PURCHASE OF SECURITIES

"SEC. 203. (a) No public utility shall sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the whole of its facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or any part thereof of a value in excess of $100,000, or by any means whatsoever, directly or indirectly, merge or consolidate such facilities or any part thereof with those of any other person, or purchase, acquire, or take any security of any other public utility without first having secured an order of the Commission authorizing it to do so. Upon application for such approval the Commission shall fix a time and place for a public hearing upon the application and shall thereupon give reasonable notice in writing to the Governor and State commission of each of the States in which the physical property affected, or any part thereof, is situated, and to such other persons as it may deem advisable. After such public hearing, if the Commission finds that the proposed disposition, consolidation, acquisition, or control will be consistent with the public interest, it shall certify to that effect; and thereupon any act or acts of Congress making the proposed transaction unlawful shall not apply.

"(b) The Commission may grant any application for an order under this section in whole or in part and upon such terms and conditions as it finds necessary or appropriate to secure the maintenance of adequate service and the coordination in the public interest of facilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission.

"ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES; ASSUMPTION OF LIABILITIES

"SEC. 204. (a) No public utility shall issue any security, or assume any obligation or liability as guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise in respect of any security of another person, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the public utility, the Commission by order authorizes such issue or assumption of liability. The Commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue or assumption (a) is for some lawful object, within the corporate purposes of the applicant and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the applicant of service as a public utility and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary or appropriate for such purposes. The provisions of this section shall be effective 6 months after this part takes effect.

"(b) The Commission, after opportunity for hearing, may grant any application under this section in whole or in part, and with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as it may find necessary or appropriate, and may from time to time, after opportunity for hearing and for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may find necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any previous order as to the particular purposes, uses, and extent to which, or the conditions under which, any security so theretofore authorized or the proceeds thereof may be applied, subject always to the requirements of subsection (a) of this section.

"(c) No public utility shall, without the consent of the Commission, apply any security or any proceeds thereof to any purpose not specified in the Commission's order, or supplemental order, or to any purpose in excess of the amount allowed for such purpose in such order, or otherwise in contravention of such order.

"(d) The Commission shall not authorize the capitalization of the right to be a corporation or of any franchise, permit, or contract for consolidation, merger, or lease in excess of the amount (exclusive of any tax or annual charge) actually paid as the consideration for such right, franchise, permit, or contract.

"(e) Subsection (a) shall not apply to the issue or renewal of, or assumption of liability on, a note or draft maturing not more than 1 year after the date of such issue, renewal, or assumption of liability, and aggregating (together with all other then outstanding notes and drafts of a maturity of 1 year or less on which such public utility is primarily or secondarily liable) not more than 5 percent of the par value of the other securities of the public utility then outstanding. In the case of securities having no par value, the par value for the purpose of this subsection shall be the fair market value as of the date of issue. Within 10 days after any such issue, renewal, or assumption of liability, the public utility shall file with the Commission a certificate of notification, in such form as may be prescribed by the Commission, setting forth such matters as the Commission shall by regulation require.

"(f) The provisions of this section shall not extend to a public utility organized and operating in a State under the laws of which its security issues are regulated by a State commission.

"(g) Nothing in this section shall be construed to imply any guarantee or obligation on the part of the United States in respect of any securities to which the provisions of this section relate.

"(h) The provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, shall not apply to any security issue which is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under this section; and any public utility whose security issues are approved by the Commission under this section may file with the Securities and Exchange Commission duplicate copies of reports filed with the Federal Power Commission in lieu of reports, information, and documents required under sections 12 and 13 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934.

"RATES AND CHARGES; SCHEDULES; SUSPENSION OF NEW RATES

"SEC. 205. (a) All rates and charges made, demanded, or received by any public utility for or in connection with the transmission or sale of electric energy subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and all rules and regulations affecting or pertaining to such rates or charges shall be just and reasonable, and any such rate or charge that is not just and reasonable is hereby declared to be unlawful.

"(b) No public utility shall, with respect to any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, (1) make or grant any undue preference or advantage to any person or subject any person to any undue prejudice or disadvantage, or (2) maintain any unreasonable difference in rates, charges, service, facilities, or in any other respect, either as between localities or as between classes of service.

"(c) Under such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, every public utility shall file with the Commission, within such time and in such form as the Commission may designate, and shall keep open in convenient form and place for public inspection, schedules showing all rates and charges for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and the classifications, practices, and regulations affecting such rates and charges, together with all contracts which in any manner affect or relate to such rates, charges, classifications, and services.

"(d) Unless the Commission otherwise orders, no change shall be made by any public utility in any such rate, charge, classification, or service, or in any rule, regulation, or contract relating thereto, except after 30 days' notice to the Commission and to the public. Such notice shall be given by filing with the Commission and keeping open for public inspection new schedules stating plainly the change or changes to be made in the schedule or schedules then in force and the time when the change or changes will go into effect. The Commission, for good cause shown, may allow changes to take effect without requiring the 30 days' notice herein provided for by an order specifying the changes so to be made and the time when they shall take effect and the manner in which they shall be filed and published.

"(e) Whenever any such new schedule is filed the Commission shall have authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, and, if it so orders, without answer or formal pleading by the public utility, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate, charge, classification, or service; and, pending such hearing and the decision thereon, the Commission, upon filing with such schedules and delivering to the public utility affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, charge, classification, or service, but not for a longer period than 5 months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearings, either completed before or after the rate, charge, classification, or service goes into effect, the Commission may make such orders with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made at the expiration of such 5 months, the proposed change of rate, charge, classification, or service shall go into effect at the end of such period, but in case of a proposed increased rate or charge, the Commission may by order require the interested public utility or public utilities to keep accurate account in detail of all amounts received by reason of such increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf such amounts are paid, and upon completion of the hearing and decision may by further order require such public utility or public utilities to refund, with interest, to the persons in whose behalf such amounts were paid, such portion of such increased rates or charges as by its decision shall be found not justified. At any hearing involving a rate or charge sought to be increased, the burden of proof to show that the increased rate or charge is just and reasonable shall be upon the public utility, and the Commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.

"FIXING RATES AND CHARGES; DETERMINATION OF COST OF PRODUCTION OR TRANSMISSION

"SEC. 206. (a) Whenever the Commission, after a hearing had upon its own motion or upon complaint, shall find that any rate, charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by any public utility for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or that any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory, or preferential, the Commission shall determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice, or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and shall fix the same by order.

"(b) The Commission upon its own motion, or upon the request of any State commission whenever it can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, may investigate and determine the cost of the production or transmission of electric energy by means of facilities under the jurisdiction of the Commission in cases where the Commission has no authority to establish a rate governing the sale of such energy.

"FURNISHING OF ADEQUATE SERVICE

"SEC. 207. Whenever the Commission, upon complaint of a State commission, after notice to each State commission and public utility affected and after opportunity for hearing, shall find that any interstate service of any public utility is inadequate or insufficient, the Commission shall determine the proper, adequate, or sufficient service to be furnished, and shall fix the same by its order, rule, or regulation: Provided, That the Commission shall have no authority to compel the enlargement of generating facilities for such purposes, nor to compel the public utility to sell or exchange energy when to do so would impair its ability to render adequate service to its customers.

"ASCERTAINMENT OF COST OF PROPERTY

"SEC. 208. (a) The Commission may investigate and ascertain the actual legitimate cost of the property of every public utility, the depreciation therein, and, when found necessary for rate-making purposes, other facts which bear on the determination of such cost or depreciation, and the fair value of such property.

"(b) Every public utility upon request shall file with the Commission an inventory of all or any part of its property and a statement of the original cost thereof, and shall keep the Commission informed regarding the cost of all additions, betterments, extensions, and new construction.

"USE OF JOINT BOARDS; COOPERATION WITH STATE COMMISSIONS

"SEC. 209. (a) The Commission may refer any matter arising in the administration of this part to a board to be composed of a member or members, as determined by the Commission, from the State or each of the States affected or to be affected by such matter. Any such board shall be vested with the same power and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as in the case of a member of the Commission when designated by the Commission to hold any hearings. The action of such board shall have such force and effect and its proceedings shall be conducted in such manner as the Commission shall by regulations prescribe. The board shall be appointed by the Commission from persons nominated by the State commission of each State affected, or by the Governor of such State if there is no State commission. Each State affected shall be entitled to the same number of representatives on the board unless the nominating power of such State waives such right. The Commission shall have discretion to reject the nominee from any State, but shall thereupon invite a new nomination from that State. The members of a board shall receive such allowances for expenses as the Commission shall provide. The Commission may, when in its discretion sufficient reason exists therefor, revoke any reference to such a board.

"(b) The Commission may confer with any State commission regarding the relationship between rate structures, costs, accounts, charges, practices, classifications, and regulations of public utilities subject to the jurisdiction of such State commission and of the Commission; and the Commission is authorized, under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe, to hold joint hearings with any State commission in connection with any matter with respect to which the Commission is authorized to act. The Commission is authorized in the administration of this act to avail itself of such cooperation, services, records, and facilities as may be afforded by any State commission.

"(c) The Commission shall make available to the several State commissions such information and reports as may be of assistance in State regulation of public utilities. Whenever the Commission can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, it may upon request from a State make available to such State as witnesses any of its trained rate, valuation, or other experts, subject to reimbursement to the Commission by such State of the compensation and traveling expenses of such witnesses. All sums collected hereunder shall be credited to the appropriation from which the amounts were expended in carrying out the provisions of this subsection.

"PART III—LICENSEES AND PUBLIC UTILITIES; PROCEDURAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

"ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND MEMORANDA

"SECTION 301 (a) Every licensee and public utility shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, records of cost-accounting procedures, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate for purposes of the administration of this act, including accounts, records, and memoranda of the generation, transmission, distribution, delivery, or sale of electric energy, the furnishing of services or facilities in connection therewith, and receipts and expenditures with respect to any of the foregoing: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall relieve any public utility from keeping any accounts, memoranda, or records which such public utility may be required to keep by or under authority of the laws of any State. The Commission may prescribe a system of accounts to be kept by licensees and public utilities and may classify such licensees and public utilities and prescribe a system of accounts for each class. The Commission, after notice and opportunity for hearing, may determine by order the accounts in which particular outlays and receipts shall be entered, charged, or credited. The burden of proof to justify every accounting entry questioned by the Commission shall be on the person making, authorizing, or requiring such entry, and the Commission may suspend a charge or credit pending submission of satisfactory proof in support thereof.

"(b) The Commission shall at all times have access to and the right to inspect and examine all accounts, records, and memoranda of licensees and public utilities, and it shall be the duty of such licensees and public utilities to furnish to the Commission, within such reasonable time as the Commission may order, any information with respect thereto which the Commission may by order require, including copies of maps, contracts, reports of engineers, and other data, records, and papers, and to grant to all agents of the Commission free access to its property and its accounts, records, and memoranda when requested so to do. No member, officer, or employee of the Commission shall divulge any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of examination of books or other accounts, as hereinbefore provided, except insofar as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court.

"(c) The books, accounts, memoranda, and records of any person who controls, directly or indirectly, a licensee or public utility subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, and of any other company controlled by such person, insofar as they relate to transactions with or the business of such licensee or public utility, shall be subject to examination on the order of the Commission.

"RATES OF DEPRECIATION

"SEC. 302. (a) The Commission may, after hearing, require licensees and public utilities to carry a proper and adequate depreciation account in accordance with such rules, regulations, and forms of account as the Commission may prescribe. The Commission may, from time to time, ascertain and determine, and by order fix, the proper and adequate rates of depreciation of the several classes of property of each licensee and public utility. Each licensee and public utility shall conform its depreciation accounts to the rates so ascertained, determined, and fixed. The licensees and public utilities subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission shall not charge to operating expenses any depreciation charges on classes of property other than those prescribed by the Commission, or charge with respect to any class of property a percentage of depreciation other than that prescribed therefor by the Commission. No such licensee or public utility shall in any case include in any form under its operating or other expenses any depreciation or other charge or expenditure included elsewhere as a depreciation charge or otherwise under its operating or other expenses. Nothing in this section shall limit the power of a State commission to determine in the exercise of its jurisdiction, with respect to any public utility, the percentage rate of depreciation to be allowed, as to any class of property of such public utility, or the composite depreciation rate, for the purpose of determining rates or charges.

"(b) The Commission, before prescribing any rules or requirements as to accounts, records, or memoranda, or as to depreciation rates, shall notify each State commission having jurisdiction with respect to any public utility involved, and shall give reasonable opportunity to each such commission to present its views, and shall receive and consider such views and recommendations.

"REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO AGENCIES OF THE UNITED STATES

"SEC. 303. All agencies of the United States engaged in the generation and sale of electric energy for ultimate distribution to the public shall be subject, as to all facilities used for such generation and sale, and as to the electric energy sold by such agency, to the provisions of sections 301 and 302 hereof, so far as may be practicable, and shall comply with the provisions of such sections and with the rules and regulations of the Commission thereunder to the same extent as may be required in the case of a public utility.

"PERIODIC AND SPECIAL REPORTS

"SEC. 304. (a) Every licensee and every public utility shall file with the Commission such annual and other periodic or special reports as the Commission may by rules and regulations or order prescribe as necessary or appropriate to assist the Commission in the proper administration of this act. The Commission may prescribe the manner and form in which such reports shall be made, and require from such persons specific answers to all questions upon which the Commission may need information. The Commission may require that such reports shall include, among other things, full information as to assets and liabilities, capitalization, net investment, and reduction thereof, gross receipts, interest due and paid, depreciation, and other reserves, cost of project and other facilities, cost of maintenance and operation of the project and other facilities, cost of renewals and replacement of the project works and other facilities, depreciation, generation, transmission, distribution, delivery, use, and sale of electric energy. The Commission may require any such person to make adequate provision for currently determining such costs and other facts. Such reports shall be made under oath unless the Commission otherwise specifies.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any person willfully to hinder, delay, or obstruct the making, filing, or keeping of any information, document, report, memorandum, record, or account required to be made, filed, or kept under this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"OFFICIALS DEALING IN SECURITIES; INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES

"SEC. 305. (a) It shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any public utility to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in respect of the negotiation, hypothecation, or sale by such public utility of any security issued or to be issued by such public utility, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the making or paying of any dividends of such public utility from any funds properly included in capital account.

"(b) After 6 months from the date on which this part takes effect, it shall be unlawful for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one public utility or to hold the position of officer or director of a public utility and the position of officer or director of any bank, trust company, banking association, or firm that is authorized by law to underwrite or participate in the marketing of securities of a public utility, or officer or director of any company supplying electrical equipment to such public utility, unless the holding of such positions shall have been authorized by order of the Commission, upon due showing in form and manner prescribed by the Commission, that neither public nor private interests will be adversely affected thereby. The Commission shall not grant any such authorization in respect of such positions held on the date on which this part takes effect, unless application for such authorization is filed with the Commission within 60 days after that date.

"COMPLAINTS

"SEC. 306. Any person, State, municipality, or State commission complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any licensee or public utility in contravention of the provisions of this act may apply to the Commission by petition which shall briefly state the facts, whereupon a statement of the complaint thus made shall be forwarded by the Commission to such licensee or public utility, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time to be specified by the Commission. If such licensee or public utility shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating such complaint, it shall be the duty of the Commission to investigate the matters complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall find proper.

"INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMISSION; ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES; DEPOSITIONS

"SEC. 307. (a) The Commission may investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may find necessary or proper in order to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, or to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this act or in prescribing rules or regulations thereunder, or in obtaining information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this act relates. The Commission may permit any person to file with it a statement in writing under oath or otherwise, as it shall determine, as to any or all facts and circumstances concerning a matter which may be the subject of investigation. The Commission, in its discretion, may publish or make available to State commissions information concerning any such subject.

"(b) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding under this act, any member of the Commission or any officer designated by it is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission finds relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. Witnesses summoned by the Commission to appear before it shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(c) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, and other records. Such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found or may be doing business. Any person who willfully shall fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records, if in his or its power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both.

"(d) The testimony of any witness may be taken, at the instance of a party, in any proceeding or investigation pending before the Commisison, by deposition, at any time after the proceeding is at issue. The Commission may also order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before it, at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person authorized to administer oaths not being of counsel or attorney to either of the parties, nor interested in the proceeding or investigation. Reasonable notice must first be given in writing by the party or his attorney proposing to take such deposition to the opposite party or his attorney of record, as either may be nearest, which notice shall state the name of the witness and the time and place of the taking of his deposition. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the Commisison, as hereinbefore provided. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing, be subscribed by the deponent.

"(e) If a witness whose testimony may be desired to be taken by deposition be in a foreign country, the deposition may be taken before an officer or person designated by the Commission, or agreed upon by the parties by stipulation in writing to be filed with the Commission. All depositions must be promptly filed with the Commission.

"(f) Witnesses whose depositions are taken as authorized in this act, and the person or officer taking the same, shall be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

"(g) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience to the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"HEARINGS; RULES OF PROCEDURE

"SEC. 308. (a) Hearings under this act may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof or any representative of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept. In any proceeding before it, the Commission, in accordance with such rules and regulations as it may prescribe, may admit as a party any interested State, State commission, municipality, or any representative of interested consumers or security holders, or any competitor of a party to such proceeding, or any other person whose participation in the proceeding may be in the public interest.

"(b) All hearings, investigations, and proceedings under this act shall be governed by rules of practice and procedure to be adopted by the Commission, and in the conduct thereof the technical rules of evidence need not be applied. No informality in any hearing, investigation, or proceeding or in the manner of taking testimony shall invalidate any order, decision, rule, or regulation issued under the authority of this act.

"ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS OF COMMISSION; RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

"SEC. 309. The Commission shall have power to perform any and all acts, and to prescribe, issue, make, amend, and rescind such orders, rules, and regulations as it may find necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Among other things, such rules and regulations may define accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this act; and may prescribe the form or forms of all statements, declarations, applications, and reports to be filed with the Commission, the information which they shall contain, and the time within which they shall be filed. Unless a different date is specified therein, rules and regulations of the Commission shall be effective 30 days after publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. Orders of the Commission shall be effective on the date and in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe. For the purposes of its rules and regulations, the Commission may classify persons and matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons or matters. All rules and regulations of the Commission shall be filed with its secretary and shall be kept open in convenient form for public inspection and examination during reasonable business hours.

"APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 310. The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States; and the Commission may, subject to civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as are necessary for carrying out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

"INVESTIGATIONS RELATING TO ELECTRIC ENERGY

"SEC. 311. In order to secure information necessary or appropriate as a basis for recommending legislation, the Commission is authorized and directed to conduct investigations regarding the generation, transmission, distribution, and sale of electric energy, however produced, throughout the United States and its possessions, whether or not otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, including the generation, transmission, distribution, and sale of electric energy by any agency, authority, or instrumentality of the United States, or of any State or municipality or other political subdivision of a State. It shall, so far as practicable, secure and keep current information regarding the ownership, operation, management, and control of all facilities for such generation, transmission, distribution, and sale; the capacity and output thereof and the relationship between the two; the cost of generation, transmission, distribution, and sale; the capacity and contracts in respect of the sale of electric energy and its service to residential, rural, commercial, and industrial consumers and other purchasers by private and public agencies; and the relation of any or all such facts to the development of navigation, industry, commerce, and the national defense. The Commission shall report annually to Congress the results of investigations made under authority of this section.

"PUBLICATION AND SALE OF REPORTS

"SEC. 312. The Commission may provide for the publication of its reports and decisions in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and is authorized to sell at reasonable prices copies of all maps, atlases, and reports as it may from time to time publish. Such reasonable prices may include the cost of compilation, composition, and reproduction. The Commission is also authorized to make such charges as it deems reasonable for special statistical services and other special or periodic services. The amounts collected under this section shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. All printing for the Federal Power Commission making use of engraving, lithography, and photolithography, together with the plates for the same, shall be contracted for and performed under the direction of the Commission, under such limitations and conditions as the Joint Committee on Printing may from time to time prescribe, and all other printing for the Commission shall be done by the Public Printer under such limitations and conditions as the Joint Committee on Printing may from time to time prescribe. The entire work may be done at, or ordered through, the Government Printing Office whenever, in the judgment of the Joint Committee on Printing, the same would be to the interest of the Government: Provided, That when the exigencies of the public service so require, the Joint Committee on Printing may authorize the Commission to make immediate contracts for engraving, lithographing, and photolithographing, without advertisement for proposals: Provided further, That nothing contained in this or any other act shall prevent the Federal Power Commission from placing orders with other departments or establishments for engraving, lithographing, and photolithographing, in accordance with the provisions of sections 601 and 602 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 417), providing for interdepartmental work.

"REHEARINGS; COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

"SEC. 313. (a) Any person, State, municipality, or State commission aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding under this act to which such person, State, municipality, or State commission is a party may apply for a rehearing within 30 days after the issuance of such order. The application for rehearing shall set forth specifically the ground or grounds upon which such application is based. Upon such application the Commission shall have power to grant or deny rehearing or to abrogate or modify its order without further hearing. Unless the Commission acts upon the application for rehearing within 30 days after it is filed, such application may be deemed to have been denied. No proceeding to review any order of the Commission shall be brought by any person unless such person shall have made application to the Commission for a rehearing thereon.

"(b) Any party to a proceeding under this act aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in such proceeding may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for any circuit wherein the licensee or public utility to which the order relates is located or has its principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the order of the Commission upon the application for rehearing, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon any member of the Commission and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file with the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission in the application for rehearing unless there is reasonable ground for failure so to do. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If any party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file with the court such modified or new findings which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"(c) The filing of an application for rehearing under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the Commission, operate as a stay of the Commission's order. The commencement of proceedings under subsection (b) of this section shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

"ENFORCEMENT OF ACT, REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

"SEC. 314. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper District Court of the United States to enjoin such acts or practices and to enforce compliance with this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or decree or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who, in his discretion, may institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this act.

"(b) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this act or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission thereunder.

"(c) The Commission may employ such attorneys as it finds necessary for proper legal aid and service of the Commission or its members in the conduct of their work, or for proper representation of the public interests in investigations made by it or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the Commission's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the Commission in any case in court; and the expenses of such employment shall be paid out of the appropriation for the Commission.

"GENERAL FORFEITURE PROVISION

"SEC. 315. (a) Any licensee or public utility which willfully fails, within the time prescribed by the Commission, to comply with any order of the Commission, to file any report required under this act or any rule or regulation of the Commission thereunder, to submit any information or document required by the Commission in the course of an investigation conducted under this act, or to appear by an officer or agent at any hearing or investigation in response to a subpena issued under this act, shall forfeit to the United States an amount not exceeding $1,000 to be fixed by the Commission after notice and opportunity for hearing. The imposition or payment of any such forfeiture shall not bar or affect any penalty prescribed in this act but such forfeiture shall be in addition to any such penalty.

"(b) The forfeitures provided for in this act shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States, brought in the district where the person is an inhabitant or has his principal place of business, or if a licensee or public utility, in any district in which such licensee or public utility transacts business. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures under this act. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid from the appropriations for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

"GENERAL PENALTIES; VENUE

"SEC. 316. (a) Any person who willfully and knowingly does or causes or suffers to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who willfully and knowingly omits or fails to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or willfully and knowingly causes or suffers such omission or failure, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

"(b) Any person who willfully and knowingly violates any rule, regulation, restriction, condition, or order made or imposed by the Commission under authority of this act, or any rule or regulation imposed by the Secretary of War under authority of part I of this act shall, in addition to any other penalties provided by law, be punished upon conviction thereof by a fine of not exceeding $500 for each and every day during which such offense occurs.

"JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES; ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITIES AND DUTIES

"SEC. 317. The district courts of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction of violations of this act or the rules, regulations, and orders thereunder, and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder. Any criminal proceeding shall be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is an inhabitant, and process in such cases may be served wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed against the Commission in any judicial proceedings by or against the Commission under this act.

"CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION

"SEC. 318. (a) If, with respect to the issue, sale, or guaranty of a security, or assumption of obligation or liability in respect of a security, the method of keeping accounts, the filing of reports, or the acquisition or disposition of any security, capital assets, or facilities any person is subject both to a requirement of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 or of a rule, regulation, or order thereunder and to a requirement of this act or of a rule, regulation, or order thereunder, the requirement of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 shall apply to such person, and such person shall not be subject to the requirement of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, with respect to the same subject matter, unless the Securities and Exchange Commission has exempted such person from such requirement of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, in which case the requirements of this act shall apply to such person.

"(b) If, with respect to the issue, sale, or guaranty of a security, the method of keeping accounts, the filing of reports or the valuation, acquisition, or disposition of any security, capital assets, or facilities, or any other requirement of this part or the next preceding part, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, any person is subject to the law of any State or regulation by a State commission, such person shall not be subject to the requirements of this part or the next preceding part, or of any rule, regulation, or order thereunder with respect to the same subject matter.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 319. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 320. This act may be cited as the 'Federal Power Act.'"

And to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for regulation in the public interest of public-utility holding companies, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, addressing myself to the pending motion to concur in the House amendments to Senate bill 2796, commonly known as "the utilities regulation bill", I am speaking solely for myself; I am presenting my own views. I am not assuming to speak for any of my colleagues in the Senate.

In the beginning, I desire to say that I yield to no one in my loyalty to the administration in charge of the Government and my loyalty to the President of the United States in carrying out the pledges contained in the Democratic platform adopted at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago in 1932. I yield to no one in the loyalty of my support in carrying out those emergency measures which have been necessary in order to meet the exigent conditions which have existed since the administration took charge of the affairs of government.

I am not one of those who have stayed with the President during the sunny hours and on popular measures and deserted him when unpopular economies were to be effected. I believe that my record in his support has been a record as loyal as that of any Member of the Senate, and I here and now reaffirm that loyalty.

We are living in a constitutional Republic, a Republic whose Constitution provides the form of government for these United States. In that Constitution is provided a Government of three departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. The Congress being the legislative department, composed of the representatives elected by the people, is charged with the responsibility of legislating; the executive is charged with the administration and enforcement of those laws which are passed by the Congress, and it is charged with seeing that the will and direction of the Congress are carried into effect. The judicial department of the Government, under our Constitution, is charged with the duty of seeing that the Congress passes no unreasonable laws, no discriminatory laws, and passes only such laws as it has authority to pass under the Constitution of the United States.

This has been the people's Government since the beginning of the Republic; it is the people's Government now; and it is my opinion that it will be the people's Government of these United States for all time to come. To that form of government I know that the President of the United States subscribes. He has never in any act of his violated or indicated that he is not in sympathy with that Constitution, which he swore to protect and uphold.

When the sovereignty was taken from the King and from the dominant factions in the pure democracies and placed upon the sovereign people of this country there had to be ways devised in which the sovereign people might express their will. In order to do that we adopted the party system; that is, those of similar beliefs and similar political persuasion would meet in convention through their representatives and declare the principles which should govern them in the event they were intrusted with the affairs of government. That declaration of principles or platform was their contract with the sovereign people who elected them to office.

It is my impression, it is my belief, and it is my principle that when I accepted the nomination of a party which had adopted a declaration of principles it becomes my duty as the representative and agent of that party to do whatever I could to see that those principles and policies were enacted into law and become the principles and policies of our Government. It is not for me, after I have submitted myself to the people representing that those are the policies for which I stand, afterward to change my mind on account of the fact that some of them may not be as popular as had been anticipated or on account of any political philosophies which I might later cherish as my own.

Mr. President, I voted against the Senate bill because I believed it violated my party platform pledge. In my activities in this Chamber—and each Senator hearing me may be my judge—I have never asked a Senator what his position was upon the bill or upon the House substitute. I did no lobbying. I would not jeopardize my friendship with any colleague by making some matter in which I was interested a personal matter and embarrassing him in his vote one way or the other. I do not believe in that method of enacting legislation.

I said I voted against this measure because I felt it was in violation of my party platform pledge. I wish to take the time now to review briefly and recall to the minds of Senators what that platform provided as adopted by the Democratic Party at Chicago. It provided first:

> We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe. We hereby declare this to be the platform of the Democratic Party.

Turning to the pledge affecting this particular legislation, the Democratic Party assembled in national convention adopted this plank:

> We advocate the strengthening and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws, to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices, and revision thereof for the better protection of labor and the small producer and distributor; * * * the removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.
>
> We advocate protection of the investing public by requiring to be filed with the Government and carried in the advertisements of all offerings of foreign and domestic stocks and bonds true information as to bonuses, commissions, principal invested, and interests of the sellers.

By the passage of the Securities Act we have fulfilled that part of our party platform pledge.

Further, and this appertains particularly to the pending measure:

> Regulation—

Note the word "regulation"—

> Regulation to the full extent of Federal power—

Again recognizing there is a limit to which we could go even with regulation—

> Regulation to the full extent of Federal power of—
> Holding companies which sell securities in interstate commerce;
> Rates of utility companies operating across State lines; and > Exchanges in securities and commodities.

Mr. President, I have made an examination, as best I could in the limited time at my disposal, of the amendment which was substituted by the House for the Senate bill. I have particularly examined the provisions of section 11. That amendment covers every pledge which was made in the Democratic Party platform. To go beyond the amendment submitted by the House would be as much a violation, in my opinion, of the declaration of party principles and the platform adopted at Chicago as if we should refuse to take any action whatsoever.

Let me call attention briefly to section 11. I am reading this in view of the propaganda which has gone over the country, put forth by those who would make the people believe that the purpose of the bill had been nullified by the adoption of this amendment. I submit to my colleagues that it provides not only for regulation but for most drastic regulation. I doubt very much if we have not exceeded our Federal power even though we adopt the substitute, yet that doubt is not such that I would withhold my support from the House substitute for the Senate bill.

Section 11 provides:

> It shall be the duty of the Commission to examine the corporate structure of every registered holding company and subsidiary company thereof, the relationships among the companies in the holding-company system of every such company, and the character of the interests thereof and the properties owned or controlled thereby to determine the extent to which the corporate structure of such holding-company system and the companies therein may be simplified, unnecessary complexities therein eliminated, voting power fairly and equitably distributed among the holders of securities thereof, and the properties and business thereof confined to those necessary or appropriate to the operations of one or more integrated public-utility systems.

Then follow more regulations—regulations which I say are drastic in their nature; regulations which permit this Commission to make the corrections that the public interests may require; regulations to bring them to a point where they deal fairly, where they constitute no monopoly, where they constitute one integrated system of utilities.

I submit that that is a fair and a full compliance with the platform of my party; and to go further than that, let me repeat, would be as unfair as to disregard this pledge.

In view of some things that have been said—most of them unauthenticated—in view of some word that has come to the floor of this body by letter and otherwise, I am constrained to believe that the President of the United States is not correctly informed as to the purport of this bill and the amendments to it. I know that he would not wish to do anything other than carry out his party pledges contained in a platform of which he said, in his speech of acceptance, "That noble document, the platform which you have adopted, I accept 100 percent." I know that so far he has been faithful to that promise. I know that he would not disregard that promise if he correctly understood the provisions of this bill. Needless to say, with the many responsibilities of his office, he must rely upon advice which he thinks to be correct. We have had in this Chamber the experience of knowing that this utility legislation is so complicated that two experts had to sit through the hearings of the committee, that two experts had to sit in this Chamber in order properly to direct and advise the chairman as to what it was, because it was so complicated in its nature that I doubt whether any Member of the Senate correctly understands its every provision.

I desire to say as a personal matter that I was a candidate at the same time for United States Senator from the State of Illinois. I addressed my fellow citizens of that State upon the issues involved in the campaign. I was met by the same thing that all Senators have met—groups trying to find out and get a pledge as to how I would stand, if elected, on certain issues and on certain matters which might be presented for legislation. My reply to them invariably was that I had no pledges to make outside of my party platform. I said, "If you wish to know what I stand for, read the platform of my party adopted in Chicago, and it will tell you the principles which will govern me if elected to office."

You wonder, then, why is this protest; why is all this bitterness thrown into the matter of enacting this proposed legislation? In order to answer that question we must go back to political history, most of it very recent.

In 1924 a group of our fellow citizens met in the city of Cleveland. They styled themselves "Progressives." They adopted a platform declaring what their policies and their principles would be if intrusted with the affairs of government. This particular group had as its moving and guiding spirit the distinguished former Senator from the State of Wisconsin, Robert M. La Follette, Sr., whose utterances in the Congress and whose political philosophies of long standing were such a departure from the philosophies of the other two parties that they attracted considerable attention. It was under his direction, and in order to translate those philosophies into policies of government, that this group met, not satisfied with the philosophies of either one of the other two parties. I say this with every respect to the former Senator from Wisconsin, whose distinguished and honorable son now holds a seat in this body, because in the matter of advocating those philosophies he was sincere, he was conscientious, he was persistent; and, differ as one might from his beliefs, one was obliged to cherish a wholesome respect for his sincerity.

The platform adopted by that group in Cleveland provided for these unusual and strange policies of government:

They declared themselves upon the power question; they declared themselves upon the resources of the country; and after taking from the other two platforms those provisions and those policies which were popular, they went a step further, and we find in this platform that they say:

> We favor public ownership of the Nation's waterpower and the creation and development of a national superpower system, including Muscle Shoals, to supply at actual cost light and power for the people and nitrate for the farmers, and strict public control and permanent conservation of all the Nation's resources, including coal, iron and other ores, oil, and timberlands, in the interest of the people.

In their campaign book, which was given out to the public as an explanation of their platform, they say:

> This is the electric age. Within the next 10 years every home should be heated and lighted with electricity and every railroad and industry should be electrically operated.
>
> They will be if our great water-power resources are fully developed and if the power generated is sold at cost so as to bring it within the reach of the people's purse.

Further, they say—and I desire to have strict attention paid to this—

> The Progressives propose, therefore, to maintain public ownership of the Nation's water power and to develop a great national superpower system to furnish light and power at cost to the people.

Realizing that this might meet with objection in this constitutional Government of ours, realizing that these things that they intended to do could not be done under our present Constitution, they placed in their platform a provision in which they said:

> We favor submitting to the people, for their considerate judgment, a constitutional amendment providing that Congress may by reenacting a statute make it effective over a judicial veto.

They further say:

> We favor such amendment to the Constitution as may be necessary to provide for the election of all Federal judges, without party designation, for fixed terms not exceeding 10 years, by direct vote of the people.

And in their explanation in the campaign book that they put out, they say—and I should like to have Senators pay attention to this:

> The only remedy is for the people to take the selection of the Federal judiciary into their own hands. Punishment by repudiation at the polls should be the penalty for those who demonstrate a hostile attitude toward popular rights. The remedy is to make the judges responsible to the people.

In other words, they realized that in order to carry out these policies they must tear the veil from the goddess of justice; they must desecrate her temple by taking down from the walls those axioms which have become a part of American life and American manhood:

> Do justice, though the heavens fall.
> Protect the weak against the strong.
> Protect the minorities against the majority.

Yes; they would have the courts subservient to the popular will, subservient to politics. Yes; they would revolutionize and destroy the Constitution of the fathers.

One has to understand this philosophy if he would understand what is back of the bill, because, unfortunately for the Democratic Party, there succeeded, by seniority, to the chairmanship of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, one who was at that time a Democratic Senator, and who accepted the nomination for the Vice Presidency and declared himself for these policies and these purposes.

That is why the talk goes out, and we see it mentioned in the papers, but never emanating from the President of the United States, emanating, however, from this particular group, that they are going to carry this issue to the people. The statement was made by the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce that if the death sentence, the sentence which would destroy private ownership, the sentence which would open the road for public ownership and public control, were taken from this particular bill, the matter would be carried as an issue to the people, and those who opposed it would be branded as the tools of a Power Trust.

I do not believe that any Power Trust can find any consolation in the amendment which the House adopted to the Senate bill, and if they want to make that an issue, let the issue be fairly stated; let the issue be stated as being whether or not we shall adhere to the pledges contained in the Democratic platform adopted in Chicago, or the State socialism of industries as adopted by the platform at Cleveland.

I do not know that I care to make any further presentment of this matter. I believe I have said, briefly, all I care to say. I do not know how any Senator in the Chamber is going to vote, except those who voluntarily told me how they would vote. I am sure I have made no canvass of the situation. I do not know what arguments will be presented for the defeat of the motion. I hope that every Senator will vote as he understands it, and I can conscientiously say that I feel that I am standing on the Democratic platform, and I feel that the administration is with me on this proposition.

There are whispers around as to what may happen. Letters have been written in response to conferences, with no opportunity of our knowing what was said in the conferences, or what representations were made. Let it be remembered that insinuations, accusations, vilification, and slanders do not constitute arguments and are no answer.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have been endeavoring to obtain a copy of the text of the House amendment, and I am informed it has not been printed. It seems to me this is a matter of such importance that we should have the printed text before us. I personally have not seen the House amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have no objection to its being printed. Of course, it came over in the usual form of a message and was laid before the Senate and, following the usual custom, it was not printed. I have no objection to its being printed and a vote being taken on it tomorrow.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is there any objection to having the House text printed in a matter of such importance as this?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is request made for unanimous consent to have it printed?

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire if the print striking out the Senate bill and inserting the House bill is not available?

Mr. WHEELER. I assume it is. I am frank to say that I am not sure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Copies were supplied. I do not find one on my desk at the moment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. When I first came in this morning I asked the secretary to the minority if he would not obtain for me a copy of the House bill. It was reported to me subsequently that he was unable to obtain it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what the House did was to strike out the Senate bill and to insert an amendment in the nature of a substitute. There were the usual number of copies available when the amended measure was first brought over to the Senate. There was no separate print of the House bill, because there was no separate bill reported. Of course, there has been considerable demand for copies of the House amendment. I am not informed whether the supply has been exhausted, but I know copies have been available since the measure was messaged back to the Senate from the House.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to obtain a copy somewhere; and if I can, I will not press the point further now.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am informed by the clerk that there is an abundance of copies, and I now submit one to the Senator from Minnesota which is in the form I described.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] has seen fit in his discussion of the pending motion to comment on what he terms my political philosophy and the political philosophy of the late Senator La Follette. I am informed that while I was absent from the Chamber the Senator said it was unfortunate that the rules of the Senate were such that I had become Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. President, I shall not answer that statement. I might say to the Senator from Illinois that if he wishes to object to my being Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate he can object when the matter comes up at the first meeting of the next Congress, when a vote will be taken in the Senate. That has happened on a previous occasion, and such a vote will be taken again. I can assure the Senator that if the majority of the Senate were opposed to my serving as Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I would be the last one to accept the position.

I appreciate the fact that the philosophy of the Senator from Illinois and my philosophy are quite different; but that has nothing to do with the pending bill. At the outset, let me say to the Senator that the bill was not drafted by me; it was drafted by the administration, to which he has proclaimed he is so loyal, and for which he has said he has such high respect. It was handed to me, as the Senator knows, and as every other Member of the Senate knows, by the administration, and the President of the United States has written me a letter, which I presented on the floor of the Senate, in which he stated that he was entirely familiar with section 11 and that he wanted it to remain in the bill. So there can be no question with reference to that matter.

It is not my philosophy which is embraced in the bill. I say to the Senator further that if I could have had my way about it, if I had been drafting the bill, I would have drafted a very different bill from the one before us, because I do not think it reaches the "racket" which has been carried on. I do not think the bill goes far enough.

I may say to the Senator that men in his own State who have been carrying on "rackets" have been sent to the penitentiary. There are other men in his State, namely, the Insulls and their group, who were, in my judgment, far more guilty of carrying on a much more reprehensible "racket" than the racket carried on by Al Capone and his crowd in the city of Chicago.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss my political philosophy. I should be glad to go into the State of Illinois and discuss with the Senator the philosophy contained in the bill we are considering, and differentiate the philosophy which he represents and that which is proposed in the bill and for which the administration has asked.

First, I wish to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that if the pending motion shall be defeated, I intend to ask for a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill. I wish to read a letter which I received this morning by special messenger from the chairman of the Securities Commission, Mr. Kennedy. It will hardly be said that Mr. Kennedy is a Liberal or one who entertains in many respects the same political philosophy which I entertain. His letter is as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR: In accordance with your request of this morning, I am writing to express my views regarding the holding company bill as it passed the House. This is to be taken merely as an expression of my individual views on the administrative features of this bill and is in no sense intended to be an expression of opinion regarding the legislative policy implicit in the draft passed by either branch of Congress.

As you know, the bill which passed the Senate and the House bill propose to give our commission a variety of duties and confer, even apart from section 11, wide powers of discretion in the administration of this act. These bills, among other things, require us to register holding companies, to regulate all security transactions, with power to supervise even the underwriting arrangements. In addition, the Commission is to regulate the acquisition of all securities and capital assets of companies subject to the act.

These duties while enormous can be discharged, I believe, with reasonable efficiency, by a trained and competent personnel, but the burden cast upon us by section 11 of the House bill is simply staggering. I cannot be too vehement in urging upon you my feeling that this section, as now drawn, is most unfortunate. I urge my objection to this section upon two grounds. The first is simply the limitations upon human capacity to achieve results. The second objection is based upon my conception of what is wisdom in government.

The task with which the Commission is confronted under section 11 of the House bill is that of determining whether it is "necessary in the public interest" to limit the operations of a holding-company system to a single "integrated" public-utility system. If the Commission finds that such limitation is not necessary it is then under a duty to require limitation to "such number of integrated public-utility systems as it finds may be included in such holding-company system consistent with the public interest."

The phrase "public interest" is not defined in the House bill. Thus this bill furnishes no effective standard to guide the Commission in the momentous decisions it must make as to which of the holding systems are to be broken up, and how such process is to be effected. I do not believe it is fair or practical to expect any five men to shoulder the grave responsibility for deciding which of these systems are to be reorganized and into what size and character the ultimate groupings shall evolve.

The administrative burden involved in the duties required under section 11 will just be overwhelming, no matter what the appropriation, no matter the size or the technical equipment of the staff.

The second reason and by far the more important one is my strong conviction that it is not a wise policy to vest in any one group of men the tremendous responsibility involved in this grant of power. Certainly, this is true unless such a grant is hedged with precise and defined standards set up by the Congress itself.

I have an appreciation of the great need in our modern life of flexible language in statutes, so that the administration of the law may be responsive to an ever-changing existence. Both bills wisely contain grants of discretionary power over the details of implementing the statute. This discretion is desirable in order to attain a practical and efficient administration. But so far as the vital decision as to the size and character of the holding company systems of the future are concerned, which decisions will affect the interests of millions of people, investors, and the consuming public alike, I do not believe that any commission should be given unfettered discretion to decide matters of such transcendent importance.

It is also my opinion that from an administrative point of view section 13 of the House bill is open to serious objection.

Incidentally, let me call the Senate's attention to the fact that the House not only amended section 11, and gave to the Commission the discretion to say what company should be wiped out and what company should be permitted to operate without setting any standards to guide their determination, but the House emasculated section 13, which was adopted by the Senate, without a single speech being made against it, without one suggestion of amendment being made to it; and Senators who voted against section 11, but said they were in favor of the strictest kind of legislation, now find a situation where not only is the so-called "death sentence" eliminated, but they find also that strict regulation is not provided by the House bill.

Mr. Kennedy's letter continues:

It is also my opinion that from an administrative point of view section 13 of the House bill is open to serious objection. The comparable section in the Senate bill was very definite and explicit to the effect that intrasystem service transactions should be on a cost or mutual basis. The administration of such a law involves no great burden.

That is, as it was written in the Senate.

Section 13 of the House bill, however, while intending doubtless to reach a similar result, provides that profits may be realized in intercompany transactions.

Mr. President, that is something which was denounced by some of the forward-looking utility men before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. As a matter of fact, the utility men themselves offered an amendment to the Senate bill which was not so far-reaching as is the provision which was adopted by the House of Representatives.

I continue reading from the letter:

The language of section 13 (of the House bill) seems to indicate that our Commission is required to pass on—intercompany service contracts to determine whether their terms are fair and involve no unreasonable profit. It appears to me that this task which will devolve upon the Commission will be an impossible one. There is no objective standard as to what is a fair and reasonable profit.

What?—

As a matter of fact, one of the great utility-holding systems itself has gone on record as being against such profits in intercompany transactions.

I continue reading from Mr. Kennedy's letter:

There are not comparable precedents on which the Commission may rely. As you know, most of the large holding companies have an elaborate system of service contracts and the companies furnishing the services are merely corporate shells controlled by the group dominating the holding-company system. These service companies have little capital and normally there is a complete absence of arm's length dealing. All these factors prompt me to urge very strongly the undesirability of retaining the language of the House bill in these sections.

One further thought occurs to me in connection with the attainment of the statutory objectives, to wit, the simplification of holding-company structures. The Senate bill provides machinery whereby voluntary reorganizations and simplifications can be attained under the control of the Commission. The House bill has no such provision. This omission is unfortunate because it appears to me to be highly desirable that efficient and expeditious machinery be made available in order to facilitate the voluntary simplification of the corporate structures of holding companies.

I am sure that if the machinery for voluntary reorganizations were enacted into law many systems, promptly upon passage of the bill, would proceed to simplify their organizations on their own initiative under the Commission's direction. This should have a beneficial effect upon the investors whose anxieties would thereby be resolved. It should be advantageous to the companies themselves whose permanent status will thereby the sooner be determined.

The Commission will be prepared at a later date, if requested, to furnish specific recommendations affecting the administrative problems of the proposed legislation.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY, Chairman.

Also, Mr. President, I asked the Federal Power Commission for a letter with reference to title II. I have a letter addressed to me, dated July 8, as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR: The House substitute for the Senate public utility bill (S. 2796) carries two amendments to title II that effectively destroy the regulatory powers intended to be given by the bill and make the bill unworkable.

Section 201 (b) (the jurisdictional section, p. 103) of the House bill materially differs from the Senate bill. It takes from the Commission jurisdiction over generating plants and facilities. It not only strikes from the Senate bill the language conferring such jurisdiction upon the Commission but contains a positive declaration that "the Commission * * * shall not have jurisdiction over facilities used for the generation of electric energy."

If we take away the Commission's power to investigate the generating cost we take away from them absolutely the power to determine the proper kind of regulation of the interstate character of the power lines, and it would be an impossible task for them to find what the cost would be of producing electricity which was transmitted in interstate commerce unless they could go to the base and find what it cost to generate electricity there.

When it is recognized that the jurisdiction conferred upon the Commission is primarily investigatory in character, the seriousness of this amendment is realized.

Section 318 (b) of the House bill also differs very substantially from the corresponding section (316 (b)) of the Senate bill. This subsection provides that where a State commission has jurisdiction over security issues, accounts, reports, acquisitions, or disposition of property, or any other matter made subject to Federal regulation under this bill, the persons subject to such State regulation shall not likewise be subject to Federal regulation as to the same subject matter. The effect of this amendment is to take from the Federal Power Commission much of the jurisdiction conferred upon it in other sections of the bill, and no doubt the contention will be made that it takes from the Commission all jurisdiction except over those utilities operating in States where there are no State commissions. This amendment makes all of title II, except the amendments to the Federal Power Act, substantially unworkable.

There are numerous other differences in the two bills, but these are the most far-reaching in effect. They can only be corrected by the bill going to conference, and they are undoubtedly of sufficient importance to justify sending the bill to conference.

The Solicitor of the Commission has prepared and placed in your hands memoranda with respect to the major, as well as the other differences, and the purpose of this letter is to emphasize the seriousness, from the standpoint of this Commission, of the changes above referred to.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION,
BASIL MANLY, Vice Chairman.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the procedure sought to be taken here is exceedingly unusual. Since I have been in the Senate I have never known House amendments to a bill to be adopted in full without the Senate ever reading them, without the Senate over knowing anything about them, and when the majority of the committee oppose such action and ask that the bill go to conference. It is almost, in my judgment, an unheard-of procedure.

What the Senate is asked to do is to adopt the House amendments, some of which were adopted upon the floor of the House, without any debate, without any consideration, under the theory that the bill was going to conference. Some of the amendments were adopted under those conditions and circumstances.

The House amendment departs radically from the Senate measure in many vital particulars. The departures are by no means confined either to section 11 or to section 13, and no attempt to justify them was made upon the floor of the House of Representatives. Some of these departures are not apparent from a casual reading of the bill itself. They appear at first glance to follow the Senate provisions almost identically; but they succeed, by the omission of a few words or the adding of a new subsection, in changing the policy and effect of many of the Senate sections.

I shall discuss briefly the principal variances between the House amendments and the Senate bill. First, I want to stress two very vital sections which the House rejected entirely in favor of substitutes which purport to deal with the same subject matter. In reality, the House substitute sections are so different from the Senate provisions that they amount to a complete reversal of the Senate bill.

I refer, as probably all Senators know, to section 11, which deals with the simplification and reorganization of holding-company systems, and to section 13, which deals with intra-system service, sales, and construction contracts. These vital differences are thoroughly explained and the Senate provisions fully justified in the "additional views" filed at the end of the House committee's report by Mr. EDWARD C. EICHER. It is known that Mr. EICHER expressed not only his own views but those of other members of the House committee, including Chairman RAYBURN.

Section 11. Simplification of holding-company systems: Section 11 of the House substitute bill departs radically from the President's policy regarding the whittling down of these giant utility holding companies to a size and power where they will be susceptible of effective regulation and where they will be responsive to the community which their companies service. The Senate bill in section 11 met this issue clearly. It was not at all a "death sentence", as the utilities and a large portion of the press, which have reaped rewards from advertisements, have tried to make the country believe.

Mr. President, referring to the newspapers, let me say that many of the little country newspapers have been filled with full-page paid advertisements which ordinarily would never have been put in those newspapers at all; and on the following day would appear an editorial denouncing the holding-company bill and denouncing the "death sentence." Almost every little weekly newspaper in the United States had an advertisement paid for by the great holding companies, by the Associated Gas & Electric Co., for instance, denouncing and misrepresenting the bill, lying about the bill. The Associated Gas & Electric Co. was one of the worst offenders in the whole utility system of the United States of America, but they wrote to their stockholders whom they had robbed—and there is no other term for it—the stockholders, if you please, whom they had robbed, from whom they have pilfered, and asked them to write to their Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Then Senators and Representatives stand in their places and say, "I have received so many letters from poor widows and orphans that I do not dare to vote for the bill." Do not dare to vote for it—why? Because of the lies and the misrepresentations of those who have robbed their stockholders and yet requested them to write to their Senators and Representatives in Congress. Are Members of the Senate, are Members of the House of Representatives, going to subject themselves to such kind of propaganda and then weaken because of that sort of thing going on in this country?

I repeat, section 11 of the Senate bill was not a "death sentence." It only provided that companies which have sprawled from one end of this country to the other must do one of two things; they had to get rid of the control which they have over the operating companies; and if they would get rid of their control over such companies then they could remain in existence. They would be required, however, to stop the service, sales, and construction contracts whereby they have robbed the operating companies. If they would do that they could remain in existence and become simply investment trusts under the regulation of the Securities Commission. The section further provided that if they desired to continue to be holding companies they might do so; that they could control other companies, provided they controlled them in integrated sections where the people themselves could reach them and where there could be effective regulation.

Section 11 was, as the President termed it, an emancipation proclamation, emancipating the local operating companies from holding-company control and enfranchising the security holders, the real holders of the operating companies. It was nothing else and nothing more.

We have heard much about "fear of the investors." Who was it that instilled that fear into the investors? Was it the Congress of the United States? Was it this bill? Not at all. The fear that was instilled into the investors was instilled into them by the lying propaganda of men of the Insull type, of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., of Harley Clarke, of the Electric Bond & Share, who want to retain their power over the operating companies and to maintain their great, fat jobs.

I say to you, Mr. President, that the Democratic Party cannot go before the people of the United States and say that it has not the courage, that it has not the backbone to stop this thievery which has been going on in the holding companies and let them to emasculate this proposed legislation upon the floor of Congress.

Those who may entertain that fear may think that this propaganda is not fairly understood, but I venture the assertion that when they return home and face their constituents, whether it be in Illinois or Iowa or whatever it may be, they will find that the great rank and file of the people of the United States know what is going on; they know that the newspapers of this country are being subsidized by these fat advertisements; they know that some of the writers who are sending out pro holding-company articles are being paid by the utility companies and have been hired to write such special articles. They know it and everybody else knows it.

I repeat that the section as passed by the Senate did not pass a "death sentence" on the holding companies. It merely required the companies to give up their control over the operating companies scattered all over the country and confine their appetite for power and their greed for profits to running a single economically integrated system within the confines of a geographic area. That section when it left this body was in full accord with the President's message. The Senator from Illinois, however, stands on this floor and says that the President did not know about it; that he did not know what was in the bill. The President not only put it in his message but he put it in a letter to me. Yes; it is fine to get up and say you want to stand by the President, that you are always standing by him, and then say that he did not know what was in his message, that he did not know what was in the bill, and did not know what was in the letter written to me, when he said that he wanted section 11 included in the bill.

Section 11, I repeat, as adopted by this body was in full accord with the President's message and it met the issue of effective regulation. It did not set up a deceptive method of reform to protect rather than control the Power Trust.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement has been made repeatedly that the House amendment would vest in the Commission discretion as to whether holding companies may be abolished or permitted to survive. What is the rule fixed in the House amendment for governing the conduct of the Commission in determining whether a holding company shall be abolished or whether it may be continued?

Mr. WHEELER. The only guide is the public interest. It is simply provided that if the five members of the Commission decide that a company is in the public interest, it may continue; if they decide it is not in the public interest, it may not continue.

Mr. ROBINSON. It leaves in the Commission the discretion as to what constitutes the public interest?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. It gives no definition as to what may govern their action in determining when the public interest is involved?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator think that would meet the test of constitutionality which is so often raised in connection with legislation?

Mr. WHEELER. I have not a doubt that the Supreme Court would say that was unconstitutional, because there is no guide by which the Commission may determine that this company is too large or that company is just large enough. I feel there is no possibility of doubt that the Court would say to the Congress, "You have abdicated your legislative powers and turned them over to the Commission"; and Mr. Kennedy says it is not humanly possible for the Commission to exercise such powers.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the instruction that the Commission shall be governed by the public interest is a slight direction, but that of itself involves the exercise of a very broad discretion. I doubt if any two members of the Commission would be able to agree in a given case as to just what public interest was involved or how it should be conserved in connection with the continuance of a holding company. If holding companies are to be regulated within the meaning of the Democratic platform which has been referred to here, it may be necessary, in cases where a dozen holding companies have been superimposed one upon another, to abolish at least some of them.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, there is no question that the Senator is right.

Mr. ROBINSON. We cannot wisely give a narrow definition to the term "regulation" and make it effective in that connection. If we should vest in the Commission a discretion as to when a holding company is rendering a public service and when its continuance is in the public interest, we would probably be confronted with a decision of the Supreme Court nullifying the whole action and declaring that we have delegated legislative power. Why should not the rule for the government of the Commission in determining that very vital question be specified in the act? If it cannot be written, if it is impossible to write a rule, it is all the more important that Congress shall legislate directly on the subject rather than to leave it to an undefined and unrestricted discretion.

Mr. WHEELER. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. That of itself constitutes a substantial reason for not departing from the customary procedure. There has never been another instance during my service in the Senate when a bill of this importance, involving such important changes in a Senate bill, has been disposed of by a motion to concur in the House amendment. Always it has been the practice to send the bill to conference and give the conferees an opportunity to work out an agreement as to the differences in the two bills.

Permit me to say, while I am speaking on the subject, that it is entirely possible and even probable that some provisions in the House amendment might be found useful and helpful. I am certain there are provisions in the Senate bill which ought to be retained, but which have been eliminated from the House substitute. It is impossible to make improvements by a mere motion to concur in the House amendment.

The subject involves many technical considerations. It is not possible for a Senator who is busy with other legislation to be familiar with the details of the controversy unless he takes a great amount of time to study the subject. Very few of us have been able to do that. The motion involves a choice between the House substitute and the Senate bill. It involves more than that. It denies to the two Houses the opportunity to reconcile their differences, the opportunity to take advantage of wholesome provisions in both measures.

It is entirely conceivable to me, as one somewhat experienced in legislative matters, that there may be some things in the Senate bill which are desirable, and there may be some things in the House bill which are desirable, but which are not in the Senate bill. Why deny the two Houses the opportunity to take advantage of the study which has been given to the subject in both branches of the Congress? What is the benefit of having the two Houses of Congress if we are to pursue any other course?

It seems to me there is no sound reason for basing a motion to concur on a single provision in the bill. The effect of the motion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] is to determine the whole question of this proposed legislation, all the questions involved in it, on a single proposition as to whether the commission shall be vested with jurisdiction to determine when holding companies may survive or whether they shall be abolished under certain conditions.

There are other features involved in the controversy which are of the very greatest importance and which cannot be intelligently and fairly resolved on a mere motion to concur.

I think it should be added that all of us who are familiar with the course this proposed legislation has already taken and with the situation as it exists in the two Houses recognize the fact that there will be difficulty in conference. It is not going to be an easy matter to work out an agreement between the two Houses. However, that is no reason why either House or why both Houses should pursue a course entirely different from that which is normal in the enactment of important legislation.

It appears to me conclusive that the wise course to be pursued is to send the bill to conference and let the representatives of the two Houses come together and work out the best agreement they can. We will probably have a better bill than if we accept the House substitute on the motion to concur.

I apologize to the Senator for taking so much of his time.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much for his remarks, and I concur in what he has said.

Undoubtedly there are provisions in the House bill which are better than some of the provisions of the Senate bill. Likewise there are provisions in the Senate bill with which most of the House Members will agree, and which are far better than provisions in the House bill. When the bill passed the House it was the belief of the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of that body that it would go to conference and that it would be worked out in conference if it was humanly possible to do so.

There is nothing in section 11 of the House bill which provides for simplification of the corporate structure of the holding system and the removal of unnecessary complexities therein. It does not even go so far in this particular as did the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH]. It places no limitation on holding companies to the second, third, or even the fourth degree. There is nothing in the House bill which provides that a holding company may not have one, two, three, or four different holding companies, one on top of the other. There are no restrictions of any kind or character, but the Commission is left entirely without any standards at all or any direction from the Congress as to what they shall do under such circumstances.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. From the beginning of the debate on this measure I have been looking for someone who has the information, and is willing to supply it, to inform me and the country what is the justification for superimposing one holding company on another to an almost unlimited number. During the course of the debate it developed that in some instances there were as many as 10 or 12. What is the reason, sounding either in private interest or in public interest, unless it is desired to gain some advantage over investors or the operating company?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that, as a matter of fact, no utility witness appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee who was willing to justify or attempted to justify the set-up of some of the holding companies. I do not wish to quote from memory from the testimony of any particular witness; but my recollection is that each and every one of them who testified before the committee admitted that there were holding companies upon holding companies which could not be justified, and they had to be eliminated, and the structure had to be simplified.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I may say that the House amendment provides that if the Commission determines that it is not for the public interest to have these holding companies, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, one superimposed upon the other, they may make that elimination.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to enable me to ask a question of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. While the Senator from Illinois was temporarily absent from the Chamber, and in the time of the Senator from Montana, I asked a question which I should like now to submit to the Senator from Illinois. His experience and ability as a lawyer are generally recognized.

Does the Senator from Illinois believe that the rule set forth in the House substitute is sufficiently definite to enable the proposed legislation to withstand the test of constitutionality? In other words, is it sufficient to say that if the Commission finds that it is not in the public interest to permit a holding company to continue it shall take certain action, and if it finds that it is in the public interest not to take that action it shall refrain from doing so? Does not the Senator recognize the fact that the mere statement "in the public interest" represents a conclusion rather than a fact? Men differ about what constitutes the public interest. There are some Senators in this Chamber with whom I have never agreed on any subject as to what constitutes the public interest. There are other Senators in this Chamber with whom I usually agree, and the Senator from Illinois is one of them.

Assuming, however, that that difference of opinion which always exists will reflect itself in the attitude and action of the members of the Commission, what is the constitutional justification for giving the Commission unlimited authority to say that one holding company in one section of the country may continue in existence because under its operations it is serving the public interest, and in another section of the country a different holding company—or, for that matter, the same holding company—may not continue to operate? I think it involves a question which we ought to be particularly anxious to avoid at this juncture, and that is the question of constitutionality.

Mr. DIETERICH. I will answer the distinguished Senator from Arkansas by saying that that was my exact criticism of the original bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. How does the Senator escape applying it with more force to the House provision in which he moves to concur?

Mr. DIETERICH. Let me answer further that the criticism which the Senator from Arkansas is making of this bill is the criticism I made of the original bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. DIETERICH. Neither one of them——

Mr. ROBINSON. Wait a minute. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIETERICH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator's motion shall be agreed to, there will be no opportunity to correct either the House provision or the Senate provision; but if the bill shall be sent to conference there will be at least an opportunity to revise whichever one may be agreed upon and make it conform to constitutional requirements.

Mr. DIETERICH. In answer to the Senator from Arkansas, if the Senator from Montana will further yield to me——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I will say that I understand the disposition of those in charge of the Senate bill. Those matters were pointed out. We asked them to make the bill definite. I made the statement in the Senate at that time that no one could know, and no lawyer could advise, what the rights of a client would be under the provisions of the original bill. I have not particularly examined the amendment, but it could not be any worse. That is why I think it is proper to adopt the amendment; it could not possibly be any worse.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Montana will permit me to interrupt his colleague from Illinois, I think this debate indicates that the House provision is even more subject to the criticism to which we are referring than the Senate provision could be; but, admitting that both of them are subject to the criticism, what is the objection to taking the opportunity to make a correction? The only way in which that opportunity can be obtained is by defeating the Senator's motion and sending the bill to conference.

Mr. DIETERICH. In response to the Senator from Arkansas, I will say that the objection is this: As I understand, the able Senator from Montana will be one of the conferees and the two ranking members of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be the other conferees of the majority party. I think I pretty well understand their attitude on that subject; and I agree with the Senator that in this entire legislation it is hardly a question of which measure is the best. It is a question of which is the worst; and, of the two evils, I think the House bill is the lesser.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Montana has been quoted in the newspapers as making the statement that if the bill were sent to conference and the so-called "death sentence" section were not included there would be no legislation. I desire to know whether the Senator was correctly or incorrectly quoted.

Mr. WHEELER. That is not correct. I have not seen the reports to which the Senator refers, but I do not think that is correct. What I have said was that, so far as I was personally concerned, I would rather have no legislation than to have the House bill passed in its present form. Of course, if the bill goes to conference, the purpose of having a conference is to try to have a bill worked out by both the House and the Senate. I do not know whether or not that can be done, but that will be the aim of the conferees if the bill goes to conference.

Mr. BYRNES. May I ask the Senator another question? When he says he would rather see no legislation at all than to see enacted into law the House bill, does he have reference to the entire bill or only to that one section? Does he mean that rather than see one section omitted from the bill he would let all the regulatory features of the bill die?

Mr. WHEELER. No; what I said was, as I shall point out before I conclude, and as Mr. Kennedy has pointed out, that the House has not only emasculated section 11 with reference to the so-called "death sentence", but it has provided a "death sentence", if Senators wish to call it that. I do not call it that; but the only difference between the House bill and the Senate bill is that the House bill leaves the "death sentence" up to the Commission. The Commission could say that the Electric Bond & Share Co. should go out of business because it was against the public interest; they could say that the United Corporation should stay in business because it was in the public interest; they could say that the Insull Co. was in the public interest and that the Commonwealth & Southern was against the public interest. I say to the Senator that if ever there was an unconstitutional discretion placed in the hands of a commission, that, in my opinion, is a delegation of power which is unconstitutional.

Mr. BYRNES. There are 150 pages of the House bill. I do not know what is contained in it. I doubt if any Senator on the floor knows. I do not desire to concur in a bill which we have not had the opportunity to read or to consider. At the same time, I think the Senate is entitled to know the Senator's views, and whether or not he takes the position that if he cannot secure the adoption of one section of the bill in which he is interested he will let the measure die.

Mr. WHEELER. In the first place, let me say to the Senator from South Carolina that, as I have explained, I have no personal interest whatsoever in this matter.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no; of course not. I refer to the Senator's views.

Mr. WHEELER. I feel that the administration went too far in recommending that we permit any of these holding companies to continue to exist, because I agree with the Senator from Alabama that holding companies generally should be eliminated; but the administration did not go that far. It proposed to permit holding companies to exist in integrated sections of the country. I can see no good purpose in permitting the existence of holding companies to any extent. However, as was pointed out to me by some of the departments, there are cases where they felt that holding companies in certain instances served practical purposes.

It is immaterial to me whether or not the bill goes to conference. I simply wish to explain to the Senate the House bill, the position taken by the Securities Commission and the Federal Power Commission, to present their views to the Senate, and then if the Senate wishes to adopt the House amendment it is perfectly agreeable to me. It seems to me, however, that as chairman of the committee it is my duty to point out to the Senate what are the objections to the House amendment, as I see the matter.

Mr. BYRNES. And is the Senator about to proceed to point them out?

Mr. WHEELER. I am; yes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I do not wish to interrupt the trend of the Senator's thought, but my feeling in the matter is exactly like that of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. Nobody is anxious to vote to concur in the amendment striking out all after the enacting clause of an important measure and inserting a bill in itself comprising one-hundred and-forty-odd pages as a substitute for a bill comprising 154 pages, I believe, which in itself was so complicated that very few Senators were ever able to understand exactly what its provisions were; and I think that was by design. Nevertheless, in my judgment very few Senators are anxious to concur, sight unseen, in an amendment of this magnitude. On the other hand, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] says, the Senator from Montana has been repeatedly quoted in the newspapers to the effect that it was his purpose to send the bill to conference and, unless he could secure the Senate provisions of section 11, to kill the bill.

So far as I am concerned, while I should be very much disinclined to vote for the motion to concur, I would rather vote for the motion to concur in the House amendment, with its important regulatory features, than to kill the bill by sending it to conference, if that is the purpose of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, that is not the purpose. I have not seen the quotations to which the Senator refers, but it is inconceivable to me that I was quoted to that effect. I have said repeatedly that, so far as I am concerned, the bill, not only as to section 11, but as to section 13, which I explained a moment ago, gives the Commission discretion to permit service contracts, to permit the companies to make profits on them, and as Mr. Kennedy, the Chairman of the Securities Commission, has pointed out, it places a task upon the Commission which is impossible of being performed, both with reference to section 11 and with reference to section 13.

Mr. President, I would rather have no bill passed than to have a burden placed upon a commission which was impossible of fulfillment, which would mean a complete breakdown, and would mean that the practices sought to be cured would be allowed to continue.

Mr. CLARK. As the Senator well knows, if the bill were sent to conference the Senator would be the head of the Senate conferees. Would it be the Senator's purpose, if the bill were sent to conference, to carry out the purpose expressed to me on yesterday by another distinguished member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], to really undertake to get together in a conference report with an idea of bringing in a bill which would be acceptable to everybody, possibly, who believes in the essential reforms contemplated in the bill, or would it be the Senator's purpose to insist on section 11 to the point where it would kill the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not. As I said a moment ago, the purpose of a conference is to try to work out a bill satisfactory to the conferees of both Houses.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield just a moment further for another question, I do not desire to impugn the motives of the Senator from Montana, of course, because I know them to be of the highest, but on the day after the bill originally passed the Senate, the Senator from Montana was quoted in the New York Herald Tribune to the effect that the amendment which I had offered on the day before, restoring to the operation of the proposed law the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey and the Koppers Co., a Mellon holding company, would be stricken out in conference.

Mr. WHEELER. I think they have been stricken out in the House bill.

Mr. CLARK. That may be.

Mr. WHEELER. If the bill goes to conference, I am going to try to maintain the Senate's position. That would be my duty, and that is what I would do.

Mr. CLARK. I agree entirely with the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. A Senator came to me and said that he would vote to send the bill to conference provided he could have my assurance that I would yield on section 11. I said to him that I would not do anything of the kind, because I would not be carrying out the instructions of this body if I should do that.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, the Senator from Montana is entirely correct in that, and no Senator would have the hardihood to stand on this floor and ask him to take any other position. But that is an essentially different thing from the effect of the newspaper quotations which have appeared all over the country, and I am amazed that the Senator from Montana has not seen them, because nearly all other Senators have, quotations to the effect that, if the House did not include section 11 in the bill, it was the Senator's purpose to take the bill to conference and kill it. I am entirely satisfied with the Senator's assurance on that question.

Mr. WHEELER. I probably have stated my personal views, but what my personal views may be is quite a different thing in a matter of this sort from my duty acting as the representative of the Senate in trying to reach a satisfactory agreement.

Mr. CLARK. So far as I am concerned, the Senator's assurance is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, regardless of any newspaper quotations, which, if they have been properly described here, were unfortunate, but probably did not represent the sentiment of the Senator from Montana, regardless of any misquotations or newspaper articles, I understand the Senator's attitude to be that as a conferee representing the Senate it would be his duty and his purpose to represent the Senate, and to maintain the Senate's position in the conference, so far as possible, hoping, of course, to persuade other conferees to yield at least to a reasonable degree in order to reach an accommodation, but recognizing that conferees on a highly controversial matter like this must get together in some way if legislation is enacted. If I understand the Senator, his purpose would be to seek, in a reasonable and satisfactory way, with the conferees to write a bill, especially the controversial portions of the bill, which would be reasonably satisfactory, and carry out the essential purposes of the legislation now under consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, there could not be any question about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not see how anyone could ask anything further.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, perhaps I may simplify this proceeding. I appreciate the force of what the Senator from South Carolina has said and what other Senators have said, and I stand somewhat in the same position. I want to be honest about the proposition; I do not believe anyone knows exactly what is in all these bills, and what the differences are. I am willing to come to this agreement and understanding, that I will withdraw my motion to concur generally if permitted to make a motion, after the motion to appoint the conferees shall have been agreed to and before the conferees are appointed, that the conferees be instructed not to insist on section 11.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, no one can deprive the Senator of that right; that is a parliamentary right the Senator has.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Illinois that, so far as I am concerned, if the conferees were instructed to yield upon something the Senate had already done, I should refuse to serve upon the conference.

Mr. DIETERICH. Then, if the Senator were instructed not to insist on section 11 he would refuse to serve on the conference?

Mr. WHEELER. Absolutely.

Mr. DIETERICH. That is what the Senator has given out in the publications in the papers.

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate might as well in the first instance concur in the House amendment as to instruct its conferees in advance to yield on the Senate provision.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course.

Mr. DIETERICH. Then, the contention is that the Senator wants the "death sentence" in section 11, and that is why he wants it to go to conference? Of course, if he would not obey the instructions of the Senate on it, he certainly would not yield in conference.

Mr. WHEELER. Think of the position in which the Senator is seeking to put the Senate conferees! The House did not have a record vote on section 11. The Senate had a record vote on it, and the Senate voted section 11 into the bill. Now the Senator is asking that the Senate conferees go into the conference and yield before the conference begins. I say that to me that would be stultifying, and I should not under those circumstances serve on the conference committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not seem to me that the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois is a practicable one. What I think ought to happen is that the bill should go to conference, and that the conferees, as they are required to do by the rules of the Senate, should make a bona fide effort to work out the disagreements between the two Houses. If they shall do that, I am satisfied that the legislation will be improved rather than made worse by a conference.

Of course we all know that there will be difficulty in reaching an agreement, but it seems to me to be unreasonable to ask the Senate conferees, who have been instructed by the Senate on the provisions of the bill, to recede as a condition to their appointment. I should not at all blame the Senator from Montana for refusing to serve on the conference under such conditions.

The Senate had a contest on the subject matter of the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, and the vote was close. The amendment was rejected. What the Senator from Illinois is asking to have done in order to get the bill to conference is that he be permitted to win his major proposition, so as to make certain that it could not be resolved by the conference, and that suggestion, it seems to me, is so unreasonable that it is surprising the Senator from Illinois should expect to have it accepted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I was merely going to ask the Senator from Montana if he would be willing to agree to a proposition of this sort. I have not consulted the Senator from Illinois about it, and do not know whether or not it meets with his approval, but it seems to me that an agreement might be made that the bill be sent to conference and a substantial agreement be arrived at on other sections than section 11, and that rather than unduly delay the conference in the consideration of section 11, or rather than report a disagreement, the conferees should make a partial report.

Mr. WHEELER. So that the Senate may have a correct picture of the situation, let me make a brief statement. I do not know how many Senators were present when I read the letter from Chairman Kennedy, of the Securities Commission, in which he stated that the House bill is absolutely unworkable.

Mr. CLARK. I heard the Senator from Montana read the letter, and it seems to me that it presents a question for very serious consideration. But if it were possible for the conferees to arrive at a substantial agreement as to the features of the bill outside of section 11, or possibly any other matters which might transpire, would the Senator be willing to bring back the question of the disagreement as to the "death sentence" provision, so-called, for a vote in the Senate? It seems to me that is not an unreasonable suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I cannot understand is why Senators are not willing that there shall be a free conference, as the rules of the Senate contemplate, and as is usually required. Why attempt now to tie the hands of the Senate conferees? The Senate can always, within the discretion of a majority of its Members, control its conferees. The Senate can require its conferees to report. The Senate can discharge its conferees and appoint new conferees. But I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois is unusual and that it should not be agreed to. I should prefer that we go ahead and fight this out now, if the Senate is to be required to recede from its position as a condition to having a conference. I should prefer that we fight it out and let the Senate resolve the question on the motion of the Senator from Illinois. It is the most intelligent way to proceed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. It seems to me to be ridiculous to ask the Senate to tie the hands of its conferees by practically serving notice on the conferees of the House that they need not yield on anything; that all they would need to do would be to "stand pat", and under an agreement which we have made here we would have to bring the bill back to the Senate for instructions. When I say "we", I mean the conferees. I do not know who the conferees will be, outside of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. On a proposition with respect to which the Senate spoke and made decision, even though by only one vote—I have reason to believe it would be decided by a greater majority if it were to be again considered—it seems to me unusual to ask us to do what has been proposed at this time as a condition for agreement.

So far as I am concerned, I do not ask any conditions. I do not seek to impose any conditions. If the Senate desires to do the unusual thing in an important matter such as this, where the other House has stricken out all of the Senate bill and substituted in its place its own bill—if the Senate desires to concur in that, it is the Senate's business. If, however, the bill should go to conference, as it ought to go, it should go without assuming that the Senate does not have sufficient confidence in its conferees to believe that they will do the reasonable thing.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate ought not to concur in a measure of this length and complication with whose provisions they are not familiar. On the other hand, I very violently disagree with the Senator from Kentucky that there is anything unusual or anything improper in asking the Senate to have an opportunity to reconsider its action in view of the vote in the House as to a partcular section which was adopted in the Senate by practically a tie vote.

So far as I am concerned, let me say that I propose to vote against the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] to concur in the House amendment, because it is a very complicated measure. On the other hand, if the Senator from Illinois shall offer the kind of motion which he has just suggested, that the Senate conferees be instructed not to insist on section 11, I propose to vote for that motion. That seems to be an entirely consistent position.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is the Senator's privilege, and I have no criticism to make of him for voting in that way if it is his honest judgment that he should do so. Certainly, however, where either House, in the case of an important and complicated measure such as this, struck out the entire bill after the enacting clause and wrote another bill of its own, I do not recall any instance since I have been a Member of this body, nor do I recall reading about any instance before that time, where there was concurrence on the part of either House. Always, these measures go to conference. With reference to the Transportation Act of 1920, which I as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the House helped to frame, that bill came over to the Senate, and the Senate struck out the entire language of the House bill and wrote in the Cummins bill. The bill went to conference, and it took 6 weeks to work it out so as to secure the enactment of the Transportation Act in its present form.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think there is a misunderstanding. I did not understand the Senator from Illinois to state that he desired to make his request as a condition of the bill going to conference. On the contrary, I understood the Senator from Illinois to say he intended to withdraw the motion to concur, and that if he could be assured that from a parliamentary standpoint he had a right to offer the motion to instruct the conferees he intended to do so. Am I correct in my statement?

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina is correct. All I asked in connection with withdrawing the motion to concur generally in the amendment of the House—the House substitute—was that I be given the opportunity to make a motion; that the Senate be given the opportunity to pass upon a motion which I shall make after the adoption of the motion to appoint conferees; and, before their appointment, which I understand I have the parliamentary right to do, that the Senate shall not insist on section 11.

That is all I ask. I am not trying to do anything except what the majority of the Senate desire done. If it should happen that the Senate should vote for the motion to instruct the conferees not to insist on section 11, I asked the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] if he would be willing to serve on the committee under those instructions, and he said "No."

Mr. WHEELER. Why, of course, I should not.

Mr. DIETERICH. So I understood the Senator. I will stop the debate on my motion to concur generally now, and I will withdraw that motion if I may have the assurance that I shall be given the opportunity to make a motion—which I understand I have a parliamentary right to make—that the conferees be instructed not to insist on the Senate's position on section 11.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I may say that I understand the Senator from Illinois has propounded a parliamentary question as to whether he will have the right to make the motion he has suggested when that parliamentary situation shall arise. I ask the Senator from Illinois if that is not correct.

Mr. DIETERICH. That is correct. That is all I am asking for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the present occupant is in the chair at that time, he will recognize the Senator from Illinois to move that the conferees be instructed in accordance with the request of the Senator from Illinois, before the Chair appoints the conferees.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, then I ask the Senator from Illinois if he withdraws his motion.

Mr. DIETERICH. I withdraw my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] asks unanimous consent that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of expressing disapproval. I desire to know a little more about the parliamentary situation which exists since the Senator from Illinois has withdrawn his motion, in view of the fact that yesterday we all agreed that the motion of the Senator from Illinois had precedence over the motion of the Senator from Montana. With the withdrawal of the motion of the Senator from Illinois, will the vote be taken upon the motion of the Senator from Montana for a conference and the appointment of conferees? Is that the situation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that that is a correct statement of the situation. The Chair asked whether there was objection to the request of the Senator from Montana, which would do just as well as if it were made in the form of a motion.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana for unanimous consent that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIETERICH. I move that the conferees appointed on the pending measure be instructed not to insist upon section 11 as contained in the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in writing, so the clerk cannot state it. As the Chair understands it, the Senator from Illinois moves to instruct the conferees on the part of the Senate not to insist upon the Senate's position with reference to section 11 as contained in the Senate bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Illinois is equivalent to a recession on the part of the Senate on section 11. If the Senate conferees shall be instructed not to insist upon the provision, it will be taken by the conferees on the part of the body at the other end of the Capitol to mean that all they are required to do is to oppose the Senate's provision.

I wish to say that is such an extraordinary proceeding that it deserves to be clarified. Never in the history of the Senate during my service has the Senate, after passing upon a proposition, informed the other body that it was not in earnest about it; that it did not stand for it; that it would not insist upon it. I apprehend that no Senator wishes to establish the precedent which would exist if this motion should prevail.

I am speaking now without regard to the merits of the proposition of my friend the Senator from Illinois. I am speaking now in the name of the integrity and good faith of the Senate of the United States.

The issue involved in section 11 was fought out at great length in the Senate on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois. He lost on that proposition, and section 11 became the Senate's provision. How do Senators who just a moment ago impliedly questioned the good faith of the prospective conferees on this bill justify their course in asking the Senate to yield in advance of the conference?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The motion of the Senator from Illinois, if adopted, would eliminate section 11 from consideration at all?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Its adoption would be practically the same as if we accepted the House provision.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would be the same as if we reconsidered the bill and adopted an amendment striking out section 11.

Mr. BORAH. Why should not section 11 be permitted to receive conference consideration the same as any other provision of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the point. If this bill shall go to conference—and it will go to conference—section 11 should be considered together with all other provisions.

What happened was the proponents of the motion to concur found that they did not have sufficient votes to carry it, and then they sought to accomplish a more affirmative purpose by removing section 11 from the consideration of the conference. That is the practical effect of the motion of the Senator from Illinois. Do you imagine, Mr. President, that the House, which also had a serious contest over this subject, would for a moment consider section 11 if we should agree to the motion of the Senator from Illinois? It is a ridiculous proposition, unless it be assumed that the Senate wishes to reconsider its action and abandon the position it has taken.

Why not let this bill go to conference? As I said a few moments ago, why not have a free conference and why not give the conferees the chance to work out the best provision practicable in the light of the debate which has occurred?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator knows, of course, as every other Senator knows, that after the conferees have made a sincere effort to get together on any great controversial matter involved in a bill, and they find it impossible in conference to do that, they not only can but frequently do bring the proposition back and ask for the sense of the Senate with respect to their future attitude on that controversy?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; but the point I am making now is that there should be a good-faith conference. Let the whole subject matter in dispute go into the conference and let the representatives of the two Houses in conference have a fair chance to work out these propositions. If they shall have such a chance, and shall take advantage of it, probably they will improve section 11. They certainly will improve the corresponding section in the House bill before we are required to vote upon the conference report.

The point I wish to emphasize, in conclusion, is that this whole proceeding today has been extraordinary. Do Senators recall, long as they may have served here, a time when a bill involving as many changes in the Senate action as the House substitute involves was concurred in with not a single Senator knowing what is in the House bill? There has not been such an instance heretofore. Then, after debate had proceeded, and the proponents of the proposition found they were whipped and did not have the votes to carry it, they came in and asked for a more absurd action on the part of the Senate, namely, that the Senate surrender before the fight begins. It will not do.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it seems to me, in view of the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] which is now pending, that I ought again to call the attention of the Senate to the letter from Mr. Kennedy, Chairman of the Securities Commission, because there are many Senators now present who were not here when the letter was originally read. Among other things, he says:

> As you know, the bill which passed the Senate and the House proposes to give our Commission a variety of duties and confer, even apart from section 11, wide powers of discretion in the administration of this act. * * * These duties, while enormous, can be discharged, I believe, with reasonable efficiency, by a trained and competent personnel; but the burden cast upon us by section 11 of the House bill is simply staggering.

Section 11 is the section on which the Senator from Illinois wants the Senate to yield.

> I cannot be too vehement in urging upon you my feeling that this section, as now drawn, is most unfortunate. I urge my objection to this section upon two grounds. The first is simply the limitations on human capacity to achieve results. The second objection is based upon my conception of what is wisdom in government.
>
> The task with which the Commission is confronted under section 11 of the House bill is that of determining whether it is necessary in the public interest to limit the operations of a holding-company system to a single integrated public-utility system. If the Commission finds that such limitation is not necessary, it is then under a duty to require limitation to such number of integrated public-utility systems as it finds may be included in such holding-company system consistent with the public interest.
>
> The phrase "public interest" is not defined in the House bill. Thus this bill furnishes no effective standard to guide the Commission in the momentous decisions it must make as to which of the holding-company systems are to be broken up, and how such process is to be effected. I do not believe it is fair or practicable to expect any five men to shoulder the grave responsibility for deciding which of these systems are to be reorganized and into what size and character the ultimate groupings shall evolve.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I wish to know and what I have been trying to find out all morning is why any Senator objects to trying to correct that patent deficiency in the House provision. Manifestly, it has suggested itself to every lawyer who has considered it, and to some who are not lawyers. No definite standard is set up in the House provision for the government of the conduct of the Commission; so that it may constitute an unwarranted delegation or attempted delegation of legislative power and be held invalid.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Kennedy, in his letter, proceeds:

The administrative burden involved in the duties required under section 11 which will just be overwhelming, no matter what the appropriation, no matter the size or the technical equipment of the staff.

The second reason, and by far the most important one, is my strong conviction that it is not a wise policy to vest in any one group of men the tremendous responsibility involved in this grant of power. Certainly, this is true unless such a grant is hedged with precise and defined standards as set up by the Congress itself.

I have an appreciation of the great need in our modern life of flexible language in statutes, so that the administration of the law may be responsive to an ever-changing existence. Both bills wisely contain grants of discretionary power over the details of implementing the statute. This discretion is desirable in order to attain a practical and efficient administration. But, so far as the vital decisions as to the size and character of the holding-company systems of the future are concerned, which decisions will affect the interest of millions of people, investors and the consuming public alike, I do not believe that any Commission should be given unfettered discretion to decide matters of such transcendent importance.

It is also my opinion—

Then he goes on to discuss section 13.

So the chairman of the Commission that is going to administer this bill says it is impossible to administer it as it is phrased in the terms of the House substitute.

Mr. President, I venture the assertion that the Senator from Illinois and other Senators do not know what other provisions are in section 11 besides the specific one to which he has referred. Section 11, however, does not only provide for the so-called "death sentence", but it provides for numerous other things relating to the reorganization of the holding-company systems.

Section 11 of the House substitute bill departs radically from the President's policy; and that section as adopted by the Senate did not impose a "death sentence."

There is nothing in section 11 as adopted by the House—and I want to call this point to the attention of the Senate—which requires an equitable distribution of the voting rights among the security holders in a holding-company system. That was entirely eliminated from section 11 of the House bill. It does not go as far in that particular as the utility executives themselves suggested. The utility executives themselves, as a matter of fact, when they appeared before the Senate committee were more liberal in their viewpoint with reference to the bill than is the provision of the House amendment.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I think the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Montana are both laboring under a misapprehension as to what my motion was. My motion was not to accept the House amendment to section 11, but my motion was not to insist upon the Senate provision to section 11.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me that the effect of the Senator's motion would be that the House would simply stand pat and insist upon the provision it has inserted in the bill; and I would not blame it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senate refuses to insist upon its provision, there only remains the House provision, and technically there is nothing in dispute.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Illinois can readily see that the whole effect of his motion would be to surrender before we have begun to fight, assuming there is anyone here who wishes to sustain the position taken by the Senate.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield further to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I do not want to take up the time of the Senator from Montana, but I think I am capable of judging of the effect of my motion. I can see a good many things that might be discussed and might be changed and might be rectified in section 11 under my motion which could not be changed or rectified if I moved to accept the House amendment and the motion were agreed to. I do not think it takes a great stretch of the imagination to understand that particular position.

Mr. WHEELER. What the Senator from Illinois really objects to is having me serve on the conference committee. Let me say to the Senator——

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. Let me make my statement so that there may be no misunderstanding about this matter at all. I have acted in good faith with reference to this bill to carry out the administration's policy. If the Senate, or the Democratic Members of the Senate, do not want me on the conference committee, I have not any desire to be on it. Let me say further to the Senator, right now, that if he has any objection to my serving upon the conference committee, I will not serve upon it. Then he and the utilities can have the kind of bill they want.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. In reply to that statement, the Senator is putting something into the discussion that I have never for a moment suggested.

Mr. WHEELER. I am getting a little bit weary of——

Mr. DIETERICH. The Senator himself has announced his position. He announced his position that if the "death sentence" was eliminated from section 11 he would not serve. In other words, his mind is not open to try to come to a composition or compromise on this matter.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is entirely wrong. That is not what I have announced. I simply said I would not serve if the Senate of the United States wanted to stultify the members of the conference committee by sending them to the conference with the direction that they should yield on section 11 even before they had read the bill; that I, as one Member of the Senate, would not submit to a stultification of that kind by the Senator from Illinois or by anybody else.

I know what is back of these motions. I am getting weary, let me say to the Senator from Illinois, of all this harangue about my political philosophy and going back to the fact that I ran upon a ticket with "Bob" La Follette. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois and to other Members of the Senate that I never did anything of which I was more proud in my life. I went before the people of my State and said so, and they reelected me to the Senate on the Democratic ticket, and reelected me again by a majority of 73 percent of the entire votes of the State. Whether or not the Senator likes my political philosophy, the vast majority, the overwhelming majority of the people of my State like it, and I do not care what the Chicago democracy thinks of my democracy.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the debaters ought not to be permitted to descend to the level commonly occupied by mediocre personalities. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator mean mediocre level of personalities?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I said what I meant. There is no occasion for personal animadversions and for petty personal allusions.

I think there is no justification for the motion now pending. The Senate should vote it down, and do so emphatically. I do not think the Senator from Montana should take exception to anything the Senator from Illinois has said.

I hope we may settle this matter on the basis of sound legislation. It is not sound to do what the Senator from Illinois has moved we should do. It is not right for the Senate, after taking a position on this subject and after the two Houses have expressed their views on the legislation, when a conference is being created, to ask the Senate to tell its conferees that they cannot stand for the position which their body has taken. It is a very unusual proposal, one which I think has never before been injected in the proceedings of the Senate and which should not be injected except upon the theory that the Senate had discovered some new facts or circumstances which make it desirable to change its position.

Mr. President, this morning, while the Senator from Montana was speaking, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] raised the question that there was available no print of the House bill. I made the statement that there was a print available. Looking into the subject afterward I found that the only available print is a print of the bill which was reported to the House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. This print does not show the amendments which were agreed to in the House. Therefore I may say to the Senator from Minnesota that his suggestion was justified. I think there ought to be made available, if the debate is to continue, a print of the House bill showing the amendments adopted by the House.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I desire to explain further the various differences in section 11. I agree with the Senator from Arkansas that the idea of indulging in personalities in the discussion of the bill is out of place in the Senate; but, let me say, in justification of my position, that during the entire debate on the bill, both when it was before the Committee on Interstate Commerce and before the Senate, I attempted to keep the discussion free from personalities from start to finish. Notwithstanding that effort on my part, my political philosophy was repeatedly attacked on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from Illinois. I am going to wave that aside and discuss the facts with reference to the bill.

If we adopt the motion of the Senator from Illinois, we say to the Senate conferees that they must recede from the position of the Senate, and then where do we find ourselves?

There is nothing in section 11 of the House bill, I repeat, which provides for simplification of the corporate structures of holding systems and the removal of unnecessary complexities therein. It does not even go so far in this particular as the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], which was voted down in the Senate. It places no limitations on holding companies in the second, third, or even fourth degree.

Section 11 as adopted by the House permits holding companies in the first, second, third, or fourth, or fifth, or any other degree that the Commission of five men might say was in the public interest.

It will be remembered that the Senate adopted without even demanding a roll call the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] confining holding companies to those of the first degree.

I also wish to recall to members of the Banking and Currency Committee who are present the testimony given before that committee by Mr. Owen D. Young, in which he made reference to holding companies in more than the second degree or possibly the third degree.

The testimony which was given before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate was to the effect that Insull's corporations and his structure were such that nobody, not even Insull himself, could understand the set-up. The bill as it comes to us from the House would leave that set-up exactly as it is, except it would place the duty and burden upon the Commission to ferret out the facts and say that this particular holding company must go or that one may remain, or that all of them may be left as they are constituted at the present time.

There is nothing in section 11 of the House bill which requires an equitable distribution of voting rights among the security holders in a holding-company system. It does not go as far in this particular as the utility executives themselves suggested.

There are numerous other respects, in addition to the big question of effective simplification or readjustment of holding-company systems, in which section 11 of the House substitute bill has taken the teeth out of the realistic approach and solution to the holding-company problem.

Section 11 of the House bill not only does not require utility holding companies to get out of the myriad of speculative nonutility adventures in which they have been promiscuously active in the past, but it specifically hampers the Commission in dealing with these nonutility interests. The section expressly discards the principle that utility holding companies shall confine themselves to gas and electric service and not continue to mix into all manner of other businesses, and not continue to hold themselves and their securities out as representing a stable, regulated public-service industry, when in reality their resources are being thrown into and drawn upon by these speculative enterprises. The House has discarded this principle and adopted in its stead the principle that although there shall be a sort of attempt at regulation of the gas and electric activities of these companies, the Commission shall not, except in rare instances, interfere with the nonutility aspects of the business, no matter how far-flung they may be, and no matter how unrelated to the purported public service these companies render in the fields of gas and electricity. Instead of Congress adopting a definite policy with regard to these speculative, nonutility activities the House section shifts the entire burden to an administrative Commission, and then makes it practically impossible for the Commission to do anything about cleaning up the situation. I shall point out a little further on, in commenting on section 8, how the House bill also discards this policy even with regard to future acquisitions.

Let me say to the Senator from Illinois that if the Senate should recede from its position, and the other of the provisions of the Senate bill should be adopted, with section 11 eliminated, it would leave the bill in an absolutely unworkable condition.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. There is nothing in my motion which would prevent the conferees from defining "public interest" as the words are used in that section.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes, there is, because the intention and the practical effect of such a course would be that when the Senate conferees entered the conference the House conferees would insist upon the House amendment. They could not do anything else, as I see it, except to insist upon the amendment adopted by the House, because we would notify them in advance that the Senate conferees must recede from their position in the matter.

I doubt if the Senator from Illinois, or any other Member of the Senate, appreciates what was done in the House bill with reference to foreign holding companies.

With regard to foreign holdings, the situation is even worse. The House, in section 11 (b), has made it absolutely impossible for anything at all to be done to prevent a supposedly regulated domestic utility holding company from embarking upon or continuing their most romantic and speculative foreign ventures. The Senate bill proceeded on the theory that foreign utility enterprises should be exempted from the act except for the sale of their securities in interstate commerce, but that as a necessary condition to exemption, uncontrolled and speculative enterprises should not be mixed up with regulated utility holding companies in this country. The House bill completely exempts these foreign utility ventures, but leaves them undisturbed as a part of the supposedly regulated American utility holding companies. In other words, what it does is simply to say to an American company, which is using American money with which to build up a utility in this country, "You can take that money and go to Argentina, to China, or anywhere else, and you can mix up with your American company the highly speculative, unregulated public-utility companies in foreign countries, and unload them on the public of the United States without any regulation whatsoever." It makes the whole system so complicated that the American public, when they think they are buying American utilities, are in fact buying only partially American utility stocks, and are buying partially the highly speculative utility stocks of South American or other foreign countries.

The House entirely eliminated that provision. As a matter of fact, the representatives of the utilities themselves, when they appeared before our committee, did not contend or ask that we go as far as the House went in the adoption of that provision of section 11.

As I have said, the Senate bill adopts a very definite public policy on this question. It requires the segregation of foreign holdings so that the American investor, when he buys a security in what is held out to him as the stable, regulated gas and electric industry of this country, will get that, and will not get a hybrid security, the assets behind which are located partly in foreign countries and subjected to any number of risks about which he knows nothing and over which neither he nor his Government nor any State government has the slightest control. This policy has been categorically reversed by the House bill—not only in section 11 but in the House amendments to sections 3, 8, and 10, which I shall discuss in a moment. An absolutely clean bill of health is now given all holding companies in regard to any foreign ventures on which they have embarked in the past, or which they may cook up in the future. They may continue to pour their investors' and consumers' funds into any speculation outside of this country that they like.

Does the Senate wish us to accept that kind of an amendment? Does the Senate wish us simply to recede from the Senate's position with reference to section 11? If so, then the Senators who have stood upon this floor and said, "I am in favor of regulation but not of elimination", certainly could not be consistent.

Section 11 of the House bill leaves the matter of enforcing the Commission's orders for simplification to the wholly inadequate procedure of injunctive relief. There had been worked out in the Senate bill a thorough and effective procedure for placing the whole matter of reorganization and readjustments in the Federal courts of equity when court action was necessary or desired, with express provisions to enable the courts to carry out the process of simplification and reorganization with every possible safeguard for investors and all interested parties. This was a sound and essential provision of the Senate bill, and is in accord with the policy that these orders shall be enforced civilly in Federal equity courts, which shall have full and complete powers to meet all contingencies, and deal with every aspect of these complex holding-company reorganizations. I submit that the House section 11 is inadequate, not only from the point of view of protecting investors and the general public, but particularly from the point of view of the companies themselves, and the need to provide for them machinery which will enable them voluntarily to comply with the policy of the legislation.

Furthermore, the House substitute section no longer affords investors the necessary protection in the way of reorganization plans. The Senate bill was carefully patterned after the Interstate Commerce Act in this regard to assure that a plan must be made public in a hearing before the Commission, or else must have been proposed by the Commission, before it can be put into effect. These provisions have been deleted by the House, and there remain only the partially effective provisions for Commission regulation of proxies, but not of the reorganization plans themselves. The Senate provisions were fair and necessary provisions. They did not take jurisdiction over reorganization plans away from the courts. The House deleted those provisions entirely.

We all know how the investors have been robbed in the reorganizations of railroads which have been brought about in the past. We sought to protect investors in the public utilities as Congress sought to protect the investors in railroads, and the House deleted the provisions. They merely set up the prerequisite and additional check of having the plan passed upon and subjected to the spotlight of a public hearing, first by the Commission. Ultimate approval or disapproval remained in the courts. I cannot find any justification for this obvious weakening of the administrative procedure originally provided in section 11.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, I have now explained the differences in section 11, not only with reference to the so-called "death sentence", but with reference to the reorganization plan, with reference to the protection of investors who have invested in utilities securities. It is inconceivable to me that the Senate of the United States will direct its conferees to go into a conference with the House and notify the House in advance that we are going to break down all the safeguards we tried to put around investors and the general public in section 11 in the event and when the companies are reorganized. It is a well-known fact that some of the great holding-company systems are on the verge of reorganization at the present time. If no legislation at all shall be passed providing for their elimination, if none of the provisions of section 11 shall be retained in the bill, the investors who have invested in such companies are going to find themselves out on a limb, with no protection at all from the Government of the United States. We sought to put in this bill a protection, not only when the companies are reorganized under section 11, but when they are reorganized by reason of their own financial difficulties.

Do Senators who have been talking about protecting the widows and orphans, and about protecting the investors in these companies, wish to see those people left at the mercy of the heads of holding companies who have exploited them and robbed them in the past? Does the Senate wish to turn over the investors again to their tender mercies?

I am sure the Senator from Illinois has not read the changes in section 11, because, if he had done so, it is inconceivable to me that he would stand on the floor of the Senate and ask that the Senate adopt the House amendment to section 11, particularly in view of the fact that the Chairman of the Securities Commission himself says it is an impossibility for the Commission to work out the matter in a satisfactory way.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it happened to be my lot to be chairman of the committee 10 or 12 years ago to which was referred the so-called "Muscle Shoals" legislation. As a result of my study of that question, running over a great many years, I have reached some definite conclusions in regard to holding companies. I do not want to be understood as criticizing in any way, even indirectly, the ideas of any other Senator who may have reached a different conclusion, or who may not have studied the subject for the same length of time. So that what I shall say, although I want to say it plainly, reveals only my own personal ideas, reached after what I believe has been an unbiased, candid, unprejudiced investigation and consideration of the objects soughts to be attained and the objects which have been attained by holding companies.

In my humble judgment, there is no place in our civilization for the holding company, unless we except some holding companies in the first degree. Not all holding companies, even in the first degree, are justifiable, but there is, in my opinion, no justification whatever for a holding company beyond the first degree.

Holding companies were conceived in sin, they have been managed in total disregard of the public good, and of the interests of honest consumers of electricity and honest investors. There is no public service they can render. They are parasites upon our civilization.

Even though we concede, as I will concede for the argument's sake, that a holding company could be organized which would do nothing wrong, still the same things they do could be better done and more efficiently accomplished and with a more complete knowledge on the part of the investing public if the holding-company machine were eliminated.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] the other day in the discussion of the bill said that he would as soon think of regulating a den of rattlesnakes as to attempt to regulate holding companies. Once upon a time, Mr. President, there was in the vicinity of a village a den of rattlesnakes which at various times bit some of the inhabitants and caused the death of a few of them, until there was a feeling in the village that something should be done. A meeting of the inhabitants was called to discuss what should be done with the rattlesnakes. Some of the people at the meeting said, "Let us kill them. Let us exterminate them. They perform no useful service." But other members of the community said, "Oh, no; don't kill them. They kill mice; they kill vermin of various kinds. They are a help to agriculture. Let us regulate them." After discussing the subject a good while, they decided that they would regulate the rattlesnakes. So they put up a sign at the edge of the rattlesnake den which read: "It shall be unlawful for any rattlesnake to bite any human being more than 150 years old." [Laughter.] Thus they regulated them. They permitted them to exist.

Here come the holding companies, with their palms covered with pennies which have been stolen from God's poor, which in the aggregate amount to millions of dollars, and they say, "Regulate us. Regulate us. We have been destroying the honest investors. We have been robbing the honest consumers; we did it illegally; but we want you to regulate us now. We want to rob people according to law. We want to steal according to the statute. Regulate us. Regulate us, because it is possible there may exist somewhere a holding company which for a day may not be guilty of some of the evils which can be ascribed to them generally. Regulate us", they say; "we are going to be good because hereafter we are going to sin according to law."

"Regulate us," says Insull from Chicago. "I have robbed the people by the millions. I have robbed the consumers by the millions. But a Chicago jury said I was not guilty, when all the world knew that I was. But now I am going to rob people according to law."

They say, "Save these holding companies. Let us now continue our simple course according to statute. Regulate us. Regulate us."

I think the Senator from Alabama was right. There is no reason why a holding company, with the exception I have noted, should exist anywhere, either in the electric field or in any other field. The holding company exists because it enables dishonest men to charge rates for electricity and to conceal their sins by a multitude of corporations, one built on the other, pyramids of corporations, all to no use except to deceive honest people.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President, that when we meet this contingency and do not solve the question by the elimination of holding companies, we are not doing our duty, a duty we owe to millions of consumers of electricity and to other millions of honest investors.

Holding companies have robbed more widows and orphans than could be enumerated in a week. Yet they are calling upon us in the name of widows and orphans to save investors. The bill provides that every honest dollar in every corporation shall be saved, but that we shall put up a sign which will say, "We will not permit this to continue in the future. We will outlaw the holding company."

On the path they have traveled they have left misery and suffering, burdens put upon innocent people, burdens which the people themselves cannot see or understand because of great pyramids of corporations which always becloud the issue.

There is no man who at this time or at any time can give a reason for the existence of the holding company, beyond those I have excepted. I believe that to be true. Perhaps I ought not to state it as an absolute fact, because I base my assertion upon my own study, upon my own word, upon my own investigation, made after many years of hard labor and work, and I have never as yet found one such company which had any honest excuse for existence beyond the first degree.

There is no reason why they should be given an extension of life and be placed under regulation which would permit them to continue to rob and to cheat, to steal and to deceive the people whose hard-won earnings they filch into their own itching palms.

We have had the evidence piled up mountain high from time to time showing their sins and their corruption. Do we want more evidence? Do we want to go further and permit them to continue in their illegal and unmerciful course?

Who is going to pay for the propaganda, which cost them millions of dollars, to defeat this very section 11? The student who is studying his lessons by the light of an electric light, the washerwoman who is using electricity to earn her bread, to keep her children in school, and perhaps pay off the mortgage on her home—they are going to pay for it in pennies. Their children are going to pay for it, unless we now stop the nefarious, illegal practice.

Do we wish to pass to our children this burden which has been upon our shoulders during all these years? Do we now wish to say to them that these great holding companies are so powerful and rich that they can buy newspapers, they can corrupt professors in the colleges, they can creep secretly into the schools and poison the minds of the little children, they can get into the lodges, they can go all over the country with their deceptive practices? Are we going to permit such a condition longer to exist in a free country? Are we going to hesitate now, when it is within our power to stop this unholy tribute which dishonest men are levying upon God's poor? Has not the time come when we should cease to hesitate? Has not the time come when our duty is plainly written upon the canopy of heaven, that no longer will a suffering people be permitted to be held down in practical bondage by one of the greatest trusts ever put together by the mind of man?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH].

Mr. DIETERICH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	La Follette	Robinson
Austin	Copeland	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Davis	Lonergan	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Dieterich	McGill	Sheppard
Barbour	Donahey	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Duffy	McNary	Smith
Bilbo	Fletcher	Maloney	Steiwer
Black	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Borah	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Brown	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Bulkley	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Bulow	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Burke	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Hastings	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Hayden	Overton	White
Carey	Holt	Pittman
Chavez	Johnson	Pope
Clark	Keyes	Radcliffe

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH].

Mr. HOLT rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] wishes to take the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, with the approval of both the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Illinois, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I may be permitted to preface it with a brief statement.

Earlier in the day, when the motion to concur in the House amendments was pending, a number of Senators said they had committee and departmental engagements which they were compelled to meet; and it was then thought that in all probability the vote pertaining to this question would not be reached today. In addition to that, a number of other Senators are absent who wish to be here when the vote shall be taken.

I therefore, with the approval, as I have said, of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote at not later than 1 o'clock tomorrow on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am sorry the proposal of the Senator from Arkansas was not made prior to the quorum call. There are some Senators who would like to be present before action is taken. Therefore, I suggest that the Senator make his proposal after a quorum call, as provided in the Senate rules. Personally I have no objection, but I desire a full attendance when the matter is considered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the rule does not require a roll call; but, if the Senator from Oregon wishes it, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to have a quorum call.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas was that the Senate vote on my motion at 1 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. DIETERICH. Let there be included in the unanimous-consent request a provision that there shall be a roll call on the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I will submit the request again when the quorum call shall have been completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	La Follette	Robinson
Austin	Copeland	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Davis	Lonergan	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Dieterich	McGill	Sheppard
Barbour	Donahey	McKellar	Shipstead
Barkley	Duffy	McNary	Smith
Bilbo	Fletcher	Maloney	Steiwer
Black	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Borah	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Brown	Glass	Murphy	Truman
Bulkley	Gore	Murray	Tydings
Bulow	Guffey	Neely	Vandenberg
Burke	Hale	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Hastings	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Hatch	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Caraway	Hayden	Overton	White
Carey	Holt	Pittman
Chavez	Johnson	Pope
Clark	Keyes	Radcliffe

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from West Virginia will yield for that purpose, I will submit a slightly modified request for unanimous consent, the modification being suggested in order to meet the necessities of certain Senators. I ask unanimous consent that at 2 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate shall proceed to vote without further debate on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that we comply with the usual form of a limitation, say, of 10 minutes' debate by any Senator after 1 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to modifying the request so as to limit debate.

Mr. McNARY. I think that would prove more satisfactory. Some Senator may want to discuss the matter briefly, and I think with such a limitation we would reach an ultimate vote just as quickly as if a definite time were provided.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] is anxious to have a definite time fixed for the vote, and I hope the Senator from Oregon will not object to it. It is a simple matter, a single proposition, as the Senator will understand.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest, Mr. President, the modification that after 1 o'clock debate be limited to 10 minutes, and that the vote be taken at 2 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. Mr. President, I modify my request so that after the hour of 1 o'clock no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on the motion, and that at the hour of 2 o'clock the vote shall be taken on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has heard the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Arkansas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, certainly, as well as any other Member of this body, I realize that my procedure this afternoon is quite unusual in that a new Senator is not supposed, according to precedent, to speak so soon after becoming a Member, but I think this is quite an unusual situation. If I had to select any particular piece of legislation of the measures which I have noticed being considered by the United States Senate as the one that I was particularly interested in, it would be the utility holding-company bill. I am speaking because the State of West Virginia has been represented as being favorable to the elimination of the so-called "death sentence" provision of the bill. I disagree with that contention, and believe that my State is emphatically behind the President of the United States in his desire to have the bill enacted in the form in which it was passed by the Senate.

For 4 years I have investigated the utilities of the State of West Virginia, and let me say that I found no more ruthless, no more un-American, no more undemocratic group to deal with than the utilities. They are here today saying that they want regulation. They do not want regulation; they do not want elimination; they want the right to escape from any regulation or from elimination. They have for years and years controlled public officials, and now want to have a little more time in order that they may go into the elections and continue to control public officials.

I wish, in a few moments, to explain what the utility holding companies have done to my State. I need not go into the facts as to what the utilities have done throughout the United States; that phase has already been presented on the floor of this House; but what has been done to the State of West Virginia is something that is a record, in my opinion, unparalleled in the United States. I believe that utility holding companies have cost the people of West Virginia millions upon millions of dollars.

There are only two reasons for holding companies and there are only two ways whereby a holding company can make money. One is from the investor and the other is from the ratepayer. According to the records, the value of the utility stocks previous to 1929 was $19,000,000,000. Their value had declined to $3,000,000,000 in 1933. Taking the average per capita loss in the United States of America and applying it to West Virginia we find that the people of that State alone lost one-fourth of a billion dollars on so-called "investments in utilities." The amount thus lost to the investors of the State of West Virginia represents more than the entire deposits in every single State and National bank in the State. Yet it is said, "We do not want to bother them because we will hurt widows and orphans."

Since I have been in Washington I have noticed the cries of the "widows and orphans." The so-called "defenders of the widows and orphans" have cried upon my shoulder; and they nearly have made it necessary for a Member of the United States Senate to wear raincoats because of the crocodile tears they have shed about the "dear widows and orphans." The widows and orphans for whom they probably speak are the widows and orphans of the financiers who jumped out of the Wall Street buildings in 1929. Certainly their love for widows and orphans has not been evidenced by the loss of $16,000,000,000 in the value of utilities securities they themselves sold throughout the United States, in my State alone amounting to one-quarter of a billion dollars, which is never to return, nor is the purchasing power represented by such a sum, of which the people there have been deprived.

Let me show what utility holding companies have done, not only to the investor but as well to the ratepayer, in the State of West Virginia. I may cite the United Fuel Gas Co., which is a subsidiary of the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation. In 1926 they paid no executive management fees whatever. In the following year, 1927, they paid the American Gas & Electric Corporation $213,753.90, and the following year paid them $307,185.65.

It may be asked what has that done to the people of West Virginia? It has given that group sixty-one one-hundredths of 1 cent extra profit on every single thousand cubic feet of gas sold in that State. It is due to the fact that United Fuel Gas Co. has a particular service contract with the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation to pay them 2 percent on the entire business. In the 4 years between 1927 and 1930 they paid to the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation $977,595.32. Where did that go? Philip Gossler, president of the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, received $251,335 salary for 1 year alone; F. W. Crawford, vice president, received $112,315 for 1 year's salary. Who paid that? On sales between the affiliated companies of the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation the ratepayers contributed to these great holding companies $514,140.48 on intercompany transactions. In other words, we are not paying the service fee on just the one cost of gas sold, or the one cost of electricity sold; but, since one company sells to another, that company sells to a third, the third company sells to a fourth, and the fourth in turn sells to a fifth, we are in some instances paying 8 and 10 percent cost instead of paying 2 percent on that particular item.

For instance, one gas company sold to another gas company, and that sold to another gas company to increase the price of gas sixty-four one-hundredths of 1 cent on that particular affiliated contract alone. On the management fees of that particular corporation the people of my State contributed $706,683 to a holding company.

It is said it does not cost anything. Who paid that? Let me cite a few engineering and supervision fees paid by companies operating in the State of West Virginia to top holding companies and other subsidiary holding companies. The Wheeling Electric Co., a part of the American Gas & Electric system, paid $260,281.35 particular fees in 1 year. The Kentucky & West Virginia Power Co. paid $777,621.82; the Appalachian Electric Power Co., now proclaiming a great love for the people of the United States, paid $2,457,374.95 in 1 year for supervision and management fees alone. The West Virginia Water & Electric Co. paid $61,597, and on the New River development, a development of a natural resource in our State, there was paid management fees alone amounting to $198,564. Who paid those fees?

Not only did they get into the management and supervision fee field, but they collected a tremendous amount in interest. The interest paid the Columbia Gas & Electric Co., operating in the State of West Virginia in 1927, amounted to $427,000, and in 1930 reached a total of $1,259,414. The interest paid the top holding company in my State took away from my people $3,801,214. The Byllesby management collected in 10 years $3,359,884 in legal fees, which netted them $2,078,000 profit. Yet they say it does not make any difference about these holding companies. Let me cite a few write-ups.

The Appalachian Power Co., whose lobbyists are in the galleries of this body at this moment, have stated that it is their desire to protect the people, but in 1 day, between March 31, 1926, and April 1, 1926, they wrote up their stock $66,418,192.80.

With a value of $98,500,000 the United Fuel Gas Co. had a write-up amounting to $41,042,452.

The Wheeling Electric Co. wrote up $901,518, and the Manufacturers Light & Heat Co. wrote up $13,779,297. Why? Oh, they love the widows and orphans of the State of West Virginia as shown in that write-up of stocks for the sale of their securities and the consumers who were widows in order that they might go before the public service commission and tell how much money they were not making in the State of West Virginia.

Oh, they love the investor of the State of West Virginia! In 1929 many an investor and many a neighbor of mine bought American Gas & Electric stock at $203 which on March 4, 1933, was worth but $3.75. Oh, they loved the investor then!

The American Waterworks & Electric Co., which furnishes electricity to my home city, sold its stock in 1929 at $186.25. Today that same stock is worth $1.35. Oh, again they loved the widows and orphans of the State of West Virginia.

Associated Gas & Electric stock, which company operated in my State, was valued in 1929 at $71.15, and declined to $1.10.

The Columbia Gas & Electric Co. stock was worth $129 in 1929 and in 1933 it was worth but $4.35.

The stock of the Middle West Utilities Co., which was selling for $49.90 in 1929, is worth today—God only knows what. It is not even worth the paper it is written on. Sam Insull and his group still love the widows and orphans of the State of West Virginia. Henry Doherty loved the widows and orphans of the State when his employees went in there and sold Cities Service stock. They had a great regard for the property rights of my people when they told them to invest in Cities Service stock because it was going up. "Invest in Middle West utilities! It is going up."

All this is due to the fact that they have tried to control the legislative body of my home State. They have controlled many public officials in my home State. In the State Senate of the State of West Virginia, in a membership of 30 we found 13 of them receiving directly or indirectly orders from the public-utility companies of that State—13 out of 30. They believe in the Constitution—they believe in freedom and independence. All they want now is the same thing they have gotten in West Virginia and other States, a continuation of their ability to dodge regulation. The holding company is nothing more than a means by which State regulation is escaped, Federal regulation is dodged, the investor is skinned, and the consumer is gouged. That is what the holding company is. It is nothing more than a means by which all the people in the United States pay a particular tribute to a few people.

Let me cite a few more facts with reference to that matter. Is there any particular need for a holding company such as those mentioned in the State of West Virginia?

We had a little light and power company in the city of East Rainelle, W. Va. It is known as the East Rainelle Light & Power Co. The people think they are paying money to that company, but we find that light and power company is owned by the Virginia Public Service Co. The Virginia Public Service Co. is controlled by the Seaboard Public Service Co. The Seaboard Public Service Co. is controlled by the National Public Service Corporation. The National Public Service Corporation is controlled by the National Electric Power Co. The National Electric Power Co. is owned by the Middle West Utilities Co. How on earth can we or the regulatory Commission find out where that money is going and how it is being spent?

Representatives of holding companies came before a committee when I introduced a bill in the West Virginia Legislature to regulate holding companies. Some of the same lobbyists who are hearing my voice now, and some of the same lobbyists who appeared before the different committees of the Congress, came before the West Virginia legislative committee and said, "It is impossible for the State of West Virginia to regulate holding companies. They are interstate and cannot be regulated."

Now they come to the United States Senate and the House of Representatives saying that holding companies are not interstate but intrastate and should go back under State regulation. In other words, no one knows where they belong. In 1933 and 1934 they said it was impossible to regulate holding companies, because it was a matter for the Federal Government to do. When I came to the United States Senate I heard the same men say it was an impossibility for the Federal Government to regulate holding companies; that it was a matter for State regulation. In other words, it is the old shell game to find out how we can regulate them as they shift around from place to place.

Let me cite another instance: I find that Thomas B. Gregory, a director of the Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation, is a director in 74 different corporations operating within and without my State. How can this be justified? Holding companies must be eliminated. There is no place for a holding company in the American economic system. It is an economic waste, a cancerous growth upon the American economic system. In other words, it sucks the lifeblood out of our economic system.

I realize the particular propaganda which has been spread over the country and over the State of West Virginia to the effect that we are destroying the investor. This bill does not destroy the investor. It protects the investor. To which would you rather go, Mr. President, to the Government of the United States or to Sam Insull and his group, who have shown how much they care for the investor? It is a question of whether we shall return to them that particular power of which they should be shorn. Their battle here, as I view it, is nothing more than an effort for delay in order that they may escape regulation. They realize that the Securities Exchange Commission or no commission can regulate a particular group that is so powerful that it intertwines through industrial corporations, banks, and newspapers.

Oh, they say, the people of West Virginia must be protected. They have entered our schools. I hold in my hand a little pamphlet put out by the public utilities of the State of West Virginia, telling about the great value of utilities. This pamphlet has been circulated in the schools of my home State telling the people and the boys and girls how the gas and electric companies help the people of that State. They love my people so well that we are paying annual tributes in rates alone in the State of West Virginia of $3,500,000 overcharge.

